"Yes. For the raffle. I'm the school teacher. Selina Peake."

He nodded. "I saw you in church Sunday."

"You did! I didn't think you. . . . Did you?"

"Wait here. I'll come back. Wait here."

He took the shoe box. She waited. He plowed his way through the crowd like a Juggernaut, reached Adam Ooms' platform and placed the box inconspicuously next a colossal hamper that was one of a dozen grouped awaiting Adam's attention. When he had made his way back to Selina he again said, "Wait," and plunged down the wooden stairway. Selina waited. She had ceased to feel distressed at her inability to find the Pools in the crowd, a-tiptoe though she was. When presently he came back he had in his hand an empty wooden soap box. This he up-ended in the doorway just behind the crowd stationed there. Selina mounted it; found her head a little above the level of his. She could survey the room from end to end. There were the Pools. She waved to Maartje; smiled at Roelf. He made as though to come toward her; did come part way, and was restrained by Maartje clutching at his coat tail.

Adam Ooms' gavel (a wooden potato masher) crashed for silence. "Ladies!" (Crash) "And gents!" (Crash)! "Gents! Look what basket we've got here!"

Look indeed. A great hamper, grown so plethoric that it could no longer wear its cover. Its contents bulked into a mound smoothly covered with a fine white cloth whose glistening surface proclaimed it damask. A Himalaya among hampers. You knew that under that snowy crust lay gold that was fowl done crisply, succulently; emeralds in the form of gherkins; rubies that melted into strawberry preserves; cakes frosted like diamonds; to say nothing of such semi-precious jewels as potato salad; cheeses; sour cream to be spread on rye bread and butter; coffee cakes; crullers.

Crash! "The Widow Paarlenberg's basket, ladies—and gents; The Widow Paarlenberg! I don't know what's in it. You don't know what's in it. We don't have to know what's in it. Who has eaten Widow Paarlenberg's chicken once don't have to know. Who has eaten Widow Paarlenberg's cake once don't have to know. What am I bid on Widow Paarlenberg's basket! What am I bid! Whatmlbidwhatmlbidwhatmlbid!" (Crash)!

The widow herself, very handsome in black silk, her gold neck chain rising and falling richly with the little flurry that now agitated her broad bosom, was seated in a chair against the wall not five feet from the auctioneer's stand. She bridled now, blushed, cast down her eyes, cast up her eyes, succeeded in looking as unconscious as a complaisant Turkish slave girl on the block.

Adam Ooms' glance swept the hall until it reached the tall figure towering in the doorway—reached it, and rested there. His gimlet eyes seemed to bore their way into Pervus DeJong's steady stare. He raised his right arm aloft, brandishing the potato masher. The whole room fixed its gaze on the bloud head in the doorway. "Speak up! Young men of High Prairie! Heh, you, Pervus DeJong! Whatmlbidwhatmlbidwhatmlbid!"

"Fifty cents!" The bid came from Gerrit Pon at the other end of the hall. A dashing offer, as a start, in this district where one dollar often represented the profits on a whole load of market truck brought to the city.

Crash! went the potato masher. "Fifty cents I'm bid. Who'll make it seventy-five? Who'll make it seventy-five?"

"Sixty!" Johannes Ambuul, a widower, his age more than the sum of his bid.

"Seventy!" Gerrit Pon.

Adam Ooms whispered it—hissed it. "S-s-seventy. Ladies and gents, I wouldn't repeat out loud such a figger I would be ashamed. Look at this basket, gents, and then you can say . . . s-s-seventy!"

"Seventy-five!" the cautious Ambuul.

Scarlet, flooding her face, belied the widow's outward air of composure. Pervus DeJong, standing beside Selina, viewed the proceedings with an air of detachment. High Prairie was looking at him expectantly, openly. The widow bit her red lip, tossed her head. Pervus DeJong returned the auctioneer's meaning smirk with the mild gaze of a disinterested outsider.

"Gents!" Adam Ooms' voice took on a tearful note—the tone of one who is more hurt than angry. "Gents!" Slowly, with infinite reverence, he lifted one corner of the damask cloth that concealed the hamper's contents—lifted it and peered within as at a treasure. At what he saw there he started back dramatically, at once rapturous, despairing, amazed. He rolled his eyes. He smacked his lips. He rubbed his stomach. The sort of dumb show that, since the days of the Greek drama, has been used to denote gastronomic delight.

"Eighty!" was wrenched suddenly from Goris Von Vuuren, the nineteen-year-old fat and gluttonous son of a prosperous New Hinarlem farmer.

Adam Ooms rubbed brisk palms together. "Now then! A dollar! A dollar! It's an insult to offer a basket to make it less than a dollar." He leaned far forward over his improvised pulpit. "Did I hear you say a dollar, Pervus DeJonz?" DeJong stirred, immovable, unabashed. "Eighty-eighty-eighty-eighty —gents! I'm going to tell you something. I'm going to whisper a secret." His lean face veined with wrathfulness. "Gents. Listen. It isn't chicken in this beautiful basket. It isn't chicken. It's"—a dramatic pause—"It's roast duck!" He swayed back, mopped his brow with his red handkerchief, held one hand high in the air. His last card.

"Eighty-five!" groaned the fat Goris Von Vuuren.

"Eighty-five! Eighty-five! Eighty-fiveeightyfiveeightyfive eighty - five! Gents! Gen-tle-men! Eighty-five once! Eighty-five—twice!" (Crash)! "Gone to Goris Von Vuuren for eighty-five."

A sigh went up from the assemblage; a sigh that was the wind before the storm. There followed a tornado of talk. It crackled and thundered. The rich Widow Paarlenberg would have to eat her supper with Von Vuuren's boy, the great thick Goris. And there in the doorway, talking to teacher as if they had known each other for years, was Pervus DeJong with his money in his pocket. It was as good as a play.

Adam Ooms was angry. His lean, fox-like face became pinched with spite. He prided himself on his antics as auctioneer; and his chef d'oeuvre had brought a meager eighty-five cents, besides doubtless winning him the enmity of that profitable store customer, the Widow Paarlenberg. Goris Von Vuuren came forward to claim his prize amidst shouting, clapping, laughter. The great hamper was handed down to him.

Adam Ooms scuffled about among the many baskets at his feet. His nostrils looked pinched and his skinny hands shook a little as he searched for one small object.

When he stood upright once more he was smiling. His little eyes gleamed. His wooden scepter pounded for silence. High in one hand, balanced daintily on his finger tips, he held Selina's little white shoe box, with its red ribbon binding it, and the plume of evergreen stuck in the ribbon. Affecting great solicitude he brought it down then to read the name written on it; held it aloft again, smirking.

He said nothing. Grinning, he held it high. He turned his body at the waist from side to side, so that all might see. The eyes of those before him still held a mental picture of the huge hamper, food-packed, that had just been handed down. The contrast was too absurd, too cruel. A ripple of laughter swept the room; rose; swelled to a roar. Adam Ooms waited with a nice sense of the dramatic until the laughter had reached its height, then held up a hand for silence. A great scraping "Ahem!" as he cleared his throat threatened to send the crowd off again.

"Ladies—and gents! Here's a dainty little tidbit. Here's something not only for the inner man, but a feast for the eye. Well, boys, if the last lot was too much for you this lot ought to be just about right. If the food ain't quite enough for you, you can tie the ribbon in the lady's hair and put the posy in your buttonhole and there you are. There you are! What's more, the lady herself goes with it. You don't get a country girl with this here box, gents. A city girl, you can tell by looking at it, just. And who is she? Who did up this dainty little box just big enough for two? He inspected it again, solemnly, and added, as an afterthought, "If you ain't feeling specially hungry. Who?—" He looked about, apishly.

Who buys Selina's dainty little luncheon box? And what is to be the result?

A Concession

"A young woman of our family returning home from a trip brought a gift for each of her mother's servants," writes a contributor. "For the laundress she had a silk blouse of a bright shade. 'That won't do for Hannah,' her mother said; 'her husband died and she is in mourning.'

"Later in the day she showed Hannah the present she had intended for her and said she was sorry for the mistake, adding: 'I will give the blouse to Lizzie and get you something else.'

"Hannah looked admiringly at the pretty garment and then said: 'Don't you give that blouse to no Lizzie, Miss Annabelle, 'cause next month I'se gwine outa mourning from de 'mains up.'"—Boston Transcript.

Adorning the Knitted Frock; Lovely Gowns for Matrons

CROSS the palm of the itinerant fortune-teller with a piece of silver, and lo! our past, present and future will be revealed. Knitted outerwear fashions are like that this season—responsive to the magic touch of silver. The stylist trims our sweaters and knitted two-piece suits with silver buttons and gilded trappings and behold! a revelation of entrancing modes. To the woman of smart fashion, silver and gold trimmings, as applied to things knitted, present a most interesting innovation.

All sorts of intriguing ideas are expressed with gilded leather as a medium for motifs, bandings, collars, cuffs and belts on the latest knitwear modes. Illustrative of this new style trend is the exquisite sports frock here pictured. It is knitted of mist-blue rayon, its drop-stitch contributing a note of interest. There is a bordering of silver with bright gilded buttons. Surely a sports costume which will make appeal to every queen of fashion!

Added to its comfort-giving qualities, is the beauty of the coloring expressed in knitted rayon or fiber silk as you may choose to call it. The new knitted rayon suits, which are the last word in fashion, abound in lovely flower shades, such as rose, cyclamen, flax.

Then too, the prediction that lacy stitch will feature throughout summer knitted outerwear fashions becomes realization in the latest rayon-knit jumper suits. If also adds to the prestige of the newer knitted frocks, that they are two-piece, for without a doubt the skirt with overblouse leads in point of style importance. The blouse may be long-sleeved and high-necked, or a matching scarf, for all these points of fashion are emphasized in the newer knitted modes.

It is said Paris couturiers have a penchant for designing apparel for matrons, at any rate the numbers of hats, wraps and gowns they present, created to suit matrons (both young and older) seem to indicate a preference that way. But, of course, one must consider that the main demands on them come from matrons and it is most important to please them. Whatever the reasons, the modes of the French reach their climax in apparel for women who have left girlhood behind them. One reason is that nothing is too subtle, too sophisticated or too splendid to help in contributing to the charm of women who have attained poise.

A fine example of French art in matrons' gowns appears in the sketch shown above. It has been created with special reference to June weddings, as suitable for the matron of honor, among the bride's attendants, or to the mother of the bride or groom. It is of lace and georgette and very adaptable—suited to young and to older matrons. It has several marks of the present season to distinguish it and is a beautiful exponent of current modes, notably in the uneven hemline, the combination of lace and georgette, the jabot-panels at each side of the skirt joined to the georgette with a beading of small beads. A deep yoke in the bodice has a "V" shaped neck opening and the sleeves are very short. Laces dyed to match are used with georgette in frocks of this kind, and blond lace is used with contrasting colors. The hat is depended upon to suit these soft and elegant afternoon gowns to the years of the wearer. Younger women wear the wide-brimmed models, often with flower trimming, but the older matrons select smart, small shapes. The hat pictured is of hair braid with handsome monture of ostrich feathers at one side which adds greatly to its beauty.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

THE ROSE

Spring had come and summer was actually here at last.

Edie Would Water Her Flowers.

Edie was very busy these days. There was her garden. She had planted it in the spring, but she was still planting.

In the big garden some of the flowers were growing too close together and Edie transplanted them into her own garden.

Her garden was at the end of the big garden. It was sunny there and the ground was not very good. But Edie had wonderful luck with her garden.

The morning-glories were growing up the sticks and along the string right to the latticework the way Edie had hoped they would grow.

And they were coming out, more each day, when she went down in the mornings to see her garden.

It was not very sunny but somehow the morning-glories seemed to catch what little sun they could and come out just as brightly as though they had had a great deal more.

In the very shady part Edie had planted her ferns. They were growing beautifully. She had gone out in the woods with a trowel and a big basket early in the spring when the ferns were young.

She had made a number of trips as she wanted to bring back quite a good deal of the rich, soft earth from the woods. She had kept her ferns well watered and they looked so pretty and green.

She had some nasturtiums and some pansies and geraniums and forget-me-nots.

Then she had been given one little rosebush for her birthday. It was only a little rosebush and it never seemed to have more than one rose at a time.

But just as soon as the one rose looked ready to drop Edie always noticed that another bud would soon be opening to take its place.

The rosebush seemed trying so hard to do its best for the garden.

Between the flower bed and the "fernery," as Edie called the part where the ferns grew, she put a path of stepping stones. Some of the stones were simply big, smooth, nice-looking stones.

Others were very interesting stones with fans and queer markings upon them.

Every morning Edie weeded her garden. She wished the weeds would grow faster. She had an old basket in which to put the weeds but she weeded so regularly that the weeds never got much chance to grow.

Every evening, right after supper, Edie would water her flowers, using the little red watering pot which had been given to her at the same time she had been given the rosebush.

It was late one evening just as she was going to bed that she heard her father say to her mother:

"I had a letter from Tom Ricks this morning. You know we played together when we were children, and he says he is coming around these parts so that he can run over here some time tomorrow."

"You must bring him to supper tomorrow night," her mother said. "How much I've heard of him! How glad you will be to see him."

"Yes, it will seem pretty nice to see Tom. They said Tom and I had the hardest feet of any children! We used to live in our bare feet when the summer came." Her father went on talking of childhood times.

She Picked It.

"I wish there would be something special I could do for him," he said finally.

"Your delight at seeing him will mean a great deal. We don't all remember our childhood friends as you've remembered Tom," her mother replied.

"That was all Edie heard. She went to bed then. But she thought and thought.

It was just at the height of its glory. And she picked it. Not only did she pick it but she picked it so that the bud was picked, too, and when they went in for supper that next evening it was standing in water before the place of her father's friend.

"I don't believe she'll ever forget her friends, either," her mother said to her father later, "when she will even pick her rose and its bud for a friends of yours, my dear."

BANKERS ATTACK BANKING LAWS

MAKE STRONG PLEA FOR REMOVAL OF POLITICS FROM LAWS OF STATE AFFECTING BANKS

Mobile.—Attacks against the existing state banking laws and the plea to remove them from political influence characterized the second session of the convention of the Alabama Bankers' Association in the auditorium of the Battle House. The plea was especially for a different system for the election of the superintendent of the state banking board and the board itself so that that body could not be politically controlled.

The chairman of each of the four groups of the association read resolutions for the changing of the banking laws when they read their annual report to the session. They were F. A. Bloodworth, of Albany, Group No. 1; W. S. Childers, Jasper, Group No. 2; John H. Drakeford, Tuskegee, Group No. 3; and J. D. Wright, Evergreen, Group No. 4. Judge Thomas C. McClellan, of Birmingham, head of the legal department of the association, also pleaded for the removal of politics from the state banking laws and for a tightening up of the defensive measures against the activities of fraudulent check writers.

Addresses were made by Major General William L. Sibert, chairman of the state docks commission; E. S. Jouett, vice president, of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, and Thomas C. McLeod, governor of South Carolina.

They spoke upon widely diversified topics, although each topic they intimately related to the banking industry and stressed the manner in which the banks could aid in the industrial, agricultural and transportation world.

STATE NEWS

An industrial survey to establish the resources available to manufacturing and other plants which might locate in Florence or Lauderdale County will be called for the gathering of full information as to land values, labor, raw material, rainfall, streets, schools, transportation facilities and in fact everything which might be of interest to those contemplating locating in that section. These facts have been known in a general way, but have never been fully assembled and put into form to send to all who may be interested.

Many Northeast Alabamians attended the unveiling at Drakетown, Ga., of a $1,500 monument erected to the memory of Mrs. Robert Stewart, Methodist minister's wife, who was shot to death by a mob of masked men who were attempting to kidnap her husband last November. Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, world famous temperance lecturer, was one of the speakers. Mrs. Stewart's murder is believed to have grown out of her husband's activity in trying to suppress liquor running and making.

The right of a public service corporation to discontinue service of any sort simply because that service does not pay, so long as its operation as a whole are profitable, was denied by the Alabama Public Service Commission in a recent ruling. The commission refused to let the Southeastern Express Company close its office at Lanette, although it was shown that the office was not profitable. The move would cause the public too much inconvenience, the commission ruled.

At a called meeting of the Dallas County Board of Revenue a motion was adopted ordering a special election to be held at the different voting boxes of Dallas County on Monday, June 22, to learn the wishes of the people in regard to levying an additional mill on present property valuations for school purposes. A majority of votes will decide the question.

Construction of a large mill which will turn out about 10,000 tons of bars, has been started by the Gulf States Steel Company at Gadsden, and it is announced that the plant will be rushed to completion. The main building, which will be of steel, will be 700 feet long and from 80 to 160 feet wide. Three gas producers will supply the heat.

Milk and meat inspection ordinances such as have been adopted by the leading cities of the state, are now in force in the Tri-Cities with the adoption by the Sheffield City Commission of the model dairy ordinance which has the approval of the State Health Department.

The hosiery mill and overall factory at Scottsboro have been enlarged to almost double their former capacity.

Marked Decrease of Work Animals

Acute Shortage Seems Certain Within Five Years, Says Department.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A marked decrease in the number of horses and mules of working age that may amount to an acute shortage seems certain within five years, says the United States Department of Agriculture. Unless more horse and mule colts are raised during each of the next five years than were raised in 1924, the number of horses on farms five years from now will be only 86 per cent of present numbers and of mules 74 per cent.

Larger Crops Expected.

While present replacements of colts and of young horses and mules are entirely inadequate to cover decreases in the present numbers of work animals, reports coming to the department from various sources indicate that increased breeding and larger colt crops are to be expected. Reports from state stallion registration boards especially emphasize this improved confidence of breeders. A rather marked advance in horse and mule prices during the last few months indicates that the shortage may already be making itself felt. This may be expected to increase further the interest in horse breeding.

In order to get a picture of the present situation the crop reporters of the department were asked to report the ages of all horses and mules on their own farms. Nearly 28,000 reports were tabulated. From these tabulations the percentages of animals of different age groups were computed for the United States by states and regions. The above is the situation if the conditions on the farms of these reporters are typical of all farms.

The study shows that the largest age group of horses is now the eight and nine-year-old group, this making up nearly one-fifth of the total; on the other hand colts under one year make up only 3 per cent and colts one year old only 2.3 per cent. If horse production were on a replacement basis colts under one year would be the largest group.

Of all horses only 11.4 per cent are under four years, 45.6 per cent are from four to nine years and 43 per cent are over ten years with the average age 9.8 years; of all mules 16.5 per cent are under four years, 51.9 per cent are from four to nine years and 31.6 per cent are over ten years with the average age of 8.4 years. Five years from now, for animals of the most useful age, four to nine years, there will be only 191 head of horses for every 450 head now on farms and only 278 mules for every 519 at present.

Pure Breds Increase.

While the reports of the stallion registration boards show fewer stallions registered in 1924 than in 1923, the percentage of pure breds in the total shows an increase. Registrations for 1925 are coming in earlier than in recent years, and these are accompanied by comments that show that owners are much more hopeful and that there is increased inquiry for good quality breeding animals.

While for some years the numbers of horses and mules have been more than adequate and prices last year were the lowest in over 20 years, such a reduction as here indicated seems much too great. Even with a substitution of other forms of power for work animals on farms, the prospective numbers are probably below future minimum requirements.

In planning breeding operations, the department says, farmers should study the present situation to determine regions where the shortage will probably be felt the soonest and where substitution of other forms of power will be the least practicable. Types of animals suited to these areas probably will be in greatest demand. Brood mares should be carefully selected and should be mated with good stallions and jacks of the types best suited to produce high quality colts of the kind desired.

Brown Rot of Peaches

Investigators who have been experimenting with brown rot of peaches in Georgia have reached the conclusion that the control of curculio means practically the control of brown rot also. Dr. H. W. Anderson, who has been working on brown rot in Illinois, has come to the same conclusion. It appears that the principal method of infection by the brown rot fungus is through wounds made by curculios.

No Protection for Farmer

It was found in a recent survey of dairy plants that many are making no effort to protect the farmer. Part of the infection of tuberculosis in hogs is caused by feeding skim milk, buttermilk or whey from dairy plants that do not pasteurize. Most of the hogs going to central markets from Wisconsin are raised in the southern half of the state, in counties that have not been area tested.

Stop Crows Pulling Up Corn

Coal tar is the best preventive against crows pulling up corn, a tablespoonful being enough to treat half a bushel of the seed. The corn is placed in a pail or tub and covered with warm water at about 100 degrees Fahrenheit. As soon as the corn is warm, drain the water and add the tar, stirring the corn until each kernel is covered with a thin film of the tar.

Airplane Dusting for Large Orchards

Peach Is Latest Crop to Receive Attention.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The commercial peach orchard is the latest crop to receive treatment by the airplane dusting method for controlling insect pests. According to a report received by the bureau of entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture from its field station at Fort Valley, Ga., this process was tried for the first time in March of this year. Airplane dusting for cotton fields has been a demonstrated success, and the outcome of this type of control for insects affecting peach trees will be awaited with interest.

It took an hour and fifty-five minutes to dust 10,000 peach trees with a mixture of arsenate of lead and hydrated lime. The time recorded included all trips to the landing field to refill the hopper. For several months the bureau representatives at the Fort Valley laboratory have been giving attention to the perfection of the technique for using airplanes in this way, with the co-operation of those who have had previous experience in the work at the boll weevil laboratory at Tallulah, La. It has been necessary to make adjustments of the feeding mechanism of the planes so that the heavy dust used for peach insect control work would be evenly distributed. A thousand acres of peach trees in Georgia will be treated by airplane during the season, under the supervision of the Fort Valley laboratory. It is expected that this work will yield valuable data on the results, cost of operation, and other points.

Activity in Live Stock Improvement Operations

In a report on live stock improvement under the better-sires plan, just issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, California receives mention among the states noticeably active in such work. The principal other states, mostly in the central west and east, are: Kentucky, Ohio, Nebraska, Vermont, South Carolina, Oklahoma, New York and Pennsylvania.

Live stock owners who place their breeding operations on a basis which includes the exclusive use of pure bred sires receive a suitable sign for their premises and helpful literature on animal breeding.

During the early part of the year live stock owners in the following California counties qualified for participation in the work: Los Angeles, Orange, Sonoma and Ventura.

The activity of the Golden State in this means of live stock improvement is due chiefly to the interest and energy of county extension agents in the counties mentioned. The work is of an educational nature and involves no expense aside from that incident to the purchase or use of pure bred sires, which the department urges in the interest of improved domestic live stock. Experience shows that good breeding results in numerous benefits and greatly increased financial returns.

Horse-Radish Thrives on Soil of Medium Texture

Horse-radish, like other root crops, will thrive on a soil of medium texture. Either a loam or a silty clay loam containing a good supply of organic matter and plant-food will give good yields. On a moist, but not wet, soil, the roots will develop to a good size and be of fine quality, while on a dry location they will be small and woody, and will lack to a large degree the characteristic sharpness. An ideal soil is one which is free from large stones, which can be easily cultivated, and which reaches to a depth of 10 to 15 inches, underlaid by a clay subsoil. These conditions make possible a check in the growth of the roots when they reach the subsoil, while on lighter soils the roots often grow to a depth of four to five feet, which is very undesirable.

FARM FACTS

Evergreens should be moved just before the buds start.

Most cream separators will do much better job of skimming the milk when it is warm.

As a soil provider sweet clover is excellent both on dry land and irrigated lands.

Dig out the barberries, roots and all. Dig them carefully and watch for sprouts for several years.

• • •

Curing of clover hay is more difficult at the full-bloom stage because of the higher natural moisture it then contains.

The production of good clean cream is the most important step in the manufacture of high-class country butter.

Spray the currant bushes early for plant lice. They are nurseries for them and the lettuce will be next on the list and then the green peas.

• • •

When it is desired to have the second crop of red clover for seed, then the better plan is to get the first crop off the land somewhat early, before the heads turn brown.

OPELIKA WOMAN'S MYSTERIOUS DEATH

Opelika.—The body of a white woman, aged 38 years, identified as Mary Thomas, was found on the Opelika Waverly highway a few miles north of Opelika by a passing salesman early in the morning June 9 and reported to Sheriff Moon. The body was warm when discovered, showing recent death. The right side was badly crushed and ribs broken, with all the appearance of having been run over by an automobile.

One theory is that she was murdered and her body placed on the road to make it appear that she had been run over. Another is that while walking across the road she was struck by a speeding car. If so, who the driver was and why he did not stop and render aid and report the case, is a mystery.

The woman had been seen in Opelika the day before and asked a taxi driver to take her to a construction camp near the scene where the body was found. Her suitcase was found in a negro's house a mile or so away.

A white man named Lynch has been arrested and is in jail as a suspect. He was with the woman at Alexander City several days up until Sunday, when they separated and both came to Opelika. Officers are busy at work on the case.

BREEZY FANS

Next best to being provided with "cold comfort" on a warm Sunday, is to be provided with breezy fans. On last Sunday morning, immediately preceeding the services, fans bearing the add of a local firm were distributed to the congregation of the Baptist church.

The fans given this season as ads by our local firms are quite pretty, and some unique in design.

THREE FAITHS OF CANADA COMBINED

Toronto.—Three great churches in Canada Wednesday took the greatest step toward protestant unity since the time of Martin Luther.

The Canadian organizations of the Presbyterian, Methodist and Congregational churches will give up their individual existence by merging into one great protestant religious body to be known as the united church of Canada, comprising about 2,500,000 adherents and 8,771 congregations.

Hereafter, in hundreds of Canadian cities, towns, and villages, three congregations which have operated three separate churches will join in Christian worship under one roof.

The last details of this important development were worked out this week in Toronto. The general assembly of the fifty-year-old Presbyterian church of Canada has held its last session.

Methodists and Congregationalists from all over the whole dominion are now meeting separately to wind up their affairs, and take leave of the churches of their fathers.

Wednesday morning found about 1,500 delegates gathered in the huge Toronto [illegible] to participate in the union [illegible] the new church.

From separate entrances, with dignity and ceremony, delegates and visitors from the three bodies, the general assembly of the Presbyterian church, the conference of the Methodist church and the union of the Congregationalists, entered. The representation was proportional, with 150 from each of the two larger forces, and 50 from the Congregatonal church. These assisted in constituting the new church and the heads of each delegation signed the basis of union, which includes the doctrinal statement and general policy.

To secure the greatest electrical development for the United States, power companies and consumers must have the active and hearty cooperation of state and national regulatory bodies. Without such cooperation little can be accomplished.

Clanton Baseball Team is Playing Fine Baseball

The Clanton baseball team is still proving its class, winning from Gantts Quarry again Saturday at Sylacauga.

The game was unlike the one in Clanton on Thursday of last week. The score of 11 to 3 was the result of some of the slugging which will be a feature of many games to come. Lewis not only pitched a good game, but his home run with the bases full helped put his game on ice. Sewell got a second home run by losing it in the tall grass in the outfield. Starling, a new man from south Alabama connected for one of several three-base hits.

Clanton played Blocton Tuesday and won by the score of 4 to 0. Starling pitched for Clanton.

Tallassee will play here today (Thursday) and a large crowd is expected.

In one of the best games of baseball seen on the local grounds this season, Clanton opened the season last Thursday at home by defeating the strong Gantts Quarry team 3 to 1.

Both teams were well matched. Good fielding by both sides contributed to the interest.

For three innings neither side was able to score, although poor base running no doubt lost Clanton some runs in the first inning. Sewell walked and R. Lewis singled in the third. Stewart was playing in for a bunt and forgot the runner on second. Sewell stole third and Lewis second.

Thompson bunted and beat the throw in the fourth. Connatser singled to center and B. Lewis hit to right. Parrish hit a high one to right and Thompson beat the throw in.

Both teams scored in the sixth. After two were out Jack Hayes let Pearson's hot grounder get away from him. Freeman then hit a two-bagger to deep right. Jones fell in fielding the ball and while down threw the ball to center, for the only score for the visitors.

Clanton produced the winning run after two were down. B. Lewis, the popular local center fielder, sent a two-bagger down the third base line and went to third on the throw to second. Webb Parrish comes across with a beauty to center and Lewis scores.

Another run was added in the eight. Thompson and Connatser connect for singles to left and right, respectively. Thompson scores the last run on Parrish's out.

A large crowd was out and the new team was given a royal welcome.

WHITE HOUSE MAKES USE OF TELEPHONE

Calvin Coolidge was the first President in many years who did not make a wide speaking campaign during the national election in which he was the candidate. This was attributed to modesty and personal shrinking from contact with a crowd.

Examination indicates that Mr Coolidge elected to sit in his office at the White House, under an electric fan, a telephone at his elbow, rather than campaign during the hot weather, not because he could do more efficient campaigning, talk to more people, particularly to more "key" people, with less strain upon himself and upon his auditors, over the telephone and its coadjutor, the radio, than he could begin to talk to by direct speech under the old-fashioned, exhaustive campaign methods.

The White House has the same telephone service as every other subscriber has. "Main 6" the White House exchange, is known as the "first telephone in the United States." Mr. Coolidge makes efficient use of the telephone. During the last national campaign he talked to Republican leaders all over the country each day.

The President made three important addresses over the radio during the campaign. In making these addresses he spoke into a special microphone receiver connected with telephone wires which carried the message to the broadcasting station.—Ex.

THE BEST TOWN

There are fancier towns than our little town, there are towns that are bigger than this, and the people who live in the smaller towns don't know what excitement they miss. There are things you see in the wealthier towns that you can't in a town that's small; and yet, up and down, there is no other town like our little town after all. It may be that the streets aren't long, they're not wide nor maybe straight, but the neighbors you know in your own little town all welcome a fellow—it's great.

In the glittering streets of the glittering town, with its palace and pavement and thrall, in the midst of the throng you will frequently long for your own little town after all. If you live and you work in your own little town, in spite of the fact that it's small, you'll find it a fact that our own little town is the best little town after all.

PRAYER

With Him who sets the lily on the stem
With Him who looses summer in the loam
With Him who wakes the winds and blushes them
With Him who calls the dead and brings them home
With Him the nameless, unimportunate
The utterly within us beautiful.
With Him I leave Tomorrow, and too late
Regret I left on yesterday as well.
Unto what loveliness may we recommend.
The desolation of the flesh that weeps
To what untellable and bitter end
Shall wake the soul that hits from sleep—and sleeps?
Oh rouse me up good God—and keep me so.
Washing my heart in water of the snow.

HARDING ROSES DIE

Washington.—The famous Harding roses planted in the White House gardens by Mrs. Harding are dying despite the expert care of the best horticulturists of the department of agriculture. These plants were developed by the department and Mrs. Harding thought they were so beautiful that they were named for her. She personally helped to plant them. The old-fashioned flowers which she also planted are thriving but the Harding roses cannot be saved, the gardeners say.

BURIED

A town that never has anything to do in a public way is on the way to the cemetery. Any citizen who will do nothing for his town is helping to dig its grave. A man that "cusses" the town furnishes the coffin. The man who is so selfish as to have no time from his business to give affairs is making the shroud. The man who will not advertise is driving the hearse. The man who is always pulling back from any public enterprise throws bouquets on the grave. The man who is so stingy as to be howling hard times, preaches the funeral, sings the doxology. And thus the town lies buried from all the sorrow of the world.

GETTING THE MOST OUT OF OUR ROADS

[illegible] county in the United States has many miles of good rock macadam highways which have outlived their usefulness from the standpoint of carrying modern motor vehicle traffic. Thousands of dollars a mile have been spent in building and maintaining these old roads. To save this investment of the taxpayers is a duty which devolves upon county commissioners and boards of supervisors.

Instead of tearing up these roads, it has been successfully demonstrated in many states that they can be used as a base for a waterproof asphaltic concrete surface at a saving of from $6,000 to $10,000 a mile.

Extention of this type of road paving is saving taxpayers over the country millions of dollars and building hundreds of miles of hard surfaced highways which could not otherwise be paved.

BUILDING A ROAD ACROSS SALT DESERT

The Wendover Cut-off is a highway which has just been completed across the mud flats and salt beds of the Great Salt Lake Desert between Salt Lake City and the Nevada line. The completion of the road opens the way for transcontinental and interstate travel between Salt Lake City and Northern and Central California, and brings to a successful conclusion a five-year effort to bridge the age-old obstacle of the salt desert.

The construction of the road, which involved many unique features and was carried out in the face of serious engineering difficulties, was made possible only by the close cooperation of the State of Utah, the Federal government, and civic, highway, and automobile associations of Utah, Nevada and California. The road is a federal-aid road, and the cost was borne jointly by the State of Utah and the federal government supplemented by contributions from groups of interested citizens.

While motor travel started on May 10 the official opening of the highway will take place on June 13, and a celebration has been arranged to be held at Salduro, Utah, a community situated in the middle of the salt desert. Secretary of Agriculture William Jardine, and Thos. H. McDonald, chief of the Bureau of Public Roads, will represent the federal government; and the States of Utah, Nevada and California will be represented by their governors and by members of the State highway commission. Delegations from commercial and civic organizations which assisted in the financing of the project will also be in attendance.

GOVERNMENT INSURANCE VERY DEMORALIZING

A recent statement in the press calls calls attention to various practices which have developed out of government unemployment insurance in England. workman out of employment through no fault of his own, is payed a weekly "dole" by the government. There are 1,200,000 persons supported by the government in this manner.

It is reported that in three mining towns, workers are unanimously unemployed." The allowance from the union and the government dole for a miner coupled with three days' wages, amount to $11.50. If the miner works four days, he gets only $10.50 and no dole. Consequently he works only three days and makes a dollar. The disintegrating effect of such conditions is apparent.

There are those in this country who would establish the same system here but the resulting danger to sound government as witnessed in England should serve as a warning.

BUSINESS CONDITIONS ARE SOUND IN UNITED STATES

An encouraging report on basic business conditions has been made by members of the American Bankers' Association.

Without attempting to overlook retarded activity in some lines, the bankers point out that no reason or prospect exists for any serious impairment of industry.

"The wave of optimism which swept over the country has been followed by a more conservative outlook," says the Indianapolis Star, "which should ultimately be better for all concerned. Political uncertainey, due to fear that radical blocs in congress might interfere with the president's program of tax and railroad legislation, may have caused some lessening of industrial activity. The nation's financial leaders are a unit, however, in predicting that the condition of fundamental soundness must react in the form of quickened business."

Variety of Crowns for Dainty French Millinery

Collections of French models show a manifold variety of crown types. One thing evident about all of the crowns, however, is that they do not go in for the extreme in height, but describe the medium high types instead. Many of them incline to the sugar-loaf type, or have little creases down through the center or the sides, in ridge or helmet effect. There is a little turban of navy crepe on which Eliane uses an all-over geometrical embroidery of gold thread and colored medallions. Another from Antoinette shows the roll front, large brim with the short back which carries the rounder crown. This is made of navy taffeta with insets of Tuscan circles in natural color set through the brim and on the crown tip, while the facing carries an embroidery of red beads used like polka dots.

A charming little toque from Madeline is collapsible in effect and could be used for day or evening wear. It is made of large cordings of black satin crocheted in effect and in pattern, while the tiny brim is developed in twists of black milan. The satin cordings are so constructed that the hair is seen through.

An eight-section tip is developed by Villetard for a red bengaline model with a flaring front cuff that is embroidered in a tuscan flower pattern and a large galalith pin trim up the crown side. Ombre rattail flowers are used all over a crown of a small shape from the same maker.

Latest Fancy Is for Fine Enamel Novelties

That any novelty in the class of necessories remains unexploited is surprising. The style market has long been stocked with the smaller articles of dress, growing ever more kaleidoscopic. The arts and crafts of the Old World have been introduced in all of the jewelry, trimmings and ornaments. We have been surfeited with the real things in jade, amber, onyx, coral, quartz and their limitless imitations. Tooled and illuminated leather, carved ivories, the most lovely examples of petit point—all have been and some still are fashionable.

The very latest fancy is for enamel, highly prized a quarter of a century ago. There are adorable examples of fine workmanship in figures, scraps of "still life" and groups, in miniature, portrayed in the daintiest colors, and all the pretty Dresden tints.

There appears to be in all the smartest shops a growing interest in petit point. It has become very popular. It is made into bags and many other lovely small things, and is used as motif in frocks. But the latest novelty is a suede-lined jacket of cut velvet woven into a perfect imitation of petit point in an old French tapestry design. With this is a soft, close hat made to match the coat.

Old Pale Gold Is Used in New Earring Designs

Earrings grow larger and longer, and a style creator foresees earrings a foot long. Some of the new-old examples that have been found in an antique shop are fashioned of the old pale gold, joined in serpentine sections and set with old-fashioned stones—fascinating old things studded with garnets, matching a medallion garnet brooch and necklace.

If one wishes to hark back to styles Victorian, there is also a bracelet of the same pattern, chased gold, with a rosette of the garnets. White sapphires, turquoises, topaz, amethysts, all of those old-time stones of lesser value are used to make the earrings more ornate.

ENJOY FRUIT WHEN IT CAN BE GROWN

Cordell, Okla.—Since the state was first settled, millions of fruit trees have been set out, only to live a short time and then die. So a big number of farmers, especially in the western part, now buy shipped fruit or do without. Yet practically every year in this same territory a few farmers grow a variety of fruits and fill their cellars from the products of the home orchard.

"I know from my own experience and the experience of others that a few trees on the creek bank or on land with a deep moisture carrying subsoil will supply all the fruit that is needed for family use," said T. M. Meler, who first came to Oklahoma thirty-seven years ago, and who, much of the time since, has been interested in growing fruit in regions of small rainfall.

As a matter of course, right methods of cultivation, proper pruning and spraying at the right time are just as important in Oklahoma as elsewhere, and the varieties must be picked with care, but Meler says that if he was asked to name one essential for producting in Western Oklahoma and was allowed to name no other he would vote for the right kind of soil.

"The case of Charley Evans, near Cloud Chief, shows how a lot of farm could raise it at home," he went on. ers who are now doing without fruit "All the real tree land that Evans had was along the bottom of a 'gyp' canyon In the botom he placed a few trees on one side of the little stream of water and the remainder on the other side. Evans has had fruit every year since the first year.

"On my own farm the trees set out on the upland eventuall died. They could not withstand the severe droughts. But on the bottom land I now have apple trees eighteen inches through which havev never failed to produce apples. Naturally, yields have varied with the seasons, but I have picked twenty-five and thirty bushels from a tree."

Any spot on the farm where native trees are growing without having been planted will generally grow fruit trees, according to Meler. However, a man thinking about setting out an orchard may save time and money if, before placing his trees, he consults orchardists who have made a study of fruit production and who themselves are growing it every year.

After the soil, the next thing is to select the varieties which have stood the tests of Oklahoma's varying season In picking his lists of fruits most suited to his local climate, Meler studied the production habits of twenty varieties of cherries, thirty plums, thirty-five apples and fifty peaches.

For apple production he places at the top of his list the six varieties of Roman Beauty, Black Twig, Red Winesap, Arkansas Black, Red Arson and Maiden Blush. In the case of peaches, he has settled on the Early Wheeler, Alexander, Belle of Georgia, Early Crawford, Champion, Indian, Alberta and Heath Cling.

From the twenty varieties of cherries he selected the Early Richmond, Dye House and English Morello. For plums he names Wild Goose, Burbank, Green Gage and Sappy. There little use to try any other kind of an apricot except Moorepark and Russian, he argues. His pear list includes the Kiefer and Garber.

Meler's first pick among the black grapes are the Concord and Worden. Moore's Early is his red choice and the Niagara is his white. Blackberries are limited to the Early Harvest and the Dallas varieties. In the dewberry line he eliminates all but the Austin. All varieties of strawberries are worthless, he says, unles one can water them in the summer.

Damage often done by Oklahoma winds to growing fruit influenced Meler in the selection of his varieties and in adopting methods of fruit planting. His plum s,for example, are all short stemmed except the Wild Goose. Short stemmed fruit is not whipped off so readily. With grapes, wind damage is reduced by running wire rows in a north and south direction.

Bert Odell, north of Sayre, has also made headway in trying to grow fruit in Western Oklahoma. A mulberry hedge protects his orchard and he prunes to keep the trees low. All summer long the disk harrow and the tooth harrow are used to hold the moisture supplied by the 25-inch r in his country.

To grow the best apples, room between the trees is ne he has found out. A distance o feet is not too far. In setting vines, ten feet each way is abou Meler holds. For growing peaches and cherries, the best d is not less than twenty feet. western growers have decided

"TEN DOLLARS!"

SYNOPSIS. — Introducing "So Big" (Dirk DeJong) in his infancy. And his mother, Selina DeJong, daughter of Simeon Peake, gambler and gentleman of fortune. Her life, to young womanhood in Chicago in 1888, has been unconventional, somewhat seamy, but generally enjoyable. At school her chum is Julie Hempel, daughter of August Hempel, butcher. Simeon is killed in a quarrel that is not his own, and Selina, nineteen years old and practically destitute, secures a position as teacher at the High Prairie school, in the outskirts of Chicago, living at the home of a truck farmer, Klaas Pool. In Roelf, twelve years old, son of Klaas, Selina perceives a kindred spirit, a lover of beauty, like herself. Selina hears gossip concerning the affection of the "Widow Paarlenberg," rich and good-looking, for Pervus DeJong, poor truck farmer, who is insensible to the widow's attractions. For a community "auctionable" Selina prepares a lunch box, dainty, but not of ample proportions, which is to be "auctioned," according to custom. The smallness of the box excites derision and Selina is heartbroken.

Selina's cheeks matched her gown. Her eyes were wide and dark with the effort she was making to force back the hot haze threatening them. Why had she mounted this wretched soap box? Why had she come to this hideous party? Why had she come to High Prairie? Why! . . .

"Miss Selina Peake, that's who. Miss Se-li-na Peake!"

A hundred balloon faces pulled by a single cord turned toward her as she stood there on the box for all to see. They swam toward her. She put up a hand to push them back.

"What'm I bid! What'm I bid! What'm I bid for this here lovely little toothful, gents! Start her up!"

"Five cents!" piped up old Johannes Ambuul, with a snicker. The tittering crowd broke into a guffaw. Selina was conscious of a little sick feeling at the pit of her stomach. Through the haze she saw the widow's face, no longer sulky, but smiling now. She saw Roelf's dear dark head. His face was set, like a man's. He was coming toward her, or trying to, but the crowd wedged him in, small as he was among those great bodies. She lost sight of him. How hot it was! how hot. . . . An arm at her waist. Someone had mounted the little box and stood teetering there beside her, pressed against her slightly, reassuringly. Pervus DeJong. Her head was on a level with the doorway, on the soap box, for all High Prairie to see.

"Five cents I'm bid for this lovely little mouthful put up by the school teacher's own fair hands. Five cents! Five—"

"One dollar!" Pervus DeJong.

The balloon faces were suddenly punctured with holes. High Prairie's jaw dropped with astonishment. Its mouth stood open.

There was nothing plain about Selina now. Her dark head was held high, and his fair one beside it made a vivid foil. The purchase of the wine-colored cashmere was at last justified.

"And ten!" cackled old Johannes Ambuul, his rheumy eyes on Selina.

Art and human spitefulness struggled visibly for mastery in Adam Ooms' face—and art won. The auctioneer triumphed over the man. The term "crowd psychology" was unknown to him, but he was artist enough to sense that some curious magic process, working through this roomful of people, had transformed the little white box, from a thing despised and ridiculed, into an object of beauty, of value, of infinite desirability. He now eyed it in a catalepsy of admiration.

"One-ten I'm bid for this box all tied with a ribbon to match the gown of the girl who brought it. Gents, you get the ribbon, the lunch, and the girl. And only one-ten bid for all that. Gents! Gents! Remember, it ain't only a lunch—it's a picture. It pleases the eye. Do I hear one—"

"Five bits!" Barend DeRoo, of Low Prairie, in the lists. A strapping young Dutchman, the Brom Bones of the district. He drove to the Haymarket with his load of produce and played cards all night on the wagon under the gas torches while the street girls of the neighborhood assailed him in vain. Six feet three, his red face shone now like a harvest moon above the crowd. A merry, mischievous eye that laughed at Pervus DeJong and his dollar bid.

"Dollar and a half!" A high clear voice—a boy's voice. Roelf.

"Oh, no!" said Selina aloud. But she was unheard in the gabble. Roelf had once confided to her that he had saved three dollars and fifty cents in the last three years. Five dollars would purchase a set of tools that his mind had been fixed on for months past. Selina saw Klaas Pool's look of astonishment changing to anger. Saw Maartje Pool's quick hand on his arm, restraining him.

"Two dollars!" Pervus DeJong.

"And ten." Johannes Ambuul's cautious bid.

"Two and a quarter." Barend DeRoo.

"Two-fifty!" Pervus DeJong.

"Three dollars!" The high voice of the boy. It cracked a little on the last syllable, and the crowd laughed.

"Three-three-three-three-three - three-three. Three once—"

"And a half." Pervus DeJong.

"Three sixty." . . .

"Four!" DeRoo.

"And ten."

The boy's voice was heard no more.

"I wish they'd stop," whispered Selina.

"Five!" Pervus DeJong.

"Six!" DeRoo, his face very red.

"And ten."

"Seven!"

"It's only jelly sandwiches," said Selina to DeJong, in a panic.

"Eight!" Johannes Ambuul, gone mad.

"Nine!" DeRoo.

"Nine! Nine I'm bid! Nine-nine-nine! Who'll make it—"

"Let him have it. The cup cakes fell a little. Don't—"

"Ten!" said Pervus DeJong.

Barend DeRoo shrugged his great shoulders.

"Ten-ten-ten. Do I hear eleven? Do I hear ten-fifty. Ten-ten-ten tententententen! Gents! Ten once. Ten twice! Gone—for ten dollars to Pervus DeJong. And a bargain." Adam Ooms mopped his bald head and his cheeks and the damp spot under his chin.

Ten dollars. Adam Ooms knew, as did all the countryside, this was not the sum of ten dollars merely. No basket of food, though it contained nightingales' tongues, the golden apple of Atalanta, wines of rare vintage, could have been adequate recompense for these ten dollars. They represented sweat and blood; toil and hardship; hours under the burning prairie sun at midday; work doggedly carried on through the drenching showers of spring; nights of restless sleep snatched an hour at a time under the sky in the Chicago market place; miles of weary travel down the rude corduroy road between High Prairie and Chicago, now up to the hubs in mud, now blinded by dust and blowing sand.

A sale at Christie's, with a miniature going for a million, could not have met with a deeper hush, a more dramatic babble following the hush.

They ate their lunch together in one corner of Adam Ooms' hall. Selina opened the box and took out the deviled eggs, and the cup cakes that had fallen a little, and the apples, and the sandwiches sliced very, very thin. The coldly appraising eye of all High Prairie, Low Prairie, and New Haarlem watched this sparse provender emerge from the ribbon-tied shoe box. She offered him a sandwich. It looked infinitesimal in his great paw. Suddenly all Selina's agony of embarrassment was swept away, and she was laughing, not wildly or hysterically, but joyously and girlishly. She sank her little white teeth into one of the absurd sandwiches and looked at him, expecting to find him laughing, too. But he wasn't laughing. He looked very earnest, and his blue eyes were fixed hard on the bit of bread in his hand, and his face was very red and clean-shaved. He bit into the sandwich and chewed it solemnly. And Selina thought: "Why, the dear thing! The great big dear thing! And he might have been eating breast of duck. . . . Ten dollars!" Aloud she said, "What made you do it?"

He seemed not to hear her; bit ruminantly into one of the cup cakes. Suddenly: "I can't hardly write at all, only to sign my name and like that."

"Read?"

"Only to spell out the words. Anyways I don't get time for reading. But figuring I wish I knew. Rithmotic. I can figger some, but those fellows in Haymarket they are too sharp for me. They do numbers in their head—like that, so quick."

Selina leaned toward him. "I'll teach you. I'll teach you."

"How do you mean, teach me?"

"Evenings."

He looked down at his great calloused palms, then up at her. "What would you take for pay?"

"Pay! I don't want any pay." She was genuinely shocked.

His face lighted up with a sudden thought. "Tell you what. I could start for you the fire, mornings, in the school. And thaw the pump and bring in a pail of water. This month, and January and February and part of March, even, now I don't go to market on account it's winter, I could start you the fire. Till spring. And I could come maybe three times a week, evenings, to Pool's place, for lessons." He looked so helpless, so humble, so huge; and the more pathetic for his hugeness.

She felt a little rush of warmth toward him that was at once impersonal and maternal. She thought again. "Why, the dear thing! The great helpless big thing! How serious he is! And funny." She laughed, suddenly, a gay little laugh, and he, after a puzzled pause, joined her companionably.

"Three evenings a week," repeated Selina, then, from the depths of her ignorance. "Why, I'd love to. I'd—love to."

Chapter V

The evenings turned out to be Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays. Supper was over by six-thirty in the Pool household. Pervus was there by seven, very clean as to shirt, his hair brushed till it shone; shy, and given to dropping his hat and bumping against chairs, and looking solemn. Selina was torn between pity and mirth. If only he had blustered. A blustering big man puts the world on the defensive. A gentle giant disarms it.

Selina got out her McBride's grammar and Duffy's arithmetic, and together they started to parse verbs, paper walls, dig cisterns, and extract square roots. They found study impossible at the oilcloth-covered kitchen table, with the Pool household eddying about it. Jakob built a fire in the parlor stove and there they sat, teacher and pupil, their feet resting coolly on the gleaming nickel railing that encircled the wood burner.

On the evening of the first lesson Roelf had glowered throughout supper and had disappeared into the work shed, whence issued a great sound of hammering, sawing, and general clatter. He and Selina had got into the way of spending much time together, in or out of doors. The boy worshiped her inarticulately. She had early discovered that he had a feeling for beauty—beauty of line, texture, color, and grouping—that was rare in one of his years. The feel of a satin ribbon in his fingers; the orange and rose of a sunset; the folds of the wine-red cashmere dress; the cadence of a spoken line, brought a look to his face that startled her.

Since the gathering at Ooms' hall he had been moody and sullen; had refused to answer when she spoke to him of his bid for her basket. Urged, he would only say, "Oh, it was just fun to make old Ooms mad."

"Gone!—for Ten Dollars to Pervus DeJong."

Now, with the advent of Pervus DeJong, Roelf presented that most touching and miserable of spectacles, a small boy jealous and helpless in his jealousy. Selina had asked him to join the tri-weekly evening lessons; had, indeed, insisted that he be a pupil in the class round the parlor stove.

Roelf would not. He disappeared into his work-shed after supper; did not emerge until after DeJong's departure.

There was something about the sight of this great creature bent laboriously over a slate, the pencil held clumsily in his huge fingers, that moved Selina strangely. Pity wracked her. If she had known to what emotion this pity was akin she might have taken away the slate and given him a tablet, and the whole course of her life would have been different. "Poor lad," she thought. "Poor lad." Chided herself for being amused at his childlike earnestness.

He did not make an apt pupil, though painstaking. Selina would go over a problem or a sentence again and again, patiently, patiently. Then, suddenly, like a hand passed over his face, his smile would come, transforming it. He would smile like a child, and Selina should have been warned by the warm rush of joy that his smile gave her. She would smile, too. He was as pleased as though he had made a fresh and wonderful discovery.

"Its easy," he would say, "when you know it once." Like a boy.

He usually went home by eight-thirty or nine. Often the Pools went to bed before he left. After he had gone Selina was wakeful. She would heat water and wash; brush her hair vigorously; feeling at once buoyant and depressed.

Sometimes they fell to talking. His wife had died in the second year of their marriage, when the child was born. The child, too, had died. A girl. He was unlucky, like that. It was the same with the farm.

Selina's heart melted in pity. He would look down at the great calloused hands; up at her. One of the charms of Pervus DeJong lay in the things that his eyes said and his tongue did not. Women always imagined he was about to say what he looked, but he never did. It made otherwise dull conversation with him most exciting.

His was in no way a shrewd mind. His respect for Selina was almost reverence. But he had this advantage: he had married a woman, had lived with her for two years. She had borne him a child. Selina was a girl in experience. She was a woman capable of a great deal of passion, but she did not know that. Passion was a thing no women possessed, much less talked about. It simply did not exist, except in men, and then it was something to be ashamed of, like a violent temper, or a weak stomach.

By the first of March he could speak a slow, careful and fairly grammatical English. He could master simple sums. By the middle of March the lessons would cease. There was too much work to do about the farm—night work as well as day. She found herself trying not to think about the time when the lessons should cease. She refused to look ahead to April.

One night, late in February, Selina was conscious that she was trying to control something. She was trying to keep her eyes away from something. She realized that she was trying not to look at his hands. She wanted, cruelly, to touch them. She wanted to feel them about her throat. She wanted to put her lips on his hands—brush the backs of them, slowly, moistly, with her mouth, lingeringly. She was terribly frightened. She thought to herself: "I am going crazy. I am losing my mind. There is something the matter with me. I wonder how I look. I must look queer."

At half-past eight she closed her book suddenly. "I'm tired. I think it's the spring coming on." She smiled a little wavering smile. He rose and stretched himself, his great arms high above his head. Selina shivered.

"Two more weeks," he said, "is the last lesson. Well, do you think I have done pretty good—well?"

"Very well," Selina replied evenly. She felt very tired.

The first week in March he was ill, and did not come. A rheumatic affliction to which he was subject. It was the curse of the truck farmer. Selina's evenings were free to devote to Roelf, who glowed again. She sewed, too; read; helped Mrs. Pool with the housework in a gust of sympathy and found strange relief therein; made over an old dress; studied; wrote all her letters (few enough), even one to the dried-apple queen in Vermont. She no longer wrote to Julie Hempel. She had heard that Julie was to be married to a Kansas man named Arnold. Julie herself had not written. The first week in March passed. He did not come. Nor did he come the following Tuesday or Thursday.

She was bewildered, frightened. All that week she had a curious feeling—or succession of feelings. She was restless, listless, by turns. Period of furious activity, followed by days of inertia. It was the spring, Maartje said. Selina hoped she wasn't going to be ill. She had never felt like that before. She wanted to cry. She was irritable to the point of waspishness with the children in the schoolroom.

On Saturday—the fourteenth of March—he walked in at seven. Klaas, Maartje and Roelf had driven off to a gathering at Low Prairie, leaving Selina with the pigtails and old Jakob. She had promised to make taffy for them, and was in the midst of it when his knock sounded at the kitchen door. All the blood in her body rushed to her head; pounded there hotly. He entered. There slipped down over her a complete armor of calmness, of self-possession; of gibh how do you do Mr. DeJong and how are you feeling and would you sit down and there's no fire in the parlor we'll have to sit here.

He took part in the taffy pulling. Selina wondered if Geertje and Jozina would ever have done squealing. It was half-past eight before she bundled them off to bed with a plate of clipped taffy lozenges between them. She heard them scuffling and scrimmaging about in the rare freedom of their parents' absence.

Pervus DeJong and Selina sat at the kitchen table, their books spread out before them on the oilcloth. The sweet, heavy scent of fruit filled the room. Selina brought the parlor lamp into the kitchen, the better to see. It was a nickel-bellied lamp, with a yellow glass shade that cast a mellow golden glow.

"You didn't go to the meeting," primly. "Mr. and Mrs. Pool went."

"No. I didn't go."

"Why not?"

She saw him swallow. "I got through too late. We're fixing to sow tomato seeds in the hotbeds tomorrow."

Well, it looks as if Pervus was the man. Who does the proposing—Pervus or Selina?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Bad People Not So Plenty

I have heard all my days warning of bad men and women, but known few; and I have reached three-score and ten. I have traveled far, and haven't much farther to go, but upon my honor the rarest thing I know is a completely bad man or woman.—E. W. Howe, the Atchison Globe Man, in Collier's.

Of Two Minds on Silhouette; Chic in Topcoats and Suits

LADY FASHION is of two minds in the matter of the silhouette and the two pretty summer dresses pictured here provide her with two very good excuses for her vacillation and indecision. One of them, at the left, is an exponent of newest ideas, with flaring skirt, and bodice following vaguely the contour of the body. Its lines are graceful and flowing—and very ingeniously contrived. It is made of plain crepe-back satin with godets let in at each side of the skirt. By means of satin-covered buttons and cord, the body of the dress is drawn in at the sides, indicating a low waistline; it is something of a compromise between the new, molded-bodice-and-full-skirt models and the long-popular, straight-line dresses. Fashion has her eyes turned in the direction of these new arrivals much of the time and they are here in beautiful colors and many materials.

On the other hand there are just as many straight-line dresses, and so long as figured silks continue to fascinate, they are likely to divide honors with the newcomers. Fanciful patterns in fabrics look best when simply made up. In the dress at the right a long tunic of printed silk is bordered with plain crepe and worn over a skirt with the same finish. There are many color combinations in these printed silks and of course, black and white in cool-looking, distinctive patterns. Crepe de chine is used for the collar and tie.

Silk and cotton mixtures, in crepey materials are so like the printed silks that it is difficult to tell them apart. These fabrics are washable and much less expensive than silk.

All these printed fabrics make the way of the home dressmaker a path of flowers—literally and figuratively. They are adapted to the simplest designs and discourage fussiness because the interest of costumes made of them lies in their colors and printed patterns.

The chic topcoat and the spirited suit shown here prove once again that, whatever the trend of the mode may be, the French are to be depended on to make the most of it. Paris leads in her new and untried style ideas, at the beginning of each season, like a company of debutantes ready to be presented at Fashion's court. Those that make a good impression are soon made much of—those that don't quietly disappear. In this light topcoat pictured in the sketch several approved style features have been cleverly developed—"Paris" is written in the ingenuity with which the designer has introduced the flare in the skirt portion, where wide, inverted pleats are set in at each side under simulated pocket flaps. The turned-back half-cuffs reveal another touch of genius for designing and the single button on each sleeve is a consistent finishing touch as the coat fastens with only one button. Smooth faced cloths, as flannel or broadcloth, are used for these summer coats and the demand is for light colors in them—copenhagen and china blue, lanvin and other light greens, tan, cocoa and red are popular.

The suit shown in the sketch is even more unmistakably French than its companion. It is a crisp-looking affair, with a plain, black skirt and checked coat in black and red, that hangs open at the front. This front opening discloses that perennial favorite in the French tailleur—the white pique vest—not in a brief glimpse but in an impressive expanse. The vest has a surplice opening and is finished with two rows of handsome pearl buttons, put on in slanting lines. White pique cuffs emphasize the plainness of the sleeves. There are several color combinations that might be used in this suit quite as effectively as black and red—none of them outclass black and white.

THE GNU FAMILY

"There are three of us in the zoo," said the Blue or Gray Gnu, sometimes called the Brindled Gnu.

"There's myself, for as I'm doing the talking, I consider I am the most important of all."

"There's myself," said the White-Bearded Gnu, the largest of the three animals, but very much like the Blue Gnu.

"And there's myself," said the White-Tailed Gnu. "I am interesting.

"I come from South Africa. I used to live on herbs and grasses—here they give me grass and clover, too. My nose isn't straight—it is what you would call an oddly shaped nose.

"My knees are peculiar and my hips aren't at all beautiful.

"My tail is like the tail of a horse except that it ends off in white.

"I have ugly hairs on my back and around my face and so, as I am thoroughly ugly and thoroughly odd—I am most interesting."

"I'm the best-looking of the three," said the White-Bearded Gnu.

None of them, however, were good-looking and their expressions were cross and mean. They looked like peculiar and very ugly horses.

"I have horns, too," said the White-Tailed Gnu, "and my great, great grandfather was just like me—or I am just like him.

"He used to get so bored with the people who stared at him. He didn't raise any objection to being in the zoo—hardly any of us do for that matter—but he was very much bored all the time.

"My great, great grandfather," said the White-Bearded Gnu, "used to travel with about forty or fifty of his companions in Africa just like the buffaloes have done in America, I am told.

"He was a wild one—my great, great grandfather."

"Now that you've both had your say," remarked the Blue or Gray Gnu,

"There's Myself," Said the White-Tailed Gnu.

"let me say that I and my family hold the record for being the meanest, crossest of all the Gnu families.

"We're all a cranky lot.

"We don't feel much crankier here than when we were in the wild, free state, but we won't be petted.

"Nor do we make friends with anyone—not even the keeper.

"And I'm the leader when it comes to crankiness. My keeper says I have the meanest disposition."

"You're just mean enough, too, to brag about it," said the White-Tailed Gnu.

"But what care I?

"The life of a Gnu is a dull affair, anyway. There is no special reason for having Gnu families in the world.

"Anyway, I think everything is so dull, so stupid and so boring that I rather like to be mean, too.

"It's the only thing which gives me any amusement in life."

And the others all agreed with this sentiment. For—

The Gnu,
The Gnu,
Is all of a Dull blue
Sometimes gray,
Sometimes white,
And a sad-
Looking sight.
The one that's white
Is not all white,
But even so,
Is a sad-
Looking sight.

Bring Back the Key

"I told you to be in by ten," said the angry father.

"Yes, daddy, but I'm only a quarter of an hour late," replied his daughter.

"I give you a liberty and you abuse it," stormed the old man. "As a punishment you will go to your room at once, lock yourself in, and bring me the key."—Peabody Star.

GADSDEN BRIDGE CONTRACT LET

STRUCTURE WHICH WILL SPAN COOSA RIVER TO COST $353,040—$900,000 OF ROAD CONTRACTS LET

Montgomery.—Road and bridge contracts aggregating nearly $900,000 were awarded by the State Highway Commission at its recent session.

The largest item in the contracts was the big bridge over the Coosa River at Gadsden, contract for which went to C. C. Kershaw, of Birmingham, for $353,040.

Contract for 20.75 miles of sand clay road in Houston-Geneva Counties between Dothan and Hartford was awarded to J. E. Speight, of Florala, for $113,396.67. This award was conditioned upon rights of way being obtained, some opposition to the building of the highway on the location selected having been voiced by citizens.

Contract for six miles of gravel road in Bullock County, between Union Springs and Fort Davis, went to Cay Andrews Company, of Americus, Ga., for $88,412.

In Lamar County 13.88 miles of gravel road between Guin and Sulligent was let to Nixon and Phillips, of Linesville, $158,045.93, and for concrete bridges to S. J. Cummings and Company, of Gadsden, for $35,703.18.

Contract for 10.06 miles of gravel road in Pickens County, between Carrollton and Aliceville, went to Finnell and Toothaker, of Tuscaloosa, for $103,658.73.

The commission awarded to J. W. Gwin, of Birmingham, for approximately $35,000 the contract for a road about five miles long in Lawrence County from Moulton south.

The commission heard from a delegation from Lowndes County interested in a road from Lowndesboro to Haynesville, Mt. Willing Bragg and the Wilcox County line. The commission agreed to build this road, or such part of it as may be built provided sufficient funds are on hand after giving each county its minimum quota of $300,000 as provided by law.

A delegation appeared from Wilcox County to protest the location of the road near Kimbrough. The commission upheld the location fixed by the engineers in this case.

Selecting Dairy Breed Important

Good Individuals Should Have First Consideration of Dairyman.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Good individuals of whatever breed is selected should have first consideration by the man about to launch himself into the dairy business, says the United States Department of Agriculture. As between breeds, there are three points that should be considered: (1) The breed that predominates in the locality where the new herd is to be located; (2) personal preference, and (3) market requirements for the product.

Number of Advantages.

There are a number of advantages to a dairyman in having the same breed as his neighbors, says the bureau of dairying of the department. A dairyman just starting with pure breds may feel that since his neighbors have one breed of cattle, he should get another breed so as to have a monopoly in the business of selling breeding stock. There is no question about the monopoly, says the bureau, but there would be no business to monopolize. It is difficult for an isolated small breeder to dispose of his stock to advantage, while if there are many breeders with the same breed, buyers are attracted to the locality because of the better chance to get the desired animals from one or more of the several breeders. Other advantages in having the same breed as the neighbors are the opportunity to exchange bulls, or to own good bulls co-operatively; to take advantage of breed sales of surplus stock, and lastly, the advantage of bringing the community together in other endeavors which usually result where there is but one breed.

Because a man will usually do best with a breed that he likes, it is well to give this personal preference the right of way when there is no other breed already established, providing, however, that just as high-quality animals are available in the preferred breed as in some other breed.

Market requirements for the product should not be overemphasized, says the bureau, for the reason that these requirements may fluctuate from one year to another, and obviously, the dairyman cannot change breeds with every change of market requirements.

Summing Up Matter.

In summing up the matter of which breed to select, the bureau says this point should be kept in mind—there are good cows and poor cows in all breeds, and, other things being equal, the breeder or dairyman who gets good individuals to begin with will have a good chance for success, no matter what breed he selects.

The several breeds recognized as dairy breeds in the United States are the Ayrshire, Brown Swiss, Dutch Belted, Guernsey, Holstein-Friesian, and Jersey. Although much alike in what is known as general dairy conformation, these breeds differ to some extent in certain characteristics. What these characteristics are, the factors to consider in selecting a breed, and the history and origin and development of the breeds, are questions of interest to both the beginner and the established breeder of dairy cattle. These topics are discussed in a new bulletin issued by the bureau of dairying as Farmers' Bulletin 1443.

A copy of this bulletin may be had free of charge, as long as the supply lasts, upon request, from the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington.

Good Fleeces and Lambs Are Always Profitable

Profitable sheep production depends largely upon the ability of the ewes in the flock to produce good fleeces and to raise strong, vigorous lambs. Proper feeding of the ewes prior to lambing and during the suckling period will go far toward insuring these returns.

Experiments at the Ohio Experiment station have shown that when the ewes are in good thrifty condition heavy grain feeding prior to lambing is unessential and does not increase the efficiency of the ration. A light grain allowance, however, is to be strongly recommended even though legume hay and corn silage make up a large part of the daily feed for the ewes. Fine wool breeding ewes fed one-third to one-half pound of grain per head daily in addition to legume hay and corn silage yielded strong lambs and had an abundant supply of milk.

After lambing, the grain allowance should be increased sufficiently to maintain the condition of the ewes as far as possible and to insure a good flow of milk. When the lambs have learned to eat grain, and they should always have a creep where they can eat without interference, the grain allowance of the ewes can be somewhat reduced without reducing the efficiency of the ration.

Diversity of Crops

A diversity of crops makes possible better utilization of farm labor and provides feed for live stock. In choosing the crops to be grown, only those that are of major importance should be included. Usually not more than five or six crops should be grown and these should be chosen so that they will provide labor throughout the season, give a cash crop, and provide feed for the live stock.

Boys Make Financial Success Raising Pigs

Club Members Sell for Breeding Purposes Only.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Four farm boys of East Baton Rouge parish, Louisiana, have placed hogs of improved type on 31 farms in their own parish in three years by means of the four gilts with which they started boys' club work. In addition, according to reports to the United States Department of Agriculture, they have sold breeding stock in eight neighboring parishes and an adjoining state.

These young stockmen, Hermon Alford, Archie Robinson, Rupert Johnson and Archie Fitzgerald, bought their gilts in 1922, obtaining money for the purchases on their personal notes, which were indorsed by their fathers and business men of the county interested in the boys' progress. One of the boys also bought a pure bred. With the aid of the agricultural extension agent who conducted the club, they began feeding and caring for their pigs by the best methods known in swine management. The young pigs responded by growing into strong, healthy hogs in record time. In 1923 the boys raised 62 pigs from their four sows. This year, too, the boar was shown at a number of fairs and won a state championship in open class. The 1924 season was equally successful. Because the club members are conscientiously following the advice of the extension agent and will sell for breeding purposes only the stock which comes up to a standard in type, they have established a reputation as a source of good hogs. Their butcher stock commands top prices because of its high quality.

The business side of the enterprise has also been successful. The boys were able to pay their notes promptly and have made a net profit of $1,018 from sale of stock, with a number of cash prizes in addition. Two of the older boys have entered the state agricultural college and are paying their expenses through their club work.

Buy and Sell Eggs and Poultry on Grade Best

The grading of both poultry and eggs is yearly becoming more important. Not so very many years ago hens sold for so much a dozen. Now the majority of dealers are discriminating between the hens of the egg breeds and those of the general purpose and meat breeds. They are paying a premium for the heavier meated fowls for the reason that they make a plumper and therefore a higher-priced carcass.

A good many people say that co-operative marketing is the reason for the added attention to grades. Others say that the regulations which have been advanced by the different departments of agriculture are responsible. Others say that the closer competition is making it necessary to buy on grade.

Perhaps all of these reasons are correct. At least all of them are partly responsible for the movement. However, there is still a good deal of confusion on account of grades not being standardized. The United States bureau of markets has worked out a system of grades which will no doubt help in standardizing the different grades as they are adopted.

The tendency to buy and sell on grade should receive the support of all poultry interests. A quality product always outsells a poorer product and the good stuff should not carry the burden of making a market for that of low grade that few care to buy.

Alfalfa Sown in August Should Be Seeded Alone

When seeded in August, alfalfa should be sown alone, that is, without a nurse crop. Whenever there is a sufficient amount of moisture in the soil at that time of year to cause rapid germination of the seed, it is easier to get a stand without interference from weeds than in the spring, whether the alfalfa be sown alone or with a nurse crop. Bear in mind, however, that the seed bed for alfalfa should be very thoroughly compacted. If stubble ground is plowed late in July or the first week in August for alfalfa, disk it thoroughly afterwards and follow with a harrow until a fine well-compacted surface has been secured.

orestry Condtiions Are Being Investigated in Ala.

May 30.—The State of Alabama is ng sampled to determine the forest conditions that have obtained the beginning of the year, says statement issued by the Commis- on of Forestry. The public often nders how reasonably correct fire tistics can be compiled in view of enormous acreage of forest land the limited amount of funds avail- le for forestry work. However, fair- close approximations can be made. es the statement, by the adoption of er methods.

The forest land area of the state is proximately 22,000,000 acres. This ovided into organized and unorga- d territory. The former comprises ut 4,000,000 acres included in fifteen restry Districts. These districts ve been laid out with the view to in- ding areas containing the highest portion of forest land and subject the greatest fire hazard. The re- aining 16,000,000 acres comprises a at deal of territory that ultimately e included in forestry districts, gether with much forest land lying scattered tracts, many of which in localities primarily agricultural character.

Forest fire statistics for the organi- d territory can readily be compiled h a high degree of exactness, since ch fire is examined in detail or the ood and an individual written re- rt prepared in each case by a ran- er inspector covering all of the ts necessary in determining just w has occured. Among other these orts show the exact location of the e, the time it started, the time it be- extinguished, the different kinds land it burned over and the acre- e of each, the total area of the fire different kinds of damage in flict- and the money value of each, the e of the fire, the method of ex- tion, the number of fire fighters d when the land was last previously ned over.

For the unorganized terriory, how- r, this method cannot be univer- ly applied since as yet there are no ular state forestry employees avail- le for covering this vast area in de- l. It is here that sampling the state es of great value. First the unor- nized areas are separated into defi- e hazard types. In each type cer- n representative townships are se- ted and agents of the Commission of Forestry cover each area of these n complete detail making direct exam nations and preparing individual re- orts upon each burn. By taking enough of these sample townships, and by basing the computations upon their average and their proportion of the whole area, the figures for the entire type are derived. At all times, however, close watch is kept for ex- ceptional cases and circumstances, and these are dealt with separately instead of being included in the averages.

This process is repeated in each of the various hazard types in the unor- ganized portions of the state. Mean- while observations are made from the railroads and the highways and other roads in order to make certain that the assumed representative areas really are such, and also for the purpose of locating exceptional cases. Over 300 correspondents in different portions of the state are written for information regarding their particular localities. By combining the facts derived from all of these methods of investigation, it is reasonably certain that the final figures fairly represent the actual conditions in the unorganized terri- tory. When these figures are combin- ed with those obtained from the regu- lar forestry districts, the total may be taken to represent very closely the conditions prevailing over the entire State.

Chevrolet People Will Maintain High Production

High automotive production will continue well through the second half of 1925 it is expected by R. H. Grant, sales manager of the Chevrolet Motor company, who has spent three months of the current year visiting in direct contact with Chevrolet dealers. His travels have taken him to most of the large cities and more than half the states.

"Demand for cars, which even be- fore this time last year was beginning to slacken, still remains strong," said Mr. Grant. "The sales peaks and de- pressions of former years are begin- ning to flatten out. The automobile has become a year 'round product, par- ticularly since the closed car grew to such favor. Seasonable variations in demand are becoming less marked.

"No one section predominates as a present or prospective market for au- tomobiles. Sales throughout the en- tire country reveal a gratifying steadi- ness and uniformity of demand. And improvements of the agricultural situa- tion, particularly in the Southwest where the drought has broken, indi- cates that thousands of farmer-pur- chasers will help sustain the demand during the latter part of the year.

It is not improbably that demand will increase slightly in the near fu- ture and then remain unchanged for some time, still at a comparatively high level. This possibility, however, will have slight effect upon production, es- pecially among the large companies.

"Production of the more popular cars during recent months has been unequal to demand with the result that manufacturers have been accumu- lating a reserve of unfilled order which they can meet only by steadily building automobiles. This is a favor- able and healthy condition for any business. It is a guarantee against abrupt production variations. Also, I benefits the dealers because immedi ate delivery of cars to waiting pur chasers permits a rapid turnover of capital.

"The race of the Chevrolet unfilled order list against recent record pro- duction strides augurs well for future sales. Chevrolet went into May with 35,682 unfilled orders. In spite of a large production schedule the amount of reserve orders was diminished but slightly, due to the number of new or- ders received."

PRESERVING MASTODONS AND THE ROADS

An interesting article in World's Work for March, written by Frede rick Alan Thompson, starts with mas todons in the prehistoric era as the basis of an article on modern road con- struction. Strange as this comparison may seem, the mastodon stuck in a pool of asphalt and preserved for thousands of years and the application of this water-tight everlasting material as a road covering, have much in com- mon.

Mr. Thompson says, "Through the ages * * * this seemingly deathless material has had many practical uses Now it affords luxurious pavements on 90 per cent of the famous thorough- fares of the world. Appius Claudius the Appian Way a great causeway of layers of stone three feet thick, be- cause he didn't know what a canny Scotch engineer named Macadam found out eighteen centuries later.

"Macadam's theory was simplicity it- self. He said that no matter of what structure you made a pavement, the earth must in the last analysis hold it up, and that the earth, dry and com- pacted, would ordinarily sustain any reasonable load; therefore, only a hell, if water-tight, was needed over the dry earth. He found that rock dust between angular broken stones, would, when set, form a mortar and thus cement the stones into a water- proof shell—and so the Roman three- foot road became a macadam six-inch road. But alas, for all his brains, the Scotchman had not foreseen the com- ing of the automobile which, in pass- ing, sucked up the precious rock dust and deftly prayed in over gardens and tech hundered curtains. Right here, asphalt came to the rescue. The grim tenacity of the clutch which held the mastodon as though he were a fly, bound tightly together the stones against rending by the juggernauts of [illegible] at the same time shed water like a duck's back.

"Water is a tireless, resourceful, cun ning enemy of roads; if a pavement is not waterproof, water penetrates it and softens the underlying earth. As- phalt is so flexible and resilient that the severe stresses set up by nature have no effect on its stability. This flexibility also allows the pavement to maintain contact with the underlying earth with its tremendous supporting power. A rigid material would be forced to bridge every shrinkage of earth foundation or break under the load."

Many states have taken advantage of the lesson taught by the mastodon stuck in the asphalt. They have used thousands of miles of well-packed old gravel and macadam highways and streets as the base for a waterproof covering of asphalt mixed with crush ed rock and rolled down under pres- sure. Such roads and streets have been in use many years. They were built at a minimum expense and have given a maximum of service and taxpayers have been saved millions of dollars.

FAIR JOURNALISM

Some worthwhile thoughts were in- corporated in the platform of the News-Herald of Ravena, New York over the signature, "The Editor." If newspaper men generally accepted most of its planks, certainly the pro- fession would be none the worse for the experience.

"I believe in my job. I hall at all times be fair to everyone in my com- munity, expecting frequently to be charged with being unfair. I shall not be afraid to champion the poor man's cause for fear of the wrath of the rich man. Nor shall I be afraid to stand by the rich man for fear of be- ing charged with having sold out to him. I shall respect and honor my pro- fession, believing that it is a high call- ing."

A newspaper editor who adheres to such a platform is learning something of the real responsibilities and joys of journalism.

CAUSE OF MERGERS

Railroad mergers are reported at frequent intervals now. The shining example, of course, is the merger of the several railroad lines almost per- fected by the van Sweringen brothers. There are many others, however. The other day announcement was made that the Illinois Central had acquired the common stock of the Gulf, Mobile and Northern railroad which, in the end, must mean either consolidation or a working agreement by which the two railroads can be operated with perfect understanding.

Several writers have sought to reach a conclusion regarding the reason for the mergers. They have made wide in- vestigations in an effort to determine why the railroads should enter into consolidations. One of the conclusions is that the federal government, through the policy now dominant at Washington, has invited big business to go the limit in America. This con- clusion is a reasonable one. The fed- eral government proposed the group- ing of railroads, which, in effect means the consolidation of railroads because railroads in a group would be expected to deliver business one to another. However, it does not appear that the ultimation of the federal government in- tended that the railroads should work out their own systems of groupings. The interstate commerce commission was given the duty of arranging the groupings. How will the commission will perform this duty remains to be seen. Decisions have been merely tenta- tive up to date. Recent announce- ments would indicate that owners of the stock of railroad lines are proceed- ing independently of the commission.

Mark Sullivan, well known writer, comes to the conclusion that the rail- road mergers result from the competi- tion of automobiles, which have taken awat much of the short haul business of the railroads. His article, published in periodicals which use his service, is interesting:

No one realizes until he comes in contact with it, the extent to which short haul passenger and freight traf- fic has gone to automobile trucks and busses. For 20 years the railroads have been law bound by state and nationa commissions. The automobile indus try being free from regulation has been resourceful and energetic. That industry was shrewd enough to get the public at public expense to build roadbeds which the automobile freight and passenger industry can use with- out any expense for original cost and upkeep. The only expense involved is a license.

The railroads build and maintain their own roadbeds on their own rig- hts of way. [illegible] the states use those taxes for building highways competitive with the rail- roads. The result is that short haul business has gone to the automobile to an extent that few dream.

The automobile, however, can do long haul business, so the country must depend on the railroads and it is imperative that the railroads become big units and long haul institutions.

The conclusion appears to be a de fense of the policy of the railroads it effecting the consolidations. There are cases wherein consolidations will re- dound to the public good. Each propo- sal for a consolidation must be given particular consideration. However, it would appear that the best method of establishing equable competition be- tween the railroads and the automobile trucks and buses would be by the reg- ulation of the latter rather than the re- moval of the regulations imposed on the former.

A public service corporation, what- ever its nature, receives special favors A railroad is assured by its franchise that it will not face the competition of a parallel line when such competition is not justified by the business available. Furthermore, it is assured of an earn- ing capacity that will be great enough to pay the cost of operation plus a reasonable return on the money in- vested by the stockholders. It is be- cause of special grants and favors that the law puts into the hands of a commission the power of regulation.

[illegible] is the duty of the law-making body to put into the hands of a com- mission the power of regulation of the competing organizations. There is convincing argument in support of it. The people put up the money for the highways. The automobile passen- ger and freight industry obtains the greatest benefit. It incurs no initial cost save the purchase of its automo- biles. Railroads must go to a great expense before they can earn a penny Railroads must establish their own roadbed. The automobile passenger and freight industry uses the roadbed financed by all the people.

Let us take into consideration a Le- cal case. The other day announce ment was made that a passenger bus line would be established between Bir- mingham and Montgomery. It will use the state highway. The Louisville and Nashville railroad runs parallel to the highway. The bus line will compete with the railroad. Yet, under Alabama law, the railroad is subject to regula- tion by the public service commission while the bus line will be unregulated. The heavy investment of the railroads and the regulatory statutes are such that they must make ample provisions for the payment of all claims, includ ing those resulting from accidents. The law now imposes no obligation on bus line. A bus line, having no great investment, can quit business after an accident, thus avoiding an obligation to pay. A railroad cannot.

The regulation of the automobile freight and traffic industry, that is, the industry which seeks to make money in the transportation of freight and passengers in competition with the railroads, ought to be directed by the commission that is charged with th duty of regulating other public utili ties. The duty of enacting such regu lation as will provide for this regula tion falls upon the legislature.

DO YOU KNOW?

That 21,000,000 letters went to the Dead letter office last year?

That 800,000 parcels did likewise?

That 100,000 letters go into the mail yearly in perfectly blank envelopes?

That $55,000 in cash is removed an- nually from misdirected envelopes?

That $12,000 in postage stamps is found in similar fashion?

That 3,000,000 in checks, drafts and money orders never reach intended owners?

That Uncle Sam collects $92,000 a year in postage for the return of mai sent to the Dead Letter office?

That it costs Uncle Sam $1,740,000 yearly to look up addresses on misdi- rected mail?

That 1,000,000 letters are given this service, and—

That it costs in one city alone $500,0 0, i, ?

And do you know?

That this vast sum could be saved and the Dead Letter office abolished if each piece of mail carried a return address, and if each parcel were wrap ped in stout paper and tied with strong cord?

MORAL: Every man knows hi own address if not that of his corre- spondent. PUT IT IN THE UPPER LEFT HAND CORNER!

A letter, postcard, parcel or news paper, entering the mails is simply a [illegible]

If, because of inadequate or incor rect address, and, in the case of the package—improper wrapping—a piece of mail must be taken out of the regu lar postal machinery for "director service" or "hospital service", it b comes a nixie.

If the postal sleuths are able to cor rect the address, or return to sender in better one, it again becomes a piece of mail—though "delayed mail" is the better sobriquet.

If, after an exhaustive effort, the postal "detective" must give up the puzzle, and there is no return address, the piece of mail is consigned to the Dead Letter office, where it again changes its name to dead letter or dead parcel, as the case may be.

Its period of existence as a nixie is the most expensive one. It demands special attention from the very best clerks. Valuable time is spent in its be half, time which also may prove in- costly to the mailer or intended recipi ient through the attendant delay.

But in the long run, the postal ser vice loses most. In Chicago 400 work ers do nothing but handle nixies. In New York the service costs $500 daily in all the nixie costs the government about $1,740,000 a year.

There is something of sacredness about the contents of a letter. The writer often reveals more of himself on the written page than he would in direct conversation. This revelation of course, is designed only for the eyes

In this country a wholesome respect has been built up for the sanctity of a letter but it is not so respected in many countries where the opening and reading of sealed mail becomes, at times, so prevalent that the practice has earned the appelation "cracking seals."

The average American would be filled with wrath and the timid soul would shrink with horror at the thought of a third person, and a stranger at that reading his "personal correspondence."

Yet, that is exactly what happens to 21,000,000 letters a year and will con- tinue so long as letter writers fail to put return addresses on their envelopes.

When a letter, without a return ad- dress, can not be delivered for any reason it is sent after a time to the Dead letter office.

There it is opened and read—not for the possible scandal it may contain— but with a view to finding some clue which will enable forwarding on to the addressee or returning to the sender.

Out of every five letters received at the Dead Letter Office such a clue is found in one and it is sent merrily on its delayed way to one or the other of the two persons most interested in its disposition. The other four are des- troyed.

Every person knows his own ad- dress and if he would put it on the en- velope, the contents would remain in- violate and the letter would be returned with notice of non-delivery.

Not only that but the Dead Letter Office and all its attendant expense would go out of business because less than one letter in a hundred reaching that institution contains a return ad- dress.

FARMS AND FACTORIES ALIKE

Spurred by merorable necessity, cot- ton manufacturers have been going over their operations determined to find every short cut to efficiency.

Farmers got less money per pound last year, though total crop was enough greater to bring more money. Cotton acreage this year is expected to be even greater than last; the De- partment of Agriculture forecast is for an increase in every farm crop, except potatoes and flax. A decrease in cost of production on the farm is as vital as a decrease in manufacturing costs, if farm operators hope to make mon- ey.

PROPER UTILIZATION WOULD SAVE MILLIONS

National Lumber Manufacturers' Association declares that the forests of the country are robed of $140,000- 000 worth of wood every year, by an unnecessary insistence on long boards for building. The waste in forest and mill, and on the building job, is declar- ed due solely to a misunderstanding which demands long boards where shorter lengths would serve as well and would save waste all the way from the forest to the finished house.

Good lumbering and marketing calls for the utilization of the whole tree The buying public should co-operate with the mills in this matter as an aid to forest conservation.

I wish to state to my friends and patrons in this county that there is a man by the name of T. E. Grier going over the county selling Singer sewing machines, and, I understand from a number of my friends, that he is making the statement that the Singer Machine Company is letting me out and that he has been sent here to take my place.

I want to say to my friends and patrons if he made this statement, that it is entirely without any foundation whatsoever, and that it is a baseless and malicious falsehood. I further wish to state to my friends who are contemplating buying a Singer sewing machine that I have just received a new shipment to- day, June 1st, and I will get in another shipment next week. I will also have a car load of machines to reach me about July 15th for fall delivery. TAKE STOCK

Periodically the managers of every successful business must check their assets and their liabilities to know where they stand. What is good for a business is good for a government.

The people of this nation are stockholders in the greatest business in the world, namely, the United States government.

Private business must constantly be on the alert to prevent bad accounts accumulating on its books. Failure to do this has wrecked many otherwise promising institutions. The people of this country must be diligent to keep bad accounts (illadvised legislation, exorbitant taxation, public officials and legislators with radical and visionary ideas) from clogging or destroying the machinery of government. Just as bad debts will wreck a business, so will exorbitant taxation, radical legislation and unbalanced public officials wreck a government.

It is well to take stock of ourselves six months after the last presidential election. Excitement of the political campaign is passed and all new public officials are in office. The nation has actually settled down to the first normal period of activity since the first gun was fired in the world war eleven years ago. We have what every other nation in the world is striving to secure, namely, sound domestic and financial conditions under a stable form of government.

Yet we have in this nation today public officials, teachers and professional lecturers who would, if they could, undermine the sound basis on which we are operating and substitute in its place obstructive ideas which have destroyed the stability, safety and progress of some of the world's leading nations.

That the people of this nation do not wish to see any experimental program adopted was made very evident at the last election. But the work of the agitator never ceases. Hence, our public officials and private citizens must be ever on their guard to prevent liabilities accumulating in the affairs of our government just as the managers of private business are constantly on their guard to prevent liabilities creeping into the affairs of private enterprise.

What a great thing it would be if when our national congress reconvenes, it would devote itself more largely to the affairs of government and less to the affairs of private citizens and private business than it has during recent years.

Never before in the history of the United States was the labor situation in such a healthy condition. Hours are reasonable and wages are good. We have legislation covering practically every phase of business activity. The workman is protected. The public is protected. Industries are protected from unfair competition. Labor and capital are actually working in close harmony, and workmen through the purchase of the stocks and securities of the industries which employ them are sharing in the profits or losses of such enterprises.

Who is to be benefited by any program which would tend to unsettle such a satisfactory status? The people of this nation, as a unit, should demand that government business be conducted along safe, sane and normal lines without the disturbing influence of uncalled for experimental measures and policies which tend to destroy the perfect balance which this country is maintaining today in its domestic relations.

An inventory of our national affairs will show that we are in a sound condition and with proper management we should continue in the same situation for an indefinite period into the future.—The Manufacturer.

THE FARMER'S CHIEF COMPETITOR

A group of farmers and business men from a leading dairy state recently were considering the advisibility of running an educational train through the states of Missouri and Kansas to awaken interest in dairying.

The motive behind this movement was to increase the sale of dairy cow of which the state in question had surplus. A fair enough motive provided the farmers back of this movement and those they represent have really considered the full effect of their actions.

If farmers of the dairy state have too many cows it means they want to sell cows which are not good enough to make a profit even under their expert management, or that the dairy business in that state has reached a point where it cannot be further expanded profitably. The remedy for such a situation is the same, the sale of the surplus cows to some one else. At least that is the sort of remedy we have been applying to similar farm situations as they have arisen in the past.

But is such a remedy sound? What manufacter of shoes in the East would assess himself a good round sum to help defray the expenses of a campaign to stimulate the establishment of shoe factories in Kansas City, Topeka, Wichita and Oklahoma City even if in so doing he stood a chance to sell these beginners some shoe machinery he didn't need? In the end some of these factories would be going concerns, making shoes that would compete with the products of his factory. Would it not be more profitable to junk the surplus machinery than to make it the instrument of further competition? Just so with the northern dairyman. The farmers they want to help put in the dairy business in the Southwest will be making butter to go on the market at a time when the market may be saturated. Would it not be better to send the cows they cannot milk profitably to slaughter than for the sake of a small profit from the sale of these cows to run the risk of overstimulating the business in which they are specialists?

It may be said that the bringing of cows from Wisconsin or Michigan to Missouri or Kansas will not change the total dairy output. But the farmers of Missouri and Kansas will not limit their milking activities to cows brought from these states. Once they set themselves to milking cows that now are merely raising calves.

The breeder of purebred beef cattle often figures he has made a good turn when he has sold a bull and a few cows and heifers to a beginner in the purebred business. He fails to consider in this reckoning that it is these beginners whose products break the purebred market. True the breeder is prompted by an altruistic motive, the bettering of the condition of the farmer who has been induced to raise purebred stock. But an equally altruistic motive and one capable of much more general application is the [illegible] bred sires in the improvement of their grade stock. This would also protect the purebred business against periodic depressions in which the beginner, the man of small means and of limited experience, is invarably the chief sufferer.

Take it all in all, the farmer is the only producer who is willing to go out of his way to encourage others to produce the same things he is turning out. If a farmer by reason of his experience and keen observation has discovered some short cut in production or some means of insuring a more abundant harvest, he will gladly tell his neighbors and all others of his secret processes. The farmer is the only operator of whom this is true. How long the farmer can maintain this generous attitude toward his neighbor and toward the world, time alone will tell. It is unfortunate that the economic soundness of this fine spirit of the [illegible] in question. But, stripped of all its sentiment, we cannot fail to realize that the farmer's chief competitor is himself.—H. J. Waters in Kansas City Star.

ORDERS A WHOLE TOWN TO MOVE

Cheyenne, Wyo.—The town of Lavoye literally was wiped off the map of Wyoming Friday and its 1,500 residents deprived of their homes.

The cause was of ruling of Federal Judge T. Blake Kennedy, who ordered the removal of the village and its populace to make a clear path for a giant of industry—petroleum.

Public buildings, business houses, homes—everything—must go, for Judge Kennedy decreed that the Ohio Oil Company, which leased the land on which the town is situated from the government, for oil development, is entitled to full possession in sixty days.

The decision means if any sign of the town is left in sixty days those responsible will be subject to citation for contemp of court.

Lavoye is a modern incarnation of the typical boom mining town of the old West.

The town is in the heart of the big Salt Creek oil field, forty miles north of Casper.

Its buildings are flimsy and can be demolished easily. It is expected the business interests of the town will be [illegible] inferred mostly to Salt Creek, a [illegible]

The townsite was filed upon in 1920 by Louis Lavoye and allowed to stand through an error of the [illegible] Wyo., land office. The land [illegible]sly had been withdrawn from entry as mineral land.

WE ARE CARELESS ABOUT THEIR MAILING

Offenses against good mailing practices are not confined entirely to the average man who mails only his yearly quota of 112 letters, Postmaster General New declared today in con[illegible]on with his better mailing cam[illegible]

The business man, who is naturally expected to take every precaution in the interest of intelligent communication with his clients or customers, often falls woefully short in providing adequate safeguards for the efficient delivery of his mail.

It is true that comparatively few business letters reach the Dead Letter Office [illegible] business man learned long ago to have his return address printed on his envelopes if only for its accruing advertising value.

There are firms, however, that purposely leave off return cards when [illegible] out circulars and advertising [illegible] They seek this method o[illegible] curious recipients to examine letters which otherwise might be consigned unopened to the waste basket.

But "Business"—meaning letters requiring directory service before delivery can be effected—comprised largely of business letters, and this service costs the Post Office nearly two million dollars yearly.

The practice of buying sales lists—usually antiquated ones—for advertising soliciting through the mails is especially prolific of nixies. The owners of such lists seldom attempt to keep them current although the Post Office will furnish clerks to revise such lists at the nominal charge of 65 cents an hour.

Advertisers in newspapers, magazines and elsewhere often fail to specify their own street addresses. Answers, therefore, particularly where the advertiser is located in one of the larger cities, just as frequently are returned to the senders.

"That's a penny-wise and pound foolish policy," Mr. New said. The return of one letter marked 'Not Found' will do the advertiser more harm in the town from which it came than he can repair with many thousand dollars worth of advertising.'

The person to whom it is returned will give him plenty of advertising, but it will be of the wrong kind."

Almost as foolish is the firm—and there are many of them—which fail to carry its complete address, including street number, city and state, on its letter heads and other stationery, particularly, order blanks.

A MUNICIPAL VOCABULARY

The New York Times of May 6 ridicules the undignified and even child-like policy which New York City public officials have of belittling slandering and calling each other names while carrying on the affairs of that great city. It says:

"How pale, in comparison with the vocabulary in which most of the business of this imperial city is being conducted, are the word resources with which the state and the nation must get along. An ambassador armonishes the Europeans, but refrains from mentioning names and is content to let the cap rest where it fits. There is no such weakness in the municipal lexicon of New York City. Always it is this man Smith, this crook Robinson, this double-faced hypocrite and liar Jones, this Dick Turpin Brown, this fool, this miscreant, this lost soul, this foreigner. In the matter of cap fitting, local authorities leave nothing to chance. They rush out, grab the victim by the neck and slam the headgear over his eyes, supplimenting the action with appropriate invocation.

"If ever the city administration [illegible] of municipal ownership and operation, it might begin with a municipal fish market. That vocabulary is already at hand."

The Times comment shows the great danger inseparable from public ownership—the management is generally one of words rather than one of action and results.—Industrial News Record.

NATIONAL MINORITIES IN EUROPE

Reference has already been made in The Christian Science Monitor to the increasing political influence of national minorities in Europe. So far the only national minorites which are thoroughly organized are the Germans, and a few figures will serve to show to what extent this organization is already diminishing the importance of frontiers, and hence the dangers of wars. It is quite possible that from the European point of view the fact that, by the treaties of peace, more than 10,000,000 Germans have been compelled to change their nationality will make war less probable rather than more probable. This is, of course, due to the existence of the minorities treaties.

There are in Czechoslovakia 3,800,000 Germans, in Poland 1,700,000 in Russia 1,500,000, in Rumania800,000, in Jugoslavia 700,000,in Hungary 600,000,in Italy 230,000, in Lithuania and Memel 180,000, in Latvia 65,000, in Denmark 30, and inEstonia 25,000. The Germans in Alsace-Lorraine are not to be counted, since their German nationality and origin are not specfically recognized by France.

In a few cases, and notably inRussia these minorities have not a definite program, but on the whole they are now combining on a common campaign, the main object of which is to obtain that autonomy which, they feel should be assured to them by the minorities treaties. If other countries would adopt laws similar to the Minorities Autonomy Law recently passed in Estinia, irredentism in Europe would practically disappear, and the fact that the minorites, although loyal subjects of the country under whose rule they have been placed, still keep in close cultural contact with the country of their origin, would reduce the importance of frontiers to a secondary issue. Futhermore, such a development is not so improbable as it might sound, as several European statesmen are busy preparing similar autonomy laws. Two of these may be mentioned. Mr Thugutt, the Vice-Premier of Poland, and Mr. Davidovitch of Jugoslavia. Mr. Benes' recent references to the German minority in Czechoslovakia also seem to point to an extremely important change in the internal policy of Czechoslovakia.

The Germans have now seventy-two deputies and thirty-seven senators in Czechoslovakia, seventeen deputies and five senators in Poland, ten deputies and four senators in Rumania six deputies in Jugoslavia, six in Latvia, three in Estonia, two in Italy and one in Denmark. That is to say, except in Russia and Hungary, German minorities have now some small say in the governments of their new countries.

Progress in a movement such as this is naturally slow for in the past countries have endeavored to obtain the loyalty of minorities by oppression of every kind, and many years may elapse before they an realize that the surest way of obtaining loyalty is by abolishing those hardships which encourage irredentist movements. Nevertheless, it is easy to see how great may be the political influence of minorities. Jugoslav oppression of Austrian minorities, for example, may be hindered by the recollection that there are Jugoslav minorities in Austria. Already on several occasions Polish minorities in Germany have brought pressure to bear on the Polish Government, in favor of better treatment of German minorities in Poland, and vice versa. Throughout Europe the recent Estonian Autonomy Law has given hope to those masses of people whom the territorial provisions of the treaties [illegible]

Perennial War Begins To Rout Mosquitoes and Other Pests

"The time to fight mosquitoes and flies is when they are in the egg or larva stage, not after they have matured. An ounce of prevention will do the work of many fly traps and mosquito bars," declares Dr. J. Allen Patton, of Newark, N. J.

"Preventive work in the spring will wipe out the breeding places," says Dr. Patton, who is the medical director of the Prudential Insurance Company," and will, to a large extent, eliminate those menaces to the public health."

The house fly feeds and breeds on every kind of filth, and is a remarkably efficient carrier of disease. It specializes in typhoid, dysentery, Asiatic cholera and other diseases, including tuberculosis. Swatting the fly is an effective and able means of annihilating the full grown pest, but not so effective in the end as preventive measures. For it is much easier to clear away the potential breeding place for a million flies than it is to swat or catch that million after they have grown to a lively maturity.

Filling in and draining are the two most effective means of eliminating mosquito hatcheries. Where these are not practicable the periodic use of coal oil to form a film on the surface of the water is advisable.

Community effort is necessary in any campaign against the housefly or mosquito. It is not sufficient that your own stable and garbage pail are not fly incubators, and that you have no stagnant water in your yard to hatch mosquitoes. Your neighbors also must see that their yards are in condition, else your own efforts will have been wasted and they will share with you their mosquitoes and flies.

Use of Oil Enormous

In 1924 the world production of oil amounted to more than 1,000,000,000 barrels, the nearest exact figure being 1,013,139,000 barrels. In five years the world output has nearly doubled. United States produced 714,000,000 of the total number of barrels and Mexico was second with 139,000,000 barrels. Russia being third with 45,182,000 barrels. Persia, Dutch East Indies and Rumania follow in order with Venezuela showing great strides in production also.

FARM POULTRY

FIND WEED IS CAUSE OF "GRASS EGGS"

Presence of the common weed known as shepherd's purse (Capsella bursa-pastoris) in pasture of laying hens is responsible for a peculiar condition in the eggs known to the egg buyer as "grass egg," "alfalfa," or "green rot," investigations by Prof. L. F. Payne of the Kansas State Agricultural college poultry department indicate. Professor Payne's account of the investigations is contained in Poultry Science.

"Grass eggs" were especially prevalent on the market last spring. Professor Payne observed, but no explanation could be offered by buyers or flock owners.

In less than a week after the hens were given free range in the garden in the spring, eggs from the flock kept by Professor Payne at his home developed dark yolks so strong in flavor that they could not be relished. Professor Payne discovered that the birds were eating freely of shepherd's purse, which grew in profusion in the garden. Several flocks of chickens from which a large percentage of eggs offered for sale had dark or olive-colored yolks were located through a Manhattan shipper. These flocks were examined, and it was found that they were eating the same weed.

Experiments then were instituted at the college poultry farm. One pen of hens that had not received green feed in any form the previous five months was placed on wheat pasture and another pen on pasture containing shepherd's purse.

"The eggs from the hens that had had shepherd's purse ad libitum began to show dark yolks in four days, while yolks from the wheat pasture hens developed a dark color, but did not, within two weeks, develop the olive color," Professor Payne wrote. "Subsequent experiments were conducted in which three pens of hens that had not received green feed in any form for five months previous to the test were used. Pens one, two, and three were given a liberal supply daily of fresh alfalfa, penny cress (Thlaspi arvense), and shepherd's purse respectively. Other hens on the poultry farm were fed green sprouted oats daily. The yolks from the alfalfa and sprouted oats pens continued normal, but olive-colored yolks were found in both the penny cress and shepherd's purse pens."

Professor Payne suggests two preventive methods—either keep the hens confined until there is a variety of green feed available, or supply them with wheat or rye pasture or sprouted oats throughout the winter so they will have no desire to "fill up" on these particular weeds.

Use for Trap Nests

A trap nest is a laying nest so arranged that after a hen enters it she is confined until released by the attendant.

When possible it is advisable to trap-nest the layers for the following reasons:

1. To tame the birds, thereby tending toward increased egg production.

2. To furnish definite knowledge concerning traits and habits of individuals.

3. To furnish the only satisfactory basis for utility or other breeding.

4. To eliminate the nonproductive hen.

5. To add mechanical precision to judgment and experience in developing and maintaining the utility of a flock.

For further information and plans showing the construction of a trap nest, send to the Department of Agriculture at Washington, for Farmers' Bulletin 682, "A Simple Trap Nest."

Poultry Hints

Hens in the laying houses and barn yards need a lot of green feed.

Brooders permit the production of early broilers, which is one of the most profitable phases of the industry.

Late chicks are hard to raise and slow in maturing. Such chicks are easy prey to diseases, and robbers of the roost in many ways.

Get the brooder in condition before putting in the chicks. Disinfect it well and start it some time before the chicks enter it. The house must be warm and dry, and preferably on fresh, clean location.

Thousands of worthless producers get their "start" during the batching and brooding season.

Toe-mark the chicks soon after they are hatched. This fixes their age and classification. Do a neat job with a sharp punch and keep away from the foot bones.

• • •

Give the young chicks a chance to dry off and get their "sea legs" before putting them into the brooder, and be careful not to chill them while making the transfer.

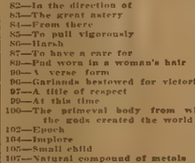
Solution of Last Week's Puzzle.



HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, latinisms, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

Blind People's Sense of Touch Gets Tired

Touch the second sense the blind turn to (after hearing), has been perhaps most in the spotlight, but at the same time easily the most overrated of all the senses they utilize. First of all, it has a fatigue factor second only to smell, as tactile reading, its most conspicuous application, demonstrates.

Apparently, it should be as easy to read lines of embossed characters with the finger tip as it is lines of printed characters with the eye, once the alphabet is mastered. But it is not. Touch simply tires out.

In my own case (and I have been reading by touch 13 years), says Charles McGee Adams in the Atlantic Monthly, two hours is the extreme limit for continuous reading and long before that the end organs are so irritated and there is such a general restlessness that it is most difficult to proceed.

The general usefulness of touch is also limited by the fact that it is a motor sense; by which I mean that the fingers must be moved over the surface of an object, instead of merely brought in contact with it, if an impression is to result. Many of the seeing show they are not aware of this when they simply place the hand of a blind person on an object.

Reach, too, sets, sharply defined bounds to touch's perspective, often resulting in a warped or fragmentary concept of an object, as Kipling's story of the six blind men and the elephant aptly illustrates. It is quite impracticable to touch many objects such as moving machinery, hot metal or live wires, at all—which restricts the usefulness of the sense still further.

Preserving Book Bindings

The bureau of standards advises that the application of a thin coating of egg albumen to the leather binding of the books will prevent decay. The use of ammonia for diluting and preserving the solution should be avoided, but the whites, after a thorough beating, may be made antiseptic by the addition of a small quantity of camphor, thymol or some essential oil. Vaseline is also satisfactory in some cases as preservative for leather book binding.

THE CHURCH AT ANTIOCH

LESSON TEXT—Acts 11:19-30

GOLDEN TEXT—The disciples were called Christians first in Antioch.—Acts 11:26

PRIMARY TOPIC—Some People Who Received a New Name

JUNIOR TOPIC—Barnabas in Antioch

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Lessons From the Church in Antioch

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Secret of a Growing Church.

Saul, the new missionary, who was to lead in the evangelization of the heathen, having been miraculously called to his work, it was necessary that a new religious center be established. Antioch became that center.

I. Preaching the Word of God at Antioch (vv. 19-21).

Persecution at Jerusalem scattered the disciples abroad. Some went among the Jews only with the gospel message, while those from Africa and Cyprus courageously crossed the line and preached to the Greeks also. The Lord blessed their work in granting many conversions. So great was the stir that the news reached Jerusalem, the mother church. Persecution worked for good in this case as well as in many since. These humble people with hearts touched with the Spirit went out with the glad message of life to others.

II. Barnabas Sent to Inspect the Work (vv. 22-26).

1. The Character of Barnabas (v. 24)

He was a good man. It is important in sending a man to follow up the work of the Spirit that his character be good. He must not only have an unblemished character, but his sympathy must be broad. He must be capable of entering in full appreciation of the things about him. Barnabas was full of the Holy Spirit. This is an essential qualification for pastoral work. Only a Spirit-filled man can discern the workings of the Spirit of God. He was likewise a man of great faith. Only a man of faith should instruct young Christians.

2. Work Done by Barnabas (vv. 23, 25, 26).

(a) He heartily endorsed the work and earnestly exhorted them to continue steadfastly in the faith, and to cleave unto the Lord. There are many allurements to tempt young Christians.

(b) He rejoiced over the work which had been done. This shows that Barnabas could rejoice over the successful work done by others.

(c) He brought Saul from Tarsus (v. 25).

He did more than merely inspect the work. Doubtless he preached also for many people were added unto the Lord. The work grew to such an extent that he brought Saul to help him. They labored together for a year with great success, and carefully taught the people. Believers, after they have confessed Christ, need careful teaching. Barnabas had the good judgment to seek Saul for this important work. It is the duty of church officials to seek out men and women who are qualified for the Lord's work, bringing them from their places of obscurity and setting them to work in the Lord's vineyard. Saul was a more important man than Barnabas. There are many men in obscurity who require a Barnabas to bring them forth.

III. The Disciples First Called Christians (v. 26).

They were not called by this name in derision as often asserted. Stifler well says, "What Luke intends to convey is that Saul and Barnabas taught in the church for a year and the disciples were first called Christians. The name was a consequence of the teaching." Green renders the passage thus: "And it came to pass with them that they were combined even for a whole year in the church, and taught much people, and that the disciples were first called Christians at Antioch." This distinctive title came through Divine guidance. It was owing to the teaching of Saul and Barnabas that this body called the church was given its unique standing and place. Let it be remembered that it was not given as a term of reproach but because of the close resemblance of the body to its head, Christ.

IV. Benevolence of the Church at Antioch (vv. 27-30).

They made up money for the poor saints at Jerusalem and sent it by the hands of Barnabas and Saul. The genuineness of the work at Antioch is proven by their good deeds. It was further emphasized in that there was no division between Jew and Gentile Christians. The Gentiles ministered to the Jews.

Treasures

Misfortune may whirl our material treasures from us; sorrow or sickness may canker them, turn them to ashes in the mouth. They are not ours; we hold them upon sufferance. But the treasures of the intellect, the gift of being upon nodding terms with truth, these are treasures that are our impregnable own.—A. S. M. Hutchinson.

Thousands of women have kidney and bladder trouble and never suspect it.

Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition, they may cause the other organs to become diseased.

Pains in the back, headache, loss of ambition, nervousness, are often times symptoms of kidney trouble.

Don't delay starting treatment. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a physician's prescription, obtained at any drug store, may be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions.

VIRGINIA HOME DEMONSTRATION MEETING

President Addressing Members of Varina Club.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The members of the Woman's club of Varina, Henrico county, Virginia, shown in the above picture are gathered for both business and pleasure at the home of the home demonstrating agent. The president or leader of the club is addressing the members, giving them the benefit of the special instruction she has received in the line of work the club is following. Many of the members of these clubs for rural women come long distances for the instruction and the social get-together afforded by the club, and evidently some of them have to bring the children along or they cannot leave home.

Home demonstration agents are part of the general extension system and are employed co-operatively by the United States Department of Agriculture and the state agricultural college of each state. They are trained home economics workers stationed in counties for the purpose of interesting farm women and girls in undertaking demonstrations in improving and beautifying their homes and home surroundings, and also for making available to farm women improved methods of homemaking. Thus they bring to the rural home the best findings of research and experience that will help the farm home to be more efficient, comfortable, healthful and enjoyable.

The home demonstration club program includes such farm home interests as foods and nutrition, clothing, sanitation, management, furnishing and decorating, farmstead beautification, fireside industries and community development, and frequently such productive activities as poultry raising, gardening and home dairying.

Funds for carrying on all co-operative extension work are provided jointly by the federal government, the individual states, and the counties in which agents are located. Communities interested in obtaining the help of a home demonstration agent should get in touch with the extension service of the state agriculture college.

TRAIN DAUGHTER TO CARE FOR HER ROOM

Thorough Cleaning Once a Week Is Essential.

Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.

The directions below for cleaning a room were prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture for the use of girls in "4-H" clubs, but they may be given by any mother to her daughters with effective results.

In addition to the daily tidying of the bedroom, it will need thorough cleaning at least once a week. Planning this work carefully beforehand will make it easier and will save time.

If you have a vacuum cleaner, both large and small rugs can be thoroughly cleaned on the floor without scattering dust; if not roll up small rugs and if possible take them out of doors for a thorough cleaning. Much dust and dirt is thus removed from the room and the rugs look fresher after being out of doors.

Dust the small articles on your bureau and table, pile them on the bed or a chair, and cover them with a cloth or paper.

Pin the curtains back if necessary, and open the windows at top and bottom.

If the walls are papered or covered with some finish that rubbing does not mar, clean them with a special wall brush or a broom, or floor brush covered with cotton flannel or other soft cloth, using light, overlapping strokes. Calcimine and other wall finishes are streaked by even light rubbing.

The floor should be cleaned next. If it is painted or varnished, sweep it with a soft brush, and dust with an oiled mop. Painted floors may also be wiped off occasionally with a damp cloth, but do not use strong soaps or scouring powders or too much water, for they will injure the paint. Matting should be swept with a soft brush and dusted with a dry mop or a soft cloth. Carpets and heavy rugs that cannot be taken out of doors, must of course be cleaned on the floor. In sweeping, hold the broom nearly upright and take short strokes in one direction and with the nap of the rug. Learn how to sweep so that you do not scatter dust any more than necessary.

While the dust is settling, wash the windows if they need it, and remove soiled spots on the woodwork and furniture. Finally, dust the furniture and woodwork thoroughly, and set the room in order.

Make Spider Corn Bread

1½ cupfuls cornmeal
2 cupfuls sour milk and 1 teaspoonful soda, or 1¾ cupfuls sweet milk and 2 teaspoonfuls baking powder
1 teaspoonful salt
1 egg
2 tablespoonfuls butter

The fat should be used to grease an iron spider. Cook the meal, milk, salt, and butter in a double boiler for about ten minutes. When the mixture is cool, add the well-beaten eggs, and the soda dissolved in one tablespoonful of cold water. Heat the spider, pour in the batter, and bake on the middle shelf of a hot oven. Or if desired the eggs called for in this recipe may be omitted and one-half cupful more milk used. Spider corn bread is cut into squares or sections like pie, and eaten hot with a fork, after splitting and buttering.

CHAMPIONSHIP WON BY A CLUB MEMBER

New Hampshire Girl Made a Total of 50 Articles.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Here's a record any girl might be proud of: Besides doing all the mending for a family of six during the past year, eighteen-year-old Dorothy Story, of Hopkinton, N. H., made a total of 50 articles, many of them dresses and other garments requiring a high degree of skill—and was awarded the championship in the girls' clothing clubs of New Hampshire, out of a total membership of 864.

The garments and other articles made by Dorothy are valued at $125. Every club member was required to make a wash dress, bloomers, and slip for herself, and was scored on her selection of other appropriate garments, such as hat, shoes, hose, and underwaist. Dorothy made 44 extra articles beyond what was required for completion of her year's club project. Her work was scored on such points as suitability of line, color, material, and style; workmanship, including cutting, making, cleanliness, and pressing; cost; and influence on others.

Dorothy has served as leader of the "All Around" club in her community for the past two years, and has given many demonstrations of 4-H clothing club work, as carried on under the direction of the United States Department of Agriculture and the state agricultural colleges. She conducted sewing meetings as well as the regular club meetings, and was one of the delegates sent by the club to the state camp, the county picnic, and the county round-up.

Nut Breads

Nut breads of various kinds never lose their popularity. They may be yeast breads or quick breads, made with white or graham flour, and may be baked in a loaf or in the form of muffins, gems, biscuits, or buns. The cakes and cookies with nuts mixed into them or used on top or in the filling are too numerous to describe. Because of their richness, chopped nut kernels, when added to a batter or dough mixture, may take the place of some of the fat ordinarily used.

DISHES FOR TWO

For desserts of fruit and jello it is easy to divide a package of prepared gelatin; using just half the quantity of water and half of the gelatin. To make the lemon jelly use the following:

Lemon Jelly. — Soak three teaspoonfuls of gelatin in one-fourth of a cupful of cold water, add one cupful of boiling water, one-fourth cupful each of lemon juice and sugar. Strain and pour into molds to harden.

Coffee Cream.—Soak two teaspoonfuls of gelatin in one-fourth cupful of cold water. Scald one-half cupful of cream, add one-fourth cupful of strong coffee and four tablespoonfuls of sugar. Pour while hot over the gelatin, strain, and set away to mold.

Stewed Veal.—Prepare one cupful of peeled quartered potatoes, three-fourths cupful of small whole mushrooms, and one-half cupful of sweet green peppers cut into stripes. Cut one and one-half pounds of veal from the shoulder into small pieces and flour with well-seasoned flour. Brown the vegetables and the veal in hot fat in an iron frying pan. Add salt to taste, paprika, celery salt, each one-eighth of a teaspoonful and one-half of a bay leaf. When well-browned and seasoned, add two cupfuls of boiling water, cover closely and simmer for two hours. Thicken with four tablespoonfuls of flour blended with two tablespoonfuls of milk, and cook 15 minutes.

Cheese Souffle.—Prepare a white sauce, using one tablespoonful of fat, the same of flour and one-half cupful of milk. When thick remove from the fire and add one-half cupful of finely chopped cheese, one egg yolk well-beaten and a dash of cayenne. Fold in the stiffly beaten white and turn into a buttered baking dish. Set in a pan of hot water and bake until firm.

Fish Balls.—Cook one cupful of diced potatoes and one-half cupful of flaked fish in boiling water to cover, drain very dry, add one teaspoonful of butter, one-half an egg and seasonings. Drop by spoonfuls into hot fat.

Summer Collations.

Patty shells and timbale cases when first used were pastry-filled with some sort of cream or custard, a sweet; now they are more often used as a savory and grace the most dainty luncheons as a meat dish.

The meat, fish or vegetable, whichever is used to form the principal ingredient for the filling, should be very finely chopped. A rich white sauce usually accompanies the meat mixture. Vegetables should be cooked, then rubbed through a sieve. Usually one-half cupful of vegetable is used to one cupful of meat. Some chefs prefer to pound the meat in a mortar, which makes it fine as paste. The white sauce is prepared by using one cupful of milk, two tablespoonfuls of flour and four of butter; cook gently till smooth and thick. The butter is melted, then the flour added and well-mixed, then the milk added slowly. To season add salt, a few drops of onion juice, a dash of cayenne, a blade of mace, or a little tomato catsup for zest. There should be just enough white sauce to moisten the other materials; next fold in a beaten egg, one to each cupful of sauce.

The timbale molds used to hold the above mixtures are of tin, either scalloped or plain. Pour the mixture into the molds which have been well-buttered, set in a pan on a paper surrounded with a little hot water. Bake until firm, turn out on a platter and garnish. Timbales may be either hot or cold.

Cream Dumplings.—Sift two cupfuls of pastry flour with three teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one-half teaspoonful of salt. Add enough thin cream to make a soft dough to drop from a spoon—about three-fourths of a cupful—sour cream with an eighth of a teaspoonful of soda stirred into it will give a most tasty flavor. Drop each dumpling on to pieces of meat to hold it up from the liquid and cover closely to steam. Cook about 12 minutes, depending upon the size of the dumplings. Dropped from a teaspoon, eight minutes is sufficient.

Ham Mayonnaise Timbales.—Cut the ham very fine, in distinct pieces; to each cupful add two tablespoonfuls of mayonnaise, mixing well. Soften a tablespoonful of granulated gelatin in three-quarters of a cupful of cold water—use this to two and one-half cupfuls of ham; place over boiling water until thoroughly melted. Season with salt and pepper and a few drops of tarragon vinegar. Cool almost to the congealing point, then add the ham, with a few capers, olives cut into slices, or hard cooked egg whites cut into designs. Mold and serve on paper doily. Garnish with beet rings, olives or egg whites cut into forms.

Several of the bandmen were injured slightly.

EARNING CAPACITY OF OUR ROADS

The Department of Agriculture es- timates that our country has between 450,000 and 475,000 miles of surfaced roads. The report calls attention to certain wrong ideas that are currant about road improvement.

"For the movement of every vehicle over a road, there is a certain cost, which is less if the road be improved than if it be left in a state of nature. Logically, therefore, the limit that should be placed on expenditures for road improvement is the amount that can be saved in vehicular operating costs. All roads should be improved to the maximum degree that their traf- fic justifies, but no road should be im- proved beyond its earning capacity."

Another mistaken idea is that there is such a thing as a permanent road. However, state highway departments now understand that all roads, regard- less of type, gradually depreciate and wear out under the wheels of vehicles and action of the weather.

Asphaltic types of road construction are probably the most permanent. They are waterproof and being elas- tic readily adhere to the earth's sur- face and do not crack. Because of their elastic charateristic they act as a cushion which absorbs the jarring effect produced by heavy motor ve- hicles moving at high speed.

CARELESSNESS WITH FIRE INEXCUSABLE

The fire demon is taking an increas- ing toll every year in this country, on account of careless folks in the moun- tains. They ride in comfortable auto- mobiles, throw smoking stubs of ci- gar and cigarettes into the brush and leave live coals in their campfires. Such habits are dangerous even in the city, where there are paved strets, tiled floors and electric stoves; but they are fatal to the future of our forest.

Fires swept over thousands of acres of timber land last summer and fall. The time of year is approaching again when such fires may be expected. Every citizen who goes into the moun- tains should have impressed upon his mind in some manner the tremendous fire responsibilities that rest upon him along the roads, trails and in the camps.

FOR SELF PROTECTION DURING THUNDERSTORMS

Milton, Mass.—About this season as the old almanacs used to say, expect thunder storms. Inevitably they bring danger to human life but the hazard can be diminished considerably if the advice of men who have made a thorough study of the electrical dis- charges of the atmosphere is followed.

One of these experts is Alexander C. MacAdie, director of the Blue Hill observatory and professor of meteoro- logy at Harvard university. In the little building on the wind swept summit of Blue Hill, the highest point in eastern Massachusetts and in the midst of the Blue Hill forest reservation, he has spent many years in watching and an- alyzing the action of the elements.

He has made a special study of thunder storms and some time ago he formulated a set of suggestions to help people take care of themselves during such disturbances. Since that time he says, experience has borne out the value of these suggestions and science has not developed any new means of safeguarding a person against light- ning discharges.

Get under cover is his first rule. If you can't do that, lie down. About ten lightning flashes in a hundred come down to earth in a straight line and the person who stands out in the open when such flashes are seen in- vites trouble. But getting under cover doesn't mean seeking shelter beneath a tree because that will bring you in the direct line of discharge and Pro- fessor MacAdie says more people are killed by lightning in this way than probably any other.

The doorway of a barn or a window near a chimney also are dangerous places to stand because lightning fol- lows to some extent any draft of air especially warm air. When the flashes are heavy or numerous keep away from chimneys, trees, flagpoles or met- al clotheslines, and cut out your ra- dio.

You are safer indoors than out. The liability of a person in an ordinary residence building being struck, says Professor MacAdie, is very slight and dwelling houses in city blocks are vir- tually safe. He defends the lightning rod, once so popular but now largely fallen into disuse, asserting that if a house is provided with good lightning rods there is little to fear.

Going to bed doesn't do any particu- lar good but standing on glass, rubber a woolen banket or any other good insulator will give a person a little more security. The observatory direc- tor advises passengers in a trolley car to sit still if lightning comes in and burns the fuses because with the roar and blinding flash the danger is over.

He urges that every effort be made to resuscitate a person struck by light- ning. It seldom kills outright, usually stunning the victim in such a way that artificial respiration will restore him to consciousness.

On Monday evening, June 8th, 1925 Mr. John R. Hammell passed into the "life eternal" and his mortal body was laid to rest at Shady grove next day. Mr. Hammell had been a mem- ber of Shady Grove Methodist church through a long tract of years, and his faith in God and love for the church of Christ was profound and abiding, something he could never let go.

He was a kind neighbor and always liberal in his contributions to the cau- of Christ. We can hear Mr Hammell saying now, as he often said, "I like to give to the church, I'm blessed in it and have more to give." And we believe that when the summon came he was sustained by that ame un- wavering faith in his God

FRUIT CROPS WILL BE SMALLER THAN LAST YEAR

Only fair crops of apples, peaches and pears are now expected in the United States this year Department of Agriculture crop officials declared to- day. Frosts in late May reduced pros- pects in many scattered sections, par- ticularly in some of the central states, Virginia, Michigan, and portions of New York.

The condition of apples on June 1 was nearly 10 per cent below the usual average on that date. The northwest- ern states expect more apples than were picked last year, but for the country as a whole the crop seems likely to be lighter, although much de- pends on the rainfall during the next few months.

Peach production shows a large in- crease in California where most of the crop is canned or dried, but in all other important states the crop is expected to be substantially smaller than last year. Even in Georgia, where many young trees are coming into bearing, the crop is expected to be less than 7,000,000 bushels compared with 8,333,- 000 bushels last year.

The pear crop is reported only fair this year, California alone among the important states expecting materially larger crop than in the preceding sea- son.

MISTAKEN IDEAS ABOUT COWBOYS

"An apology is due the cowboy. He has been slandered. He has been held up so long as a movie hero that we have all but forgotten that he is the backbone of one of America's greatest industries—the beef cattle industry. And as long as people eat beef we'll have cowsboys to rope, brand and handle the steers of the range."

That's the bombshell that "Tex" Austin, world-famous ranchman and the leading exponent of the rodeo in America, tossed into an eager crowd of reporters that greeted him on his return from the Wembley exposition in England where he staged the greates rodeo contest outside the United States The Chicago Roundup and World' Championship Rodeo, to be held in Chicago August 15 to 23 by the Chicago Association of Commerce, will be under the direction of "Tex."

"Entirely to many people have the [illegible] that cowboys don't exist except in the movies and on the stage, "Tex" told the newspapermen present. "In England and over here the impression is prevalent among many that the cowboy is merely a tool of the stage interests. The cowboy with his herds is just as important a part of our industrial life as the man who plants corn, the laborer in the factory, the lumberman, the business man in his store, the president of a bank, and certainly just as necessary. He is a product of certain conditions existing in the western country, and his part in the development of the country cannot be overestimated.

"Tex" then explained the habits and customs peculiar to the cowboy. "If a cowboy wears a big hat, a handerrhief around his neck, leather pants or high heeled shoes, don't think for a moment that there is anything theatrical about it; these things serve for him the same useful purpose that the apron does for workman, the robes for the Judge and the cassock and cotta for the minister. The big Stetson is needed for defence from the burning sun of the ranges, and serves as a sort of umbrella in wet weather. The handkerchief is a protection against dust when moving behind livestock in motion. The 'Chaps' serve to prevent injury to the rider's legs in a mishap and from sagebrush as well as from rain and cold wind. The high heels help keep his feet from going through the stirrup. In the same way, other parts of the cowboy's raiment can be explained strictly on the basis of use and not for decoration."

Cowboys taking part in rodeos are merely the best in their line of work, [illegible] examined. Those that will come to the Chicago Roundup hold the same relation to their profession as the major Leaguers hold to baseball, and should occupy the same place in the minds of the people as does a Babe Ruth or a Ty Cobb.

FERTILITY OF FARMS FIFTY YEARS HENCE

Who will be farming our land half a century hence and what will the yield be?

It is easier to estimate the yield fifty years from now than the personnel of the management. We can say this much regarding the productiveness of the land: It will depend definitely on how the land is farmed in the meantime. The meantime includes the period of our management quite as definitely as it does that of those who [illegible] We have experience in this case to guide us.

On the rich black corn land of Champaign county, Illinois, the college of agriculture of that state began a test fifty years ago this spring of cropping methods in their relation to soil fertility. The results are most significant. On that portion of the field in which corn has been grown year after year without change and without the use of any kind of manure the yield has fallen to less than twenty-five bushels an acre. Not twenty-five bushels for last year's crop, but as the average for the last twelve years. Where a simple rotation of corn, oats and clover was pursued the yield in the same field has been more than fifty-six bushels an acre for the same period.

Thus land grown continuously in corn for fifty years has produced in the last twelve years three hundred bushels of corn an acre. Similar land in the same period on which corn was grown only once in three years has produced a total of 224 bushels a acre. But in that period four crop of oats and four crops of clover have also been taken off the land. Who would doubt that four crops of oats and four crops of clover were not worth more than the equivalent of seventy-six bushels of corn.

Besides, the land has been plowed and cultivated every year in the one case and once in three years in the other. The crop had to be harvested by hand each year when corn alone was grown, whereas in two years out of three the harvest was gathered by machinery when a rotation was followed.

It may be said that this is an inopportune time to change our system of farming from one of continuous production of grain to one in which less corn is grown. The farmer, it may be said, is so depressed that it is necessary for him to continue to grow these exhaustive crops regardless of their effect on the land. But under a system of farming in which the acre yield is steadily declining, is the farmer's situation likely to improve?. Certainly a 12-year yield of twenty-five bushels of corn an acre from our best corn land, from land that is conservatively worth $200 an acre, will not soon place the farmer in better position to inaugurate new systems of cropping. The longer we delay this essential reform in our soil management the more inopportune the time will be to make the change.—Kansas City Star.

LETTING THE WORLD KNOW

Newspaper advertising is an accurate barometer of the progressiveness and enterprise of the community. The enterprise of the individual merchant by the extensiveness and quality of his newspaper advertising. The prosperity of the community depends upon the prosperity of its business and the prosperity of any business depends in great part upon advertising.

Merchants long ago learned the wisdom of inviting the buying public into their stores. From the merchant's experience communities have learned the value of inviting strangers to visit them. Through advertising the merchants and communities have succeded in attracting buyers and visitors.

To succeed in business one must have more than just something to sell. He must let the buying public know what he has for sale. Here again the community has learned somesthing from merchant and invites new citizens by apprising them of what it has to offer

But from the community the merchant has learned one of the secreth of advertising. The city or town seeking to expand its business and increase its population does not confine itself to praising one of its many civic achievements or institutons. It advertises them all. So the business man knows that, while his small ad in the newspaper will be read and bring him its fair share of new business, the large display advertisement will bring him more buyers.

Negro Industrial Education

North Carolina has spent about $15 000,000 of public money in the last four years for negro education, mostly o industrial lines.

[illegible] discovered that it is to their own material welfare to devote public funds for uplifting the negro population. Federall and state revenues are devoted largely to the negro agricultural industrial college at Greensboro and four negro normal schools.

North Carolina has every reason to congratulate itself on its policy of negro industrial education and to be proud of the results of it

AFTER THE PARTY

Mrs. Cucumber Green, whose real name was Margaret, but whose pretend name was Mrs. Cucumber Green, as probably you all know, had had a party.

In the Little Express Cart.

Allie Baa, her favorite rag doll, had helped with the party. It had been a huge success.

The other children had come and had brought their dolls.

Every one had had such a good time.

The dolls had behaved so well.

Every mother had been so proud of her children as they had every right to be.

After the party was over and Mrs. Cucumber Green's children had been covered up with the blanket in the little express cart, Allie cuddled up in her mother's arms in the bed by Number Four Green Lane.

Back of the bed, or rather at the side of the bed toward the wall, was a quite wide space.

This was called, by Mrs. Cucumber Green, Number Four Green Lane.

This was the make-believe street in which she lived. When she walked along this space, up to the end where the back wall was, she pretended she was at the market.

Then she would talk to make-believe shopkeepers and buy all sorts of make-believe things for housekeeping.

The wall paper was a very gay one and there were figures on the wall paper she pretended were people who were her neighbors.

The street was called after the Green family who had always lived there. All the make-believe Greens Mrs. Cucumber Green said had always lived in the same place.

Here Mrs. Cucumber Green kept her toys. Number Four Green Lane was a very busy section, I can tell you.

Now that the party was all over which had been such a success and which would be something they could talk about with pride and joy and happy remembrances for some time,

Of course Mrs. Cucumber Green would give other parties, as she had always given a good many parties and was fond of entertaining.

Allie was fond of entertaining, too.

She enjoyed speaking to all the guests. Mrs. Cucumber Green changed her voice to speak for Allie. That made it easy.

In a squeaky little voice Mrs. Cucumber Green would say:

"Yes, I'm Allie. Of course I remember you. And you remember me, too?

"Yes, they all say I've grown, though I can't see it myself.

"Do take your hat and coat off, won't you? You won't feel the good of them when you go out if you don't.

"Ah, yes, that's better. Now you'll be more comfortable and you won't catch cold when you go out."

Allie was a good talker as you can see.

But now they were in bed, and soon they would be asleep.

How Allie did cuddle up in her mother's arms. Her mother held her very close.

"Oh, my darling, darling, darling Allie Baa," she said. "You looked so sweet today with all your clean clothes. How nice it was to have all clean clothes, even your stockings and worsted slippers were clean for the occasion.

You looked so wonderfully, wonderfully, my darling Allie Baa."

Allie Baa snuggled even a little closer. It was so nice to hear her mother's sweet words of praise.

"What a Lucky Rag Doll I Am."

"Oh, muvvie dear," Allie said, in her dear little squeaky voice, "what a lovely day we had."

And Mrs. Cucumber Green answered:

"I'm so glad, my darling, and we shall have more lovely days."

Then Mrs. Cucumber Green's eyes slowly closed and for a little while Allie was wide awake.

She turned ever so slightly in her mother's arms—not enough so as to disturb her—just a very little bit.

Then she looked at her mother whose eyes were closed, sleeping so beautifully.

"What a lucky rag doll I am," she said to herself, "to have such a good, good mother."

Wasn't That Much "Swelled"

Marion was at the dinner table. Her mother had just told her not to use her fingers.

"I know, mamma, the swell people don't eat that way, but I didn't think I was old enough to be that much swelled yet."

FILMY FROCKS FOR SCHOOL; PRINTED FABRICS POPULAR

MANY pretty processions of frocks for girls from six to fifteen or sixteen are daily passing in review before inquiring mothers. While they are looking for graduation dresses or frocks for the little festivities of closing school days they will get full information as to present styles for the dress-up frocks of juveniles and are sure to note that colors, in beautiful shades, have usurped the place of white to a great extent. The shops are showing pastel tints along with white for graduation frocks of crepe de chine, georgette, chiffon or fine voile.

Pink, blue, lavender and white have proved themselves the most popular colors and are chosen for both the younger girls and those in their teens. For the younger girls the majority of these filmy frocks are sleeveless or have very short sleeves, as shown in the model pictured. This is a voile frock with scant frills of val lace in two rows above the hem, terminating at the sides under loops of satin ribbon. It is one of many models in which the armseyes are finished with lace ruffles. The small turnover collar is finished with hemstitching and a bow of ribbon with long ends is posed on the left shoulder where the frock fastens. It would be pretty in any light color or in white over a colored slip.

A Popular Slip-On Model.

Nothing is prettier than georgette for graduation frocks and it proves to be a durable fabric as well and fine voile merits any fine needlework that may be lavished upon it, as it is practically indestructible. With pretty flaring skirts, tucks, lace and ribbons all features of the summer mode and flowerlike shades of lovely colors distinctly fashionable, a class of girl graduates ought to be as enchanting to look at as a blooming garden of flowers. Among the showings there are dresses of cream-colored net covered with fine tucks and combined with lace.

"Money talks," and when its subject is dress styles for the midsummer season it talks "straight from the shoulder." Now that merchants have staged many special sales of dresses for matron and maid they are well convinced as to just what Mrs. American Lady and Miss Summer Girl have set their minds upon—they know what they have spent their money for. First and above all they have demanded printed fabrics in colorful patterns, in silk, silk and cotton mixtures and in cotton materials.

These printed materials, made up in the simplest manner, dominate the styles for midsummer in dresses that bang almost straight from the shoulder. Very little trimming is required on them and they are shown in both short and long-sleeved models, nearly all of them provided with a narrow girdle that ties loosely at one side below the waistline. They are informal in style—even in the silk fabrics—and they are very becoming to their wearers. A pretty example of the printed silk frock is pictured here with front and back panels edged with narrow lace and an application of flat folds of crepe de chine in a plain color at each side. The narrow girdle made of the silk and lined with the crepe de chine slips under the panels and ties at the side. The lace makes a pretty finish for the sleeves. This is one of the popular slip-on models which are only rivaled by the jumper dress and two-piece dresses in sport styles. In the two-piece frocks the lines are straight also. The skirt portion is set onto an underbodice and is occasionally pleated and the blouse, which is usually on the middy order, gives the effect of a one-piece dress. All the styles, the slip-on, jumper and two-piece frocks, are cool, smart and attractive.

SEASONABLE GOOD THINGS

A salad which combines refreshment, appearance and palatability is:

Summer Salad.—Take one package of gelatin, dissolve it in one-half cupful of water. When softened add one small can of grated pineapple, three small cucumbers and one onion put through the meat grinder—using the coarse knife; add the juice of two lemons, one cupful of sugar and one-fourth of a teaspoonful of salt and mix well. Pour into a mold. When chilled and firm serve on head lettuce with mayonnaise which has been enriched with whipped cream.

Mint Sherbet.—This is nice served with roast leg of lamb. Cut very fine one-fourth of a cupful of mint, steep in one and three-fourths cupfuls of water with the rind of a lemon. Add one cupful of lemon juice to one and three-fourths cupfuls of sugar, let come to a boil, add a teaspoonful of gelatin softened in water, and stir until dissolved. Freeze and serve garnished with sprigs of mint.

Chocolate Milk Shake.—Melt four squares of chocolate, add one and three-fourths cupfuls of sugar, a pinch of salt, pour on gradually, while stirring, one and one-half cupfuls of boiling water. Boil five minutes, cool, put into a jar and keep on ice. Take two tablespoonfuls of chopped ice, two and one-half tablespoonfuls of the syrup, one egg and two-thirds of a cupful of milk. Shake, strain into a glass and serve.

Don't forget to put up small fruits, crushing them with an equal measure of sugar. Put into sterile, chilled cans and seal. Keep in a cold place and you can have strawberry shortcake in January. The secret of keeping this fruit is first mixing it very well with the sugar, every berry well crushed; if using currants, the softer berries mash easily. Store either in the back of the ice chest or in a very cold cellar.

Rice With Bananas.—Season cold boiled rice with melted butter, the grated rind of a lemon, and sweeten to taste with sugar. Add the yolks of two eggs well beaten, cook until thick, then pack into a border mold and keep warm ten minutes. Turn out carefully on a plate, fill the center with sliced sweetened bananas. Pour over the pudding a sirup flavored with lemon, orange, or any fruit juice.

Meat and Fish Sauces.

It is a good plan to keep a list of sauces at hand with the recipes for preparing them. A very plain homely dish becomes something quite stylish when dressed with an appropriate sauce.

Everybody makes the white sauce—use two tablespoonfuls of bubbling hot butter to two tablespoonfuls of flour, and when well mixed add a cupful of milk and cook until thick. This sauce with a slight variation is the basis for many sauces. For a thinner sauce a tablespoonful each of butter and flour; for a thick sauce for croquettes use four of each. Browning the butter and flour makes a brown sauce. With browned flour a little more must be used to thicken.

For a bechamel sauce use one-half cupful of white stock and one-half cupful of cream; when ready to serve stir in an egg. To prepare the stock use chicken or veal, adding carrot, onion, bay leaf, parsley and peppercorns for flavor, and seasoning.

Drawn Butter Sauce.—Melt one-half of a third of a cupful of butter, add three tablespoonfuls of flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one-eighth of a teaspoonful of pepper and gradually one and one-half cupfuls of hot water. Boil five minutes and add the remaining butter in small pieces. Serve with baked or boiled fish.

For caper sauce, add to the drawn butter sauce one-half cupful of capers drained from their liquor. Serve with boiled mutton.

Hollandaise Sauce.—Wash half a cupful of butter and divide into three parts; put one piece with one-half tablespoonful of vinegar or lemon juice and the yolks of two eggs. Set over boiling water and stir constantly with a wire whisk. Add a second piece of butter, and as it thickens, the third; remove from the fire and add salt and cayenne.

Sauce Tartare.—Mix one tablespoonful each of chopped pickles, capers and parsley, one-half teaspoonful of onion juice; add one cupful of mayonnaise. Olives may be used in place of the pickles if desired.

Sauce Bearnaise is prepared as above with the addition of a teaspoonful each of finely chopped parsley and fresh tarragon.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited, to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says: "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfils almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by Parcel Post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and inclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.

"YOU can be just as healthy, strong and happy as I am,' said one woman to her neighbor after listening to the description of her ailments,—'if you will take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. My condition was very similar to yours, I suffered from those awful bearing down pains, weakness, backache, nervousness and headaches until I could hardly drag around. Today I am strong, well and happy because I followed the advice of a friend who had been greatly benefited by this old-fashioned root and herb medicine."

Nearly fifty years ago Lydia E. Pinkham of Lynn, Mass. prepared from medicinal roots and herbs Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Its fame has spread from shore to shore. You will now find in every community or neighborhood some woman who has been restored to health by its use, or has some friend who has. Therefore ask your neighbor.

Mrs. Frick Tells of Her Experience

PERRYSBURG, OHIO—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I suffered with pains in my sides all the time. I can't remember just how long I suffered but it was for some time. One day I was talking with a neighbor and I told her how I was feeling and she said she had been just like I was with pains and nervous troubles and she took the Vegetable Compound and it helped her. So then I went and got some and I certainly recommend it for it is good. Whenever I see a woman who is sick I try to get her to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. ADA FRICK, R. HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square in the horizontal row. "Vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

Basilica Greek Name for Hall of Justice

The word basilica is of Greek origin, being derived from the Greek word, (written with Latin letters), "basilikos," meaning kingly. From that word has been formed the English adjective, basilic, meaning royal, also said of certain parts or substances on account of their supposed importance or efficiency. The word basilica, as a term of architecture, meant originally at Athens a portico on the agora in which the archon-basileus dispensed justice, that is, at Athens the basilica was the porch of the courthouse. Later, when Rome had become the mistress of the world, the word basilica meant a rectangular hall, divided into nave and aisles by ranges of columns, and with a raised platform, called the tribune, at one end. It was used as a hall of justice, a hall for the use of the high courts. It was in such a hall that the praetors held their courts and later under the emperors the prefect's courts met in a basilica. The prefect or judge sat on the tribune or platform, with the assessors or law advisers on either hand. Sometimes an emperor presided when the case was an appeal, in a criminal matter, from the decision of a governor of a province. It was before such a court, held in such a hall, that the appeal of St. Paul was heard. In later years when Christianity had spread throughout western Europe, the Christians often adopted the basilica as the pattern of their larger places of worship. Hence basilica now means a church built on the plan of the basilica of ancient Rome.

Yukon Gold

The first placer mining of gold in the Yukon territory was carried on along a small stream which was a tributary to the Klondike. The first white man to take advantage of the rumors of gold circulated by the Indians was J. W. Carmack, who had worked with the Dominion land surveyor, William Ogilvie, in 1887. He located a claim on a small stream that came to be known as "Bonanza Creek." There is, however, an account that holds that the discoverer of gold on the Klondike was Robert Henderson, who came upon gold-bearing dirt in August, 1896.

Just an Exploded Theory

THEY had all heard great stories of greater trout taken from Howe's pool, a pond formed by the widening of a little stream which partially drained the range of hills near Phillips' ranch, then a half-day's ride from Seattle. Morse, now a mining monarch, was merely a prospector in those days, and one Sunday evening he and Millman, the city attorney, and Barnes, the general storekeeper, were sitting in the little hotel office, discussing a proposed outing of a couple of days, when in came the fourth of their coterie, the rotund and genial Biller, puffing and blowing, but with elation in his eyes.

"Boys," he exclaimed, "I have the idea of a lifetime—an inspiration of genius! Let's spend our Friday and Saturday at Howe's pool, fishing."

Biller's suggestion was hailed with acclaim and unanimously adopted without the formality of a vote. The few days intervening before their departure were filled with fish talk and active preparation, and those unacquainted with the destination of the party might have thought it was going around the world. Thursday evening found them in Phillips' rough but cozy sitting room, talking over the anticipated sport of the morrow. Everything so far had gone according to schedule, the only deviations from the program having been made by Morse, who surreptitiously slipped into one of his many pockets two long-fused dynamite "U. W. Waterproof" cartridges from the mine house, and Tips, Biller's water spaniel, who at the last moment insisted upon accompanying his master.

A deliciously exhilarating morning found the anglers and their host engrossed in endeavors to lure from its dark depths the famous denizens of Howe's pool, but the day slipped by without even a single "strike." Phillips apologetically admitted that the fishing was poor—"the day a bit too bright," and one or two other conditions not just perfect—to which big guests deferentially agreed, but with repressed displeasure. When the second and last day had almost passed with no better results, everybody was cross, even Tips refusing to indulge in the distracting amusement of barking and hunting shore birds.

It was then that Morse resolved upon the heroic measure for which he had come prepared. Assembling his fellow followers of old Izaak, he cautiously broached his scheme for making sure of some fish—if there were any in the pool—even if they wouldn't bite. Its awful illegality—and perhaps the presence of the city attorney—brought forth a volley of objections, but eventually the thought of returning with overflowing creels, to turn the jeers of a scoffing crowd to envy and admiration, overcame the scruples of the most conservative.

Acting under Morse's instructions, all retired from the banks of the pool to positions from which they could just see its surface. A moment later a "long-timed" dynamite cartridge flew from his hand and, describing a graceful parabola, splashed fairly into the center of the pond, where it floated, rocking gently upon the widening circles of ripples it had caused.

But while the fishermen watched with indrawn breath, they heard another and a louder splash. It was Tips, faithful to the instincts of a long line of retrieving ancestors, paddling as if for life, toward the floating infernal machine, while Biller, a hundred feet from the bank, alternately called his pet and raved and swore!

As Tips reached the cartridge, Morse was mentally calculating the number of seconds that would elapse before there would be no more dog, and it was not till the faithful animal, grasping the shell firmly between his teeth, turned suddenly shoreward, that the real horror of the situation flashed upon him and his companions. Then, with a united yell of dismay, they turned and very literally took to the woods, each man looking for the woodiest portion, and, finding cover, each hoped that, whatever the dog might do, it would not follow him. Tips had gained the bank, and as they ran they could plainly hear the pattering feet of that animated bombshell and the deep breathing and snorting of poor Biller, who lumbered along in the rear, like a slow freight train over a rough track.

Almost simultaneously the thought came to the pursued that a dog always follows his master, and the others rejoiced that they did not own a dog while they realized that the retriever was certainly following Biller, and so, looking backward to note his whereabouts, they crouched behind trees out of the line of his retreat and gazed fascinated upon the dreadful spectacle.

On wallowed Biller, in a frenzy of fear, the dog rapidly closing up the hundred yards intervening. Would the cartridge never explode? Could it be possible that the water or the dog's bite had rendered it harmless? Soon the question would be answered. On they rushed, the ponderous fugitive panting spasmodically as his pace flagged, too terrified to pick his steps and too breathless to cry aloud. But as he tripped over a fallen log and beheld Tips bounding towards him with wagging tail, he involuntarily emitted a hoarse shriek of hopeless terror. Just as he dropped safely behind the prostrate tree trunk there was a frightful detonation. Tips had vanished.

Hog Production Costs Reduced

Lower Capital Investment Needed Where Two Litters Are Raised.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Hog production costs are lower when two litters of pigs are raised each year than when only one litter is raised. Adding fall pigs to the production plan means a slight increase in feed and labor costs for each 100 pounds of pork produced. Other costs, however, are decreased chiefly because it is easier to save pigs at weaning time in the summer than in the spring. The economy of producing two litters a year is also shown in a lower necessary capital investment. Maintenance costs of the breeding herds are slightly higher when two litters are raised, largely because sows are on the farm for a longer time. On a monthly basis there is practically no difference.

Interesting Lights.

These facts and many other interesting lights on hog-production costs are brought out by the Department of Agriculture in a study recently completed on hog raising in Iowa and Illinois. Farmers in Henry county, Iowa, and Warren county, Illinois, co-operated with the department representatives in making exact records of their hog-production costs in 1921 and 1922. These counties are large producers of corn, hogs and cattle. Although the actual cost figures obtained in this study are out of date now, the methods of efficient practice that were revealed and the light thrown on sources of loss in the hog-raising business have permanent interest.

Besides demonstrating the superior efficiency of the two-litter system, the study showed that there is a regular increase in corn consumed when pigs are fed heavier weights. In other words, it took on an average less feed to produce the first 50 pounds of pork than it took to produce the second, and less to produce the second than the third, and so on. Thus, to raise a herd of pigs averaging 125 pounds in weight took only 294.3 pounds of corn for each 100 pounds of hog. When hogs were raised to the average weight of 275 pounds, the amount of feed necessary to produce each hundredweight of hog was 405.2 pounds. Although the investigation did not entirely bear out the theory that the meat-producing power of feed declines in a steady proportion as animals are raised to greater weights, it did confirm the generally accepted idea that it progressively takes more corn to increase the weight of hogs as they approach maturity.

Effect on Profits.

Reduced costs of production have obviously the same effect on profits as an increased sale price. This is strikingly demonstrated by the department in an analysis of effects of production costs on profits. Production costs varied widely on the farms studied. The cost in 1921 ranged from $3.07 to $13.55 per 100 pounds of hog. Profits in the lowest cost group averaged ($3.03 cents) for 100 pounds, compared with a loss of $5.27 per 100 pounds in the highest cost group. In 1922 the range of costs was from $4.86 to $10.02 per hundred pounds of hog. Farmers in the low-cost group made a profit of $2.96 a hundred pounds, whereas those in the high-cost group suffered a loss of $2.04 per hundred pounds. It is shown that each increase in costs means a distinct decrease in profits and a decrease in the return for each bushel of corn fed.

For farms raising two litters a year, the spread was smaller although considerable. No fewer than 31.5 per cent of the pigs farrowed in the spring of 1921 were lost before weaning time. In 1922 the proportion of loss before weaning was 40.8 per cent. Average losses before weaning out of the total number of spring and fall pigs farrowed in both years was 35.4 per cent. The number of pigs that died before and after weaning was 41.4 per cent of the total number farrowed. Severe weather in the spring of 1922 increased the death losses.

Cost of Pork.

The 1921 costs were gathered from 44 farms producing 1,033,744 pounds of marketable pork, or an average of 23,494 pounds per farm. The net cost of this pork was $5.42 a hundred pounds. The 1922 costs were obtained from 39 farms producing 1,004,003 pounds of marketable pork, or an average of 25,744 pounds per farm. The net cost in 1922 was $5.86 a hundred pounds. In general, better feed and wise management showed a saving in that more and better pigs were produced, even though sometimes the increased care meant an increased cost of maintaining the breeding herds. The producers who raised the largest number of pigs per sow had a great initial advantage in the effort to keep production costs down. Some hog raisers made little effort to save the pigs, and others who tried were not thorough in their sanitary methods and failed.

Feed constituted the largest item of cost, amounting to 64 per cent of the total in 1921 and 75 per cent in 1922. Labor charges were the second largest item, constituting 8.4 per cent of the total in 1921 and 7.1 per cent of the total in 1922. Cost of equipment was the third largest item. Where fall pigs were produced the cost of equipment for each hundred pounds of hog raised was below the cost of equipment on one-litter farms. Equipment valuations on the farms varied in 1922 from $152 to $1,909. The average was $571 per farm. It was shown that the use of expensive equipment did not always mean more economical production.

Calf Failures Are Being Eliminated

Ventilation, Sanitation and Feeding of Importance.

Failures in raising calves are largely being eliminated by New Jersey dairymen through giving closer attention to ventilation, feeding, and sanitation. They have found that cold drafts must be avoided, feeding must be regular, the stalls kept clean and well bedded, and the barn well ventilated.

A growing practice is to paint the new-born calf's navel cord with iodine or iodoform and then allow the calf to suckle the dam. The calf is kept on the cow 36 to 48 hours.

For the first week after the calf is weaned, five to seven pounds of milk is fed per day at a temperature between 90 and 100 degrees Fahrenheit. The feeding is done at regular intervals and thoroughly cleaned pails are used. The milk is increased to from eight to ten pounds in the second week.

Carl B. Bender, assistant dairy husbandman at the New Jersey State College of Agriculture, New Brunswick, states that on the third week any good calf gruel can be used to take the place of some of the milk. By increasing the gruel and decreasing the milk a seven-weeks' calf will be receiving two pounds of milk and ten pounds of gruel in addition to clover or alfalfa hay. From ten weeks to four months of age a calf will consume about 13 to 15 pounds of the gruel daily in addition to a small amount of dry feed immediately after the gruel.

A good dry grain mixture for calves is made up of equal parts of linseed meal, ground oats, cornmeal, and bran. After the calves are four months old they can be fed exclusively on the grain mixture and good clover or alfalfa hay.

Poultry Manure Is Very Valuable as Fertilizer

Poultry manure is an excellent fertilizer if properly used. However, it is very rich and must be used with caution. It contains about 20 pounds of nitrogen, eight pounds of phosphorus and 15 pounds of potassium per ton, as compared with about ten pounds of nitrogen, two pounds of phosphorus and ten pounds of potassium per ton for average horse manure. In view of its richness, poultry manure is likely to have a burning effect on plants if used in too large quantities. If used at all, it should be scattered very thinly. Properly used, it is a valuable and quick-acting fertilizer.

In order to prevent loss in poultry manure, it should be properly stored. A good absorbent should be used on the dropping boards or under the perches. Since the fertility is quickly lost by leaching and fermentation, the droppings should be stored in a dry condition in well-covered bins so constructed that air can circulate through the manure. Poultry manure can also be kept well in barrels in which holes are bored through the sides.

Good Recipe for Making Ordinary Lime-Sulphur

To make ordinary lime-sulphur slake 40 pounds of high-grade stone lime (90 per cent or more calcium oxide) in an iron cooking kettle (never use brass or copper) and carefully sift in 80 pounds of flowers of sulphur and stir to a uniform paste, breaking up all the lumps that form. Add enough water to make 50 gallons. Bring to a boil and boil briskly for one hour. Add more water from time to time to keep the volume always as near 50 gallons as possible. Remove to a tank or barrel to permit the sludge to settle. Dip off the clear liquid, strain and place in air-tight casks. This is then kept as a stock solution and diluted at the rate recommended for various purposes.

Feeding Broilers

The person who is expecting to market the male chicks as broilers usually figures on forcing them somewhat more rapidly than the pullets or the males which are kept for breeding purposes. There are really three steps in the feeding of broilers, the growing, forcing and fattening. The growing period varies to some extent with the breed, the time of hatching and the size which is desired at market time. Usually this period will last from four to five weeks.

POULTRY

RAISING GEESE IS QUITE PROFITABLE

During the past year I have been raising geese and I have found them to be profitable. There is a good market for geese.

In the first place geese require less grain than any other fowl. That is important. The geese derive a greater part of their living from pasture and roaming about, and they get just what they require in the way of feed. In winter it's different. We must feed them, but they do not eat like other fowls, and I have found they will fatten more quickly than other fowls, says a writer in the Indiana Farmer's Guide. The important thing that I do not want overlooked is the fact that the goslings are the easiest of all fowls to raise. That has been my experience of many years past, perhaps ten years or longer. Once they are hatched out, with ordinary care, they will thrive and grow with rapidity to maturity. The thing that is hardest is to get them hatched. I have found so many eggs that were infertile, so I always get plenty of them.

The little goslings will seldom touch feed other than bits of grass until after three or four days. One thing is essential, and that is having plenty of drinking water. They must have this, and require it, for that seems to be their very nature.

The hen and goslings are kept in their coop, where it is warm for the first week. Sometimes I keep them in ten days when it is damp and cold. After that they are allowed all the free range they want, except on rainy days.

The first feed I give the goslings is hard-boiled eggs mixed with milk and cornmeal. That is the best thing in the way of feed that I have ever tried. The milk must be sweet for best results. The eggs may be crushed up, shell and all, and mixed with the milk and cornmeal.

The first month the goslings are fed about four times a day. I have always done this, for while young and growing they require nourishment often, although sparingly fed each time. It is folly to overfeed and it is also injurious.

The breeding birds are fed carefully during winter. I give them clover, vegetables and sprouted oats, so they do not get too fat.

Young Turkeys Require Shelter in Wet Weather

Young turkeys are susceptible to wet weather. One precaution that must always be observed in handling the young poults is to see that they have a dry place where they are protected from the rainstorms, and that they have a dry place to roost.

Turkey hens will lay when a year old if they are well matured. It is probably best to keep the majority of the flock older hens, but it is necessary to keep some of the better young hens to gradually replace the older hens. In this way the flock can be kept in the best of condition.

In feeding and caring for young poults there are as many different rations and methods advocated as there are for chicks.

No food should be given to the young poults for the first 36 to 48 hours. During the first week hard-boiled infertile eggs chopped fine and mixed with equal parts of rolled oats and a small quantities three times a day is a satisfactory ration. Sour skimmed milk or buttermilk is excellent for drinking purposes. After the third or fourth day cracked corn, hulled or steel-cut oats, cracked wheat or other similar grains may be scattered in the light litter or in the short grass outside of the brood coop in order to encourage the poults to exercise in getting their food.

June Is the Best Time to Caponize Cockerels

While capons are produced only in small number where their quality is known, they sell for fancy prices, according to D. H. Hall, extension poultry specialist of Clemson college, who suggests that the month of June is the best time to caponize young cockerels. At this season the market is usually low for broilers and it will pay to caponize cockerels and keep them for capons.

In selling these capons the local market must be developed first. Some of our tourist towns are already providing good market for capons and are paying good prices for them. Several men in South Carolina are caponizing for the farmers, and are marketing their products for them at a small cost.

The operation on the cockerel is not difficult usually, but should be performed with care. If the cockerels are starved out from 36 to 48 hours before the operation, it will help greatly. If the intestines are full of food the operation is very difficult.

Dirty Feet Retard Eggs

When yards and houses are wet and ooze with moisture most of the time, it means cold and dirty feet for the hens. A hen that "gets cold feet" seldom lays the right quota of eggs, and dirty feet make dirty nests and dirty eggs. In cases where a suitable dry location is hard to get, along with other desirable factors, place a three-inch tile even with the bottom of the foundation on the outside, and provide proper outlet for excess moisture.

BAPTISTS DENOUNCE EVOLUTION, REPORT PROGRESS IN THEIR WORK

Southern Convention at Memphis Adopts Statement of Baptist Faith and Message for Information of World—Co-operative Program for Support of Enterprises Endorsed.

Many large achievements were reported to the Southern Baptist Convention at its recent session at Memphis by its various missionary, educational and benevolent enterprises, although none of them had at its command during the past year as large funds as were needed.

The Hospital Commission reported 26 Baptist hospitals in operation in the South, with three others under construction. These institutions treated over 100,000 patients during the year and did over $1,000,000 in charity work for deserving poor.

More than 1,000 aged preachers and their dependent ones were aided by the Relief and Annuity Board.

MANY BAPTISMS REPORTED

The Sunday School Board reported a gain of 949 Sunday Schools for the year, with 155,386 new pupils, bringing the present number of Southern Baptist Sunday schools to 21,570, with an enrollment of 2,563,955. Other items in the board's statistical report show that there are now 27,517 Baptist churches affiliated with the Convention which last year reported 309,476 baptisms and which now have 3,768,862 members.

During the past 25 years Southern Baptists have increased the number of their schools, colleges and theological seminaries from 65 to 117 and the total assets of these schools from $7,500,000 to $48,960,000, it was reported by the Education Board. In these institutions there are 38,000 Baptist students.

The Home Mission Board employed 1,077 workers during the year who reported 30,027 baptisms and 50,354 additions to the churches, the erection or repair of 385 church houses and the organization of 608 Sunday schools.

On 17 foreign fields the Foreign Mission Board has employed 618 American missionaries and 3,446 native workers. A total of 12,134 baptisms were reported by these workers for the year, bringing the present membership of the foreign churches to 117,961.

ENDORSES CO-OPERATIVE PROGRAM

The Convention heartily endorsed the co-operative plan for the support of all its missionary, educational and benevolent work and named a Commission on the Co-operative Program which will seek to enlist all the Baptist churchesof the South in the regular, systematic support of home, state and foreign missions, ministerial relief and Baptist schools, hospitals and orphanages. Churches not already supporting all these enterprises through weekly contributions are invited to assume such support at once. The Convention endorsed the plan of the Commission discouraging independent appeals to churches and individuals on the part of special denominational interests, urging all of them to look to the Co-operative Program for their support and asking all the churches to support the Program.

STAND BY THE OLD BIBLE

That the world may know where Southern Baptists stand upon the great fundamental Christian doctrines, many of which are being assailed today, the convention adopted a statement of the Baptist faith and message, in which attacks upon the inspiration and authority of the Bible and the divinity of Christ were vigorously refuted.

Here are some of the leading declarations in the statement as it was adopted:

THE SCRIPTURES

"We believe that the Holy Bible was written by men divinely inspired and is a perfect treasure of heavenly instruction, that it has God for its author, salvation for its end and truth, without any mixture of error, for its matter, that it reveals the principles by which God will judge us, and therefore is, and will remain to the end of the world, the true center of Christian union, and the supreme standard by which all human conduct, creeds and religious opinions should be tried."

THE FALL OF MAN

"Man was created by the special act of God as recorded in Genesis. 'So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them.' (Gen. 1:27). 'And the Lord God formed man out of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul,' (Gen. 2:7). He was created in a state of holiness under the law of his maker but through the temptation of Satan he transgressed the command of God and fell from his original holiness and righteousness; whereby his posterity inherit a nature corrupt and in bondage to sin, are under condemnation, and as soon as they are capable of moral action, become actual transgressors."

THE WAY OF SALVATION

"Salvation of sinners is wholly of grace, through the mediatorial office of the Son of God, who by the Holy Spirit was born of the Virgin Mary and took upon him our nature, yet without sin; honored the divine law by his personal obedience and made atonement for our sins by his death. Being risen from the dead he is now enthroned in heaven, uniting in his person the two natures, Godhead with divine perfections, so is in every way qualified to be a compassionate and all-sufficient Savior."

CO-OPERATION

"Christ's people should, as occasion requires, organize such associations and conventions as may best secure co-operation for the great objects of the Kingdom of God. Such organizations have no authority over each other or over the churches. They are voluntary and advisory bodies designed to elicit, combine and direct the energies of our people in the most effective manner. Individual members of New Testament churches should co-operate with each other, and the churches themselves should co-operate with each other in carrying forward the missionary, educational and benevolent program for the extension of Christ's Kingdom. Christian unity in the New Testament sense is spiritual harmony and voluntary co-operation for common ends by various groups of Christ's people. It is permissible and desirable as between the various Christian denominations, when the end to be attained is itself justified, and when such co-operation involves no violation of conscience or compromise of loyalty to Christ and His Word as revealed in the New Testament."

STEWARDSHIP

"God is the source of all blessings, temporal and spiritual; all that we have and are we owe to Him. We have a spiritual debtorship to the whole world, a holy trusteeship in the Gospel, and a binding stewardship in our possessions. We are therefore under obligation to serve Him with our time, talents and material possessions; and should recognize all these as preaching the Gospel of Christ, and of God and helping others. Christians should cheerfully, regularly, systematically, proportionately and liberally contribute of their means to advancing the Redeemer's cause on earth."

EVOLUTION IS DENOUNCED

To the statement of faith proper the Convention added a declaration upon the relation of science and religion in which the theory of evolution was denounced. Referring to evolution the statement says.

"Its best exponents admit that the causes of the origin of species have not been traced, nor has any proof been forthcoming that man is not the direct creation of God as recorded in Genesis. We protest against imposition of this theory of evolution upon the minds of our children in denominational or public schools as if it were a definite and established truth of science. We insist that this and all other theories be dealt with in a truly scientific way, that is, in careful conformity to established facts.

"We record again our unwavering adherence to the supernatural elements in the Christian religion. The Bible is God's revelation of himself through men moved by the Holy Spirit, and is our sufficient, certain and authoritative guide in religion. Jesus Christ was born of the Virgin Mary, through the power of the Holy Spirit. He was the divine and eternal Son of God. He wrought miracles, healing the sick, casting out demons, raising the dead. He died as the vicarious, atoning Savior of the world and was buried. He arose again from the dead. The tomb was emptied of its contents. In his risen body he appeared many times to his disciples. He ascended to the right hand of the Father. He will come again in person the same Jesus who ascended from the Mount of Olives.

"We believe that adherence to the above facts is a necessary condition of service for teachers in our Baptist schools."

WOMAN EX-SENATOR OBSERVES 90TH BIRTHDAY

Decatur, Ga.—"The goal of life is neither money nor fame; it is the battling against an obstruction with the aim to conquer and make your own Victory is the mind's elixir of youth."

This is the philosophy of Mrs. Rebecca Latimer Felton, only woman ever to hold the position of United States senator, who celebrated her 90th birthday here Wednesday.

"Service is the secret of longevity," Mrs. Felton told a large number of persons gathered at the courthouse square in honor of her birthday. "Never say die, and keep busy. Brooding brings age. I have never had time to feel sorry for myself.

"Cultivate a love for books" Georgia's "grand old lady" continued. "They give one the ability to view life more broadly, to recognize life's facts in youth. I wish our schools today taught children to recognize the facts more. We need more histories and fewer fairy tales."

Mrs. Felton's love of histories is attested to by a mahoth collection of precious documents relating the early history of Georgia. Overtures from institutions of several states for these documents have been refused.

"I want to keep them at home—here in Georgia," she explained.

Modern girls receive a good many unjustified knocks, Mrs. Felton said she believed. "I believe there is enough stability and dignity in the motherhood of America and that these qualities have been so well ingrained in the minds of our young girls that it will guide and protect them. I believe that the 'jazz craze' is the result of a lack of knowledge of life.

"America is a republic founded for persons with different views and I am not in harmony with any movement which seeks to prescribe life," Mrs. Felton said in explaining her views on liberalism.

"I have fought since I was old enough to make myself heard. Whether it was for women's rights or some other cause, I have not been silenced by temporary defeat. It is the only way to keep young."

Mrs. Felton's ideas for prolonging youth have proven successful with herself. Although 90 years of age, her eyes shine with the joy of living and she is able to hold her own in any oratorical discussion. She spoke at length Wednesday and despite the sweltering heat, never faltered.

Mrs. Felton "did everything but shoot a gun and lie on the battlefield" during the Civil War. Later she and her husband taught school. She is in touch with those of her first pupils who still live.

Enumeration of Mrs. Felton's honors would fill a volume. Besides being the only woman ever to serve as a United States senator, she has figured prominently in social and political activity of Georgia. She also was a leader of woman suffrage and temperance in the south.

ANTI-KLAN BILL KILLED IN ILLINOIS

Springfield, Ill.—In a battle marked with the bitterest factional outbreaks of the entire session, the house last Thursday killed the socalled "Ku Klux Klan bill," introduced by Rep William E. King, negro, of Chicago. The vote was 63 to 58, with four voting "present."

While not naming the klan specifically the bill provided for publication of membership rosters of all secret organizations and was considered the "anti-klan" legislation of the session.

C. REESE MULLINS, Agt.

I wish to state to my friends and patrons of this county that there is a man by the name of T. E. Tarter going over the county selling Singer sewing machines, and, I understand from a number of my friends that he is making the statement that the Singer Machine Company is letting me out and that he has been sent here to take my place.

I want to say to my friends and patrons if he has made this statement, that it is entirely without any foundation whatsoever, and that it is a baseless and malicious falsehood. I further wish to state to my friends who are contemplating buying a Singer sewing machine that I have just received a new shipment today, June 1st, and I will get in another shipment next week. I will also have a car load of machines to reach me about July 15th for fall delivery. If you want a new Singer, please write, phone, or call on me at my office, where you will find me every Saturday. Machines sold on easy payments, old machines taken in exchange, a liberal discount for cash. All kinds of second hand machines, including Singers, New Homes, Whites and many others, practically at your own price.

Your patronage in the future will be appreciated just as it has for the past twenty-five years. Yours for mutual benefit.

ALABAMA PROPERTIES SHOW 7.7 INCREASE

Since some of us are prone to be pessemistic at times over the farm land condition of our state it is well to know that we have after all much to encourage us. The following report is sure to make optomists of us all.

Despite the fact that Alabama has had many draw backs in the cultivation of cotton and negro labor migration, never the less Alabama has averaged an increase since 1923. Such is the statement made recently by L. C. Gray, farm land value expert of the department of agriculture. He further goes on to say that land owners during the heavy post war deflation show less loss than any other farming community and much less loss than the wheat belt. He gives the following as an illustration.

For a five year period beginning in 1920, land values in the United States decreased 30 per cent; in Iowa 37 per cent and in the cotton belt only 18.6 per cent. Since 1923 losses have been lessened in the United States as a whole showing a decrease of 5.3 per cent; Iowa 11.8 per cent while the cotton belt shows an actual increase of 7.3 per cent.

Although a greater number of negroes are going from the south to New York than are coming from the whole north to the south the movement of the negro does not appear to curtail cotton acreage.

In 1923 when the negro exodus from the south was at its peak, 36,000,500 acres of cotton was picked which was 2,000 more acres picked in the previous five years when negro labor was more plentiful.

With these facts in mind let us endeavor to be more aptomistic and by being so we can accomplish much more than we have in the past. Let us all put our shoulder to the wheel and make Aabama an even greater state.

WHAT DO YOU THINK OF THIS?

The Reverend Doctor E. C. Moore President of Downing Industrial Institute, Brewton, Ala., and one of the leading ministers of the Alabama Conference, has been unusually successful in holding evangelistic meeting. Montgomery newspapers recently reported one of his sermons on "Worldliness," and we have secured a paragraph or so from this helpful sermon that we think our people everywhere ought to have. Dr. Moore's general theme in this paragraph is, "You Can't Change the Name of a Thing and Change Its Moral Quality." Discussing this thought he says:

"I sometimes read the society page of the Sunday edition of our daily papers; not often, but occasionally, and then I risk only one eye. More than once I have seen this notice 'Mrs. Blank, a prominent member of some prominent evangelical Church in the City, will lead the Young Woman's Missionary Society next Tuesday evening at 3:30.' Fine! That is a work that all of our leading women should be doing; our young women need leading in that direction, and need it badly. If some one does not lead them that way, we are headed toward the rocks, for the lowering of standards among our young women today, is one of the most serious problems that we have. I do not believe that any nation ever rises any higher than its womanhood. But the many things that they are doing and sponsoring in this day, familiarity of the sexes, etc. oodies no good for the future. But I read on a bit on that same society page, and directly I see where this same Mrs. Blank whose name appears above, will entertain next Thursday afternoon, in honor of another Mrs So-and-So, from another city, and a prominent member of some prominen church there, and the leading pastime will be a prize euchre, and the prize will be a $10 piece of cut glass, in the form of a case, or something else. What we want to know is, how far a woman can lead young women on Tuesday afternoon, in a Missionary Society, toward a higher life and a deeper interest in carrying the gospe to the whole world, who leads in a prize euchre party on the following Thursday afternoon. You can't change the name of a thing and change its moral quality. Gambling is gambling, whether it happens in one of the leading parlors of our city, or in a back alley. The place does not count with God, it is the thing done, and no matter where it is done, if it is gambling in one place, it is gambling in another and as to who does it it does not matter with God."—Christian Advocate.

LAW MAKERS AND LAW BREAKERS

H. M. Atkinson, who is chairman of the Board of the Georbia Railway and Power Company, declares we have become a nation of law makers and law breakers. He says:

"What we need is fewer laws on the statute books, more respect for law and more regard for justice in the minds and consciences of men.

"I do not mean that we should take less interest in government. On the other hand, we should take a more active interest than ever before. The greatest trouble is that too many of us have pursued the even tenor of our way and left the affairs of state to the politicians and soap box orators. The result has been that the highest offices within the gift of the people have been brought into more or less disrepute and are seldom sought by men of marked ability and high principles.

"We have defaulted in our obligations to society and need an aroused public conscience with particular reference to our duty as citizens as it relates to the affairs of state and conduct of our government."

HOW TO KEEP GIRLS DOWN ON THE FARM

One of the most serious problems facing the world is that raised in the question: How can we keep the girls on the farm?

It is one of the hallmarks of civilization that so many girls are forced into the big cities to seek their fortune.

Probably no more daughters of the farm come to misfortune in the big cities than do the city girls or the girls from the small towns who work for a living.

It can be set down as a sound proposition that working girls as a class are more apt to make a success of life than another large class of girls hafing more social advantages but seeking the bright lights.

It is a great social duty to make the home life on the farms more attractive to the girls. There should be more rural recreation centers under proper supervision.

If the churches and fraternal orders could minister to the social needs of humanity, including the growing young people, we would hear less of farm girls crowding to the cities.

With good roads, cheaper motor cars, the rural mail and telephone, the phonograph, electricity and the radio, life is growing more attractive on the farms.

Individual initiative, energy and ambition, the driving force which has built this nation, is the great agency that is today remaking farm life in America and making it pleasant for both boys and girls to stay on the farm.

EVOLUTION OR THE BIBLE

If we believe in Evolution we deny the Bible. We can't believe in both at the same time. If we believe in Evolution we have no religion. When did our religion start? If man came from the monkey, what period did the soul of man start?

The Bible tells us that God made man from the dust of the earth; that Adam was the first man, and was made in the image of God. If we believe this we deny Evolution. If we believe Evolution we deny the Bible. If we deny the Bible where is our religion?

We prefer to keep our Bible and our religion, than to believe in Evolution and have no religion.

HIGH SCHOOL EDUCATION OF THE FARM POPULATION

The farm boy today is getting less education than any other group of children. A study just published by the Department of the Interior, Bureau of Education, Bulletin 1925, No. 6, high school education of the farm population, makes known for the first time the comparative extent to which farm and non-farm children are enrolled in high schools. Farm children as a whole are reached to a less extent than non-farm girls or either boys or girls of the non-farm group.

It is good that the next generation of farm men should be decidedly less well educated than the farm woman? Is it good that the next generation of farm men should be the most ignorant group in the nation?

This condition is not necessarily so for some states are now enrolling higher percentages of farm children in high school than of non-farm children and one state, Oregon, enrolls a highe percentage of farm boys than farm girls. Some of the factors affecting the situation are: (1) Where rura schools are poor as compared with city schools in the same state, a lower per centage of farm children are enrolled in high schools (2) Where highes percentages of farm boys of high school age are profitably employed, enrollment percentages are lowest. (3) Where farm tenancy percentages are highest, enrollment percentages ar lowest.

OLD FASHIONED MOTHERS

What has become of the old-fashioned mothers? When the mothers o the past kept track of their daughter you scarcely ever heard of any of them going wrong. But what of today? We seldom pick up a paper in which we fail to see an account of some mishap to some girl. She is either killed or attacked by some low down man or negro. If mothers knew more abou where their daughters were, there would be fewer tradigies. There are some men and boys today looking for a chance to ruin some girl, and you don't have to go to the large cities to find them either.

Mothers, look after your girls and try to know the company they keep.

AMERICA OR NO AMERICA?

"If we Americans ever put restrictions upon individual ambition and enterprise by adopting government ownership, then we shall have necessarily a government far different from the one that has fostered the development of the United States, and consequently we shall have a far different country to live in. Government ownership, once begun in this country, will soon be extended to the factory and the farm—to government ownership of all business and industry, including the colleges and universities and newspapers that play with the idea. It will be the first step toward the full communist program as exemplified in Russia and defined in the dictionary, namely: 'abolition of all private property, and 'state contro' of labor, religion and social relations,' including the raising of families. The is admitted by all government ownership advocates who are at once honest and mentally able to apply the significance of their slogans and shibboleths; it is denied or doubted only by the self-deluded."—Samuel Insull, president, Commonwealth Edison Company

MAKING GOOD CITIZENS

In a bulletin recently issued by the Bureau of Education of the Interio Department we read: "The United States is prosperious, but only half of our eligible voters actually vote at the presidential elections; five millions of our people over 10 years of agt are illiterate; ten millions of our children of school age are not attending school; we spend more for tobacco, cosmetics and chewing gum than we do for education; half of our young men were found physically unfit for unlimited military service; our wage earners lose wages amounting to over two billion dollars a year because of preventable sickness; in 1870 there was 1 divorce for every 18 marriages; last year there was 1 divorce for every 8 marriages."

These are some of the problems confronting the state. It needs to help more of its people to become good citizens. The fewer the number of ills and privations of life, and the greater the happiness of humanity, the nearer we approach the social ideal. A progressive school is a miniature of society. Not only is its structure much the same but it carries on many of the same activities. It seeks to promote the welfare of the pupils through the best methods in use in society.

What are some of the school tasks confronting 730,000 teachers- The school should give every child an equal opportunity to develop fully his initiative and ability. It should assure him healthful ronditions for mind and body It should imbue him with the principles of personal honesty and a strong sense of his obligations to his family, his community, and his nation. It should give him the education and training necessary to support himself and to bear his just share in maintaining a community with high American ideals. It should develop his capacity for the wholesome use of leisure time. It should inculcate a broad and understanding patriotism which insures our countri's highest good.

ELECTRICITY REORGANIZES AMERICAN FARM LIFE

What would happen if the American farmer could press a button and do a large part of his work as it is done in a modern factory? The day of farm electrification is drawing nearer. Power companies have actually made it possible in large sections of this nation, but general farm electrification will be brought about as a result of complete cooperation between the four groups most vitally interested—the government, the farmer, the electric equipment manufacturer and the power companies.

Fortunately for the people of this nation, our regulatory bodies see the necessity of such cooperation and are today more than ever before basing rulings on sound principles of business which recognize that the needs of the consumer cannot be served to the best advantage without fair consideration of the needs of the uower company. Neither the control nor the consumer can profit at the expense of the other.

GROWTH OF GAS INDUSTRY INEVITABLE

"The present tendency to conserve our national resources, especially oil and natural gas, make it inevitable that the manufactured gas industry will have to shoulder the heating problems of the country," says Charles A. Monroe, former president of the American Gas Association.

"The gas industry is now equipped to supply all immediate fuel requirements for industry, millions of dollars having been spent for improvements and new construction during the past two years.

"We must now go a step farther by developing gas burning appliances to make gas the universal fuel, as it is now the most economical medium for even the most intricate and exact of heating operations."

He proposes the establishment of an organization, underwritten by manufactured gas companies, to develop efficient gas burning equipment for all fuel users in industry and enable the gas companies to meet demand for gas fuel where heat is required.

MARRIED

SYNOPSIS. — Introducing "So Big" (Dirk DeJong) in his infancy. And his mother, Selina DeJong, daughter of Simeon Peake, gambler and gentleman of fortune. Her life, to young womanhood in Chicago in 1888, has been unconventional, somewhat seamy, but generally enjoyable. At school her chum is Julie Hempel, daughter of August Hempel, butcher. Simeon is killed in a quarrel that is not his own, and Selina, nineteen years old and practically destitute, secures a position as teacher at the High Prairie school, in the outskirts of Chicago, living at the home of a truck farmer, Klaas Pool. In Roelf, twelve years old, son of Klaas, Selina perceives a kindred spirit, a lover of beauty, like herself. Selina hears gossip concerning the affection of the "Widow Paarlenberg," rich and good-looking, for Pervus DeJong, poor truck farmer, who is insensible to the widow's attractions. For a community "sociable" Selina prepares a lunch box, dainty, but not of ample proportions, which is to be "auctioned," according to custom. The smallness of the box excites derision and Selina is heartbroken. But the bidding becomes spirited, DeJong finally securing it for $10, a ridiculously high price. Over their lunch basket, which Selina and DeJong share together, the school-teacher arranges to instruct the farmer, whose education has been neglected.

Selina opened McBride's grammar. "Ahem!" a school-teacherly cough. "Now, then, we'll parse this sentence: Blucher arrived on the field of Waterloo just as Wellington was receiving the last onslaught of Napoleon. 'Just' may be treated as a modifier of the dependent clause. That is: 'Just' means: at the time at which. Well. Just here modifies at the time. And Wellington is the . . ."

This for half an hour. Selina kept her eyes resolutely on the book. His voice went on with the dry business of parsing and its deep resonance struck a response from her as a harp responds when a hand is swept over its strings. Selina kept her eyes resolutely on the book. Yet she saw, as though her eyes rested on them, his large, strong hands. On the backs of them was a fine golden down that deepened at his wrists. Heavier and darker at the wrists. She found herself praying a little for strength—for strength against this horror and wickedness. This sin, this abomination that held her. A terrible, stark and pitiful prayer, couched in the idiom of the Bible.

"Oh, God, keep my eyes and my thoughts away from him. Away from his hands. Let me keep my eyes and my thoughts away from the golden hairs on his wrists. Let me not think of his wrists. . . . "The owner of the southwest quarter sells a strip 20 rods wide along the south side of his farm. How much does he receive at $150 per acre?"

He triumphed in this transaction, began the struggle with the square root of 676. Square roots agonized him. She washed the slate clean with her little sponge. He was leaning close in his effort to comprehend the fiendish little figures that marched so inexorably under Selina's nursterly pencil.

She took it up, glibly. "The remainder must contain twice the product of the tens by the units plus the square of the units." He blinked.

She was breathing rather fast. The fire in the kitchen stove snapped and cracked. "Now, then, suppose you do that for me. We'll wipe it out. There! What must the remainder contain?"

He took it up, slowly, haltingly. The house was terribly still except for the man's voice. "The remainder . . . twice . . . product . . . tens . . . units . . ." A something in his voice —a note—a timbre. She felt herself swaying queerly, as though the whole house were gently rocking. Little delicious agonizing shivers chased each other, hot and cold, up her arms, down her legs, over her spine. . . . "plus the square of the units is the same as the sum twice the tens . . . twice . . . the tens . . . the tens." His voice stopped.

Selina's eyes leaped from the book to his hands, uncontrollably. Something about them startled her. They were clenched fists. Her eyes now leaped from those clenched fists to the face of the man beside her. Her head came up, and back. Her wide, startled eyes met his. His were a blaze of blinding blue in his tanned face. Some corner of her mind that was still working clearly noted this. Then his hands unclenched. The blue blaze scorched her, enveloped her. Her cheek knew the harsh, cool feel of a man's cheek. She sensed the potent, terrifying, pungent odor of close contact—a mixture of tobacco smoke, his hair, freshly laundered linen, an indefinable body smell. It was a mingling that disgusted and attracted her. She was at once repelled and drawn. Then she felt his lips on hers and her own, incredibly, responding eagerly, wholly to that pressure.

Chapter VI

They were married the following May, just two months later. Selina was at once bewildered and calm; rebellious and content. Overlaying these emotions was something like grim amusement. Beneath them, something like fright. She moved with a strange air of fatality. It was as if she were being drawn inexorably, against her will, her judgment, her plans, into something sweet and terrible. When with Pervus she was elated, gay, voluble. He talked little; looked at her dumbly, worshipingly.

There were days when the feeling of unreality possessed her. She, a truck farmer's wife, living in High Prairie the rest of her days! Why, no! No! Was this the great adventure that her father had always spoken of? She, who was going to be a happy wayfarer down the path of life—any one of a dozen things. This High Prairie winter was to have been only an episode. Not her life! She looked at Maartje. Oh, she'd never be like that. That was stupid, unnecessary. Pink and blue dresses in the house, for her. Frills on the window curtains. Flowers in bowls.

Some of the pangs and terrors with which most prospective brides are assailed she confided to Mrs. Pool while that active lady was slamming about the kitchen.

"Did you ever feel scared and—and sort of—scared when you thought about marry, Mrs. Pool?"

Maartje Pool's hands were in a great batch of bread dough which she pummeled and slapped and kneaded vigorously. She shook out a handful of flour on the baking board while she held the dough mass in the other hand, then plumped it down and again began to knead, both hands doubled into fists.

She laughed a short little laugh. "I ran away."

"You did! You mean you really ran—but why? Didn't you lo—like Klaas?"

Maartje Pool kneaded briskly, the color high in her cheeks, what with the vigorous pummeling and rolling, and something else that made her look strangely young for the moment—girlish, almost. "Sure I liked him. I liked him."

"But you ran away?"

"Not far. I came back. Nobody ever knew I ran, even. But I ran. I knew."

"Why did you come back?"

Maartje elucidated her philosophy without being in the least aware that it could be called by any such high-sounding name. "You can't run away far enough. Except you stop living you can't run away from life."

The girlish look had fled. She was world-old. Her strong arms ceased their pounding and thumping for a moment. On the steps outside Klaas and Jakob were scanning the weekly reports preparatory to going into the city late that afternoon.

Selina had the difficult task of winning Roelf to her all over again. He was like a trusting little animal, who, wounded by the hand he has trusted, is shy of it. Still, he could not withstand her long. Together they dug and planted flower beds in Pervus' dingy front yard. It was too late for tulips now. Pervus had brought her some seeds from town. They ranged all the way from poppies to asters; from purple iris to morning glories. The last named were to form the back-porch vine, of course,' because they grew quickly. Selina, city-bred, was ignorant of varieties, but insisted she wanted an old-fashioned garden—marigolds, pinks, mignonette, phlox. She and Roelf dug, spaded, planted.

Her trousseau was of the scantiest. Pervus' household was already equipped with such linens as they would need. The question of a wedding gown troubled her until Maartje suggested that she be married in the old Dutch wedding dress that lay in the bride's chest in Selina's bedroom.

"A real Dutch bride," Maartje said. "Your man will think that is fine." Pervus was delighted. Selina basked in his love like a kitten in the sun. She was, after all, a very lonely little bride with only two photographs on the shelf in her bedroom to give her courage and counsel. The old Dutch wedding gown was many inches too large for her. The skirt-band overlapped her slim waist; her slender little bosom did not fill out the generous width of the bodice; but the effect of the whole was amazingly quaint as well as pathetic.

They were married at the Pools'. Klaas and Maartje had insisted on furnishing the wedding supper—ham, chickens, sausages, cakes, pickles, beer. The Reverend Dekker married them, and all through the ceremony Selina chided herself because she could not keep her mind on his words in the fascination of watching his short, stubby beard as it waggled with every motion of his jaw. Pervus looked stiff, solemn and uncomfortable in his wedding blacks—not at all the handsome giant of the everyday corduroys and blue shirt. In the midst of the ceremony Selina had her moment of panic when she actually saw herself running shrieking from this company, this man, this house, down the road, on, on toward—toward what? The feeling was so strong that she was surprised to find herself still standing there in the Dutch wedding gown answering "I do" in the proper place.

After the wedding they went straight to DeJong's house. In May the vegetable farmer cannot neglect his garden even for a day. The house had been made ready for them.

Throughout the supper Selina had had thoughts which were so foolish and detached as almost to alarm her.

"Now I am married. I am Mrs. Pervus DeJong. That's a pretty name. It would look quite distinguished on a calling card, very spidery and fine:

"MRS. PERVUS DE JONG
At Home Fridays."

She recalled this later, grimly, when she was Mrs. Pervus DeJong, at home not only Fridays, but Saturdays, Sundays, Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays.

They drove down the road to De Jong's place. Selina thought, "Now I am driving home with my husband. I feel his shoulder against mine. I wish he would talk. I wish he would say something. Still, I am not frightened."

Pervus' market wagon was standing in the yard, shafts down. He should have gone to market today; would certainly have to go tomorrow, starting early in the afternoon so as to get a good stand in the Haymarket. By the light of his lantern the wagon seemed to Selina to be a symbol. She had often seen it before, but now that it was to be a part of her life—this the DeJong market wagon and she Mrs. DeJong—she saw clearly what a crazy, disreputable and poverty-proclaiming old vehicle it was, in contrast with the neat strong wagon in Klaas Pool's yard, smart with green paint and red lettering that announced, "Klaas Pool, Garden Produce." With the two sleek farm horses the turnout looked as prosperous and comfortable as Klaas himself.

Pervus swung her down from the seat of the buggy, his hand about her waist, and held her so for a moment, close. Selina said: "You must have that wagon painted, Pervus. And the seat-springs fixed and the sideboard mended."

He stared. "Wagon?"

"Yes. It looks a sight."

The house was tidy enough, but none too clean. Pervus lighted the lamps. There was a fire in the kitchen stove. It made the house seem stuffy on this mild May night. Selina thought that her own little bedroom at the Pools', no longer hers, must be deliciously cool and still with the breeze fanning fresh from the west. Pervus was putting the horse into the barn. The bedroom was off the sitting room. The window was shut. This last year had taught Selina to prepare the night before for next morning's rising, so as to lose the least possible time. She did this now, unconsciously. She brushed her hair, laid out tomorrow's garments, put on her high-necked, long-sleeved nightgown and got into this strange bed. She heard Pervus DeJong shut the kitchen door; the latch clicked, the lock turned. Heavy quick footsteps across the bare kitchen floor. This man was coming into her room. . . . "You can't run far enough," Maartje Pool had said. "Except you stop living you can't run away from life."

Next morning it was dark when he awakened her at four. She started up with a little cry and sat up, straining her ears, her eyes. "Is that you, father?" She was little Selina Peake again, and Simeon Peake had come in, gay, debonair, from a night's gaming.

Pervus DeJong was already padding about the room in stocking feet. "What—what time is it? What's the matter, father? Why are you up? Haven't you gone to bed. . . ." Then she remembered.

Pervus DeJong laughed and came toward her. "Get up, little lazy bones. It's after four. All yesterday's work I've got to do, and all today's. Breakfast, little Lina, breakfast. You are a farmer's wife now."

* * * * * * *

Dirk DeJong was born in the bedroom off the sitting room on the fifteenth day of March, of a bewildered, somewhat resentful, but deeply interested mother; and a proud, foolish, and vainglorious father whose air of achievement, considering the really slight part he had played in the long, tedious, and racking business, was disproportionate. The name Dirk had sounded to Selina like something tall straight, and slim. Pervus had chosen it. It had been his grandfather's name.

Sometimes, during those months Selina would look back on her first winter in High Prairie—that winter of the icy bedroom, the chill black drum, the schoolhouse fire, the chilblains, the Pool pork—and it seemed a lovely dream; a time of ease, of freedom, of careless happiness.

Pervus DeJong loved his pretty young wife, and she him. But young love thrives on color, warmth, beauty. It becomes prosaic and inarticulate when forced to begin its day at four in the morning by reaching blindly, dazedly, for limp and obscure garments dangling from bedpost or chair, and to end that day at nine, numb and sodden with weariness, after seventeen hours of physical labor.

It was a wet summer. Pervus' choice tomato plants, so carefully set out in the hope of a dry season, became draggled gray specters in a waste of mire. Of fruit the field bore one tomato the size of a marble.

For the rest, the crops were moderately successful on the DeJong place. But the work necessary to make this so was heartbreaking. Selina had known, during her winter at the Pools', that Klaas, Roelf, and old Jakob worked early and late, but her months there had encompassed what is really the truck farmer's leisure period. She had arrived in November. She [illegible]ried in May. From May until October it was necessary to tend the fields with a concentration amounting to fury. Selina had never dreamed that human beings toiled like that for sustenance. Toil was a thing she had never encountered until coming to High Prairie. Now she saw her husband wrenching a living out of the earth by sheer muscle, sweat, and pain. During June, July, August, and September the good black prairie soil for miles around was teeming, a hotbed of plenty. There was born in Selina at this time a feeling for the land that she was never to lose. . Perhaps the child within her had something to do with this. She was aware of a feeling of kinship with the earth; an illusion of splendor, of fulfillment.

As cabbages had been cabbages, and no more, to Klaas Pool, so, to Pervus these carrots, beets, onions, turnips and radishes were just so much produce, to be planted, tended, gathered, marketed. But to Selina, during that summer, they became a vital part of the vast mechanism of a living world. Pervus, earth, sun, rain, all elemental forces that labored to produce the food for millions of humans. She thought of Chicago's children. If they had red cheeks, clear eyes, nimble brains it was because Pervus brought them the food that made them so. Something of this she tried to convey to Pervus. He only stared, his blue eyes wide and unresponsive.

"Farm work grand! Farm work is slave work. Yesterday, from the load of carrots in town I didn't make enough to bring you the goods for the child so when it comes you should have clothes for it. It's better I feed them to the live stock."

Do Selina and her husband "live happily ever afterward"? It is obvious that there is potential tragedy in the situation.

Cruel Old Custom

There was a time when "laughing" faces were actually manufactured to meet the demand of those who wished to be amused. Up to the end of the reign of James II, human "sculpture" work was carried out by roving tribes of gypsies called Comprachios, who were of Spanish origin. They bought and even kidnaped children, and practiced a science or art of human disfiguration.

Children thus treated grew up with an immovable and fantastic grin. They were an attraction at all successful traveling booths and entertainments until the custom was repressed by William III.

MOVABLE DRAIN BOARD SOLVES PROBLEM

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In kitchens without running water it is sometimes a problem to dispose of the dishwater after every meal, without having to carry several heavy dishpanfuls out to some out-of-doors drain. A woman in Albermarle county, Virginia, who was anxious to make her kitchen more convenient, solved the question, according to a report received by the United States Department of Agriculture, by getting her husband to make her a movable drain board with a hinged support at the lower end. This drain board had a band about two inches high running around three sides to prevent water from being spilled about the kitchen. It hung by a large hook on the kitchen wall when not in use. When it was time to do the dishes, this housekeeper set up the drain board with one end on the table, the other end resting on the hinged leg, the whole sloping toward a tall tin coffee drum which received the water. When the dishwashing was over, the water was removed in one trip out of the kitchen, usually by one of the boys in the family, and the drain board was hung on the wall again.

SKILL IS REQUIRED IN LAYING LINOLEUM

If Work Is Not Done Properly It Is Liable to Buckle and Crack.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Unlike most other floor coverings, linoleum when once laid usually remains undisturbed until it is worn out; therefore particular pains should be taken in laying it. The floor under it should be level, smooth, tight, and dry. On rough floors linoleum will wear unevenly, and moisture will cause the burlap backing to deteriorate and may attract water bugs and other household pests. Cement and composition floors may need special treatment before linoleum is laid, and reliable dealers should be consulted on this point.

In cold weather linoleum should be placed in a warm room for at least 48 hours before it is unrolled. If this precaution is not taken, the linoleum is likely to crack, because cold makes it brittle.

To lay linoleum properly requires some skill, and if the work is not properly done it may buckle and crack. Dealers can often give reliable directions, or, if possible, it is well to employ a trained worker who charges by the square yard and brings with him the needed tools and materials.

There are two ways of fastening linoleum to wood floors—tacking and cementing, states the United States Department of Agriculture. The first is the simpler method, but by the second the seams and edges are made water-tight and the linoleum is said to give longer service. First of all, the quarter-round molding along the foot of the baseboard should be removed and the linoleum cut in strips running crosswise of the floor boards if possible. If it is to be tacked, the strips should be fitted snugly together along the seams but should not be fastened for three or four weeks, for linoleum usually expands when laid on a floor and if tacked down at once will buckle. To give plenty of room for this expansion it is a good plan to trim back the edges next the baseboard for one-fourth or one-half inch or just enough so that the molding will cover the edge. The molding should then be nailed directly to the baseboard, leaving the linoleum free to expand and to be trimmed more next to the baseboard if necessary. The linoleum may be so perfectly held in place that it will not need to be tacked, but if it does, brads should be set one-eighth to one-fourth inch from the edge, about three to four inches apart, and driven well below the surface.

Linoleum may be cemented at the seams and edges directly to a wood floor or permanently cemented down firmly over a layer of deadening felt paper that has itself been pasted to the floor. Some manufacturers and dealers furnish printed directions for this method. The cement used should be waterproof and contain no silicate of soda (water glass), because this is injurious to the linoleum when moisture comes in contact with it.

Orange Milk Cup

1-2 cupful orange juice.
1 teaspoonful lemon juice.
3 tablespoonfuls sugar.
⅛ cupful evaporated milk.
½ cupful water.

Mix sugar with fruit juice; then heat in milk and water slowly. Cool with ice to suit the taste. The most pleasing results are gotten by putting liquid into mason jar and shaking thoroughly.

Vegetable and Cereal Loaf Very Substantial

For lunch or supper, or for any meal where a somewhat unusual dish is wanted, a vegetable loaf may be used. Made according to the recipe below, the loaf will contain rice or some other cereal, and eggs, so that it will be quite substantial. The recipe was worked out by the bureau of home economics, United States Department of Agriculture, in the course of recent experiments in vegetable cookery. These experiments were aimed at developing ways of cooking ordinary vegetables to conserve the mineral constituents and vitamins, and also included finding acceptable combinations of vegetables which might vary the menu.

Vegetable and Cereal Loaf.

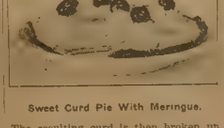
1½ cupfuls cooked kale
¾ cupful cooked carrots diced
1½ cupfuls cooked rice or other cereal
2 eggs
Salt
1 tablespoonful finely minced celery leaves
2 tablespoonfuls butter
½ cupful liquor in which kale was cooked
1 tablespoonful flour

Mix the cooked kale, carrots and rice, and the eggs and salt. Make a sauce by frying the celery leaves in the butter, then adding the kale water and flour and cooking till thick. Mix this with the other ingredients. Mold and shape the mixture into loaf, cover with strips of bacon or with buttered crumbs, and bake in moderate oven until brown.

Sweet Curds Make Good Filling for Pastries

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Sweet curds make a good filling for pie or tarts, suggests the home economics office of the Department of Agriculture. A curd is obtained by adding rennet to warm milk and allowing the milk to stand until it hardens.



Sweet Curd Pie With Meringue.

The resulting curd is then broken up and strained. To the curd from one quart of milk add one level tablespoonful of butter, one-fourth cupful of sugar yolks of two eggs and a few Zante currants or chopped raisins and a little nutmeg. Bake it like custard pie.

Baked Custard

In a baked custard twice as much egg is used to a given measure of milk as in a soft custard. It is cooked without stirring in a baking dish instead of in a double boiler, and therefore retains the soft jellied consistency which differentiates it from soft custard. Baked custard is done when a knife dipped in it comes out clean.

A great variety of flavoring is possible for custards. Commercial extracts may be added to soft custard before serving or to the baked custard before turning into the baking dish. Grated nutmeg may be added to the milk in either case, or the custard may be baked in a dish in which a small amount of sugar has been caramelized. Chocolate should be melted and combined with the milk before pouring over the egg. Fresh fruit, such as bananas, oranges, or peaches; or dried fruits, including dates, cooked prunes, or figs, may be served with either type of custard as a means of flavor. Custard should not be served on fresh pineapple, which gives it an unpleasant, bitter taste.

PETER DELIVERED FROM PRISON

LESSON TEXT—Acts 12:1-19.

GOLDEN TEXT—The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him, and delivereth them.—Ps. 34:7.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter and the Angel.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Peter's Deliverance From Prison.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Peter Was Brought Out of Prison.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Possibilities of Prayer.

I. Peter's Imprisonment (vv. 1-4).

1. By Whom (v. 1).

Herod, the grandson of the wicked Herod who slew the innocent children of Bethlehem.

2. The Reason (v. 3).

It was to gain the favor of the Jews. Herod was not a Jew, but an Edomite, therefore knew that his success was dependent upon his having the goodwill of the Jews. He did not particularly hate the church, but loved popularity. Since the church had developed so as to be a successful rival of Judism, he saw an opportunity to curry favor with the Jews by putting forth his hands against it.

3. The Method (v. 4).

He was arrested, put into prison and guarded by four quaternions of soldiers. A quaternion is a guard of four soldiers. Four quaternions means that a special group was on duty each watch of the night. It was the custom for two soldiers to be in the prison, one on each side of the prisoner bound to his arms with chains (v. 6), the third one to watch outside the door, and the fourth to be near the outside gate.

II. The Church of God in Prayer (v. 5).

The church was at a crisis. Her situation was most grave. James, one of the brethren of the church, was dead, and Peter, the most prominent of all, was in prison. In this desperate strait they did the wise thing—they betook themselves to prayer. It was a noteworthy prayer.

1. It Was Unto God, Not Unto Men, or to Be Heard of Men.

2. It was United Prayer.

3. It Was an Intensely Earnest Prayer.

It was more than unceasing prayer. It was the earnest desire of the soul as it stretched itself out toward God.

4. It Was Definite Prayer.

They specifically offered prayer to God for Peter. Their prayer was concentrated, definite and specific.

III. Peter Delivered by an Angel (vv. 6-11).

This occurred the night before Herod's plan to make a public display of him.

1. Peter Sleeping (v. 6).

The Lord keeps in perfect peace those whose minds are stayed on Him (Isa. 26:3).

2. Peter Leaving the Prison. (vv. 7-10).

A heavenly light shone in the prison. The angel smote Peter on the side; the chains fell off. Peter put on his clothes and passed by one guard after another through the iron gate out into the city. The whole transaction was orderly and leisurely, showing that God is not in a hurry.

3. The Effect Upon Peter (v. 11).

Although the matter was so wonderful to Peter, even outside his consciousness, when he came to himself he was assured beyond a peradventure that God had miraculously delivered him from Herod's wicked hands.

IV. Unconscious Unbelief (vv. 12-19).

1. The Behavior of Peter and the Church (vv. 12-17).

Peter went to the house of Mary and knocked. The knock was answered by Rhoda who was so overjoyed that she forgot to open the gate, and ran in and told them that Peter was at the gate. The disciples were not prepared for such good news, and even accused her of madness. She, undaunted, insisted. They offered as an explanation that perhaps it might be Peter's guardian angel in his likeness. Peter rehearsed unto them the Lord's dealing with him, and instructed them to make these things known unto James and the brethren.

2. The Behavior of the Soldiers (vv. 18-19).

There was great agitation among them as to what had become of Peter. This was a serious matter since they were responsible for him. Not being able to account for Peter's escape, Herod commanded that they be put to death. After this Herod went down to Caesarea. Here he was adored as god. Because he arrogated this honor to himself, the Lord smote him. Herod died, but the Word of the Lord grew and multiplied.

Value of a Deed

The value of a deed depends upon its meaning, and its meaning depends upon its motive and the spirit and purpose that prompt it. The widow's mite is really worth more than the spare cash of the rich, because it means more.—Nathaniel Micklem.

Help That Achy Back!

Is backache making you miserable? Are you tired, nervous, "blue"—utterly played out? Have you suspected your kidneys? Your kidneys are the blood-filters. Once they fall behind in their work, there's a slow poisoning of blood and nerves. Then is apt to come backache, headaches, dizziness, and other annoying kidney irregularities. Don't wait! If your kidneys are sluggish, help them with a stimulant diuretic. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are recommended the world over. Ask your neighbor!

An Alabama Case

Mrs. A. R. Videto, Franklin St., Russellville, Ala., says: "My kidneys acted irregularly. My back was lame and weak, and there was a soreness in it. I couldn't do much of anything before my back gave out entirely. Doan's Pills were recommended and I decided to give them a trial. The first box relieved me and two more boxes cured me entirely."

Citizens of Haleyville want the citizens of Texas to understand and appreciate this and so informed them in a telegram from Mayor Gamble to James J. Bailey of Houston.

Bailey telegraphed his condolences over conditions which could result in the killing of Lee Martin Sunday morning, supposedly while a band that attempted to raid a farmer's house, adding that "we in Texas have driven the masked bandits from out the state of Texas and now live in peace.'

A PROCLAMATION

Whereas, the President has approved the holding of a National Muster Day within the Continental limits of the United States, on July 4th, 1925 the 149th Anniversary of theDeclaration of Independance of our Beloved Country; and

Whereas, we believe that the defense of ourCountry in time of war depends upon its volunteer and citizen soldiery, who shall be properly organized and equipped; and

Whereas, we believe that our country should be able and prepared to defend itself in emergencies; and

Whereas, we believe in the National Defense policies as set out in the Constitution of the United States and the National Defense Act of 1920; and further that in times of peace we should have an organization composed of the Standing Army, the National Guard, and the organized Reserves properly organized and equipped for defense; and

Whereas, we believe that such organization is the least expensive to maintain and most thoroughly in keeping with the principles and policies of those who laid the foundations of our country;

Now, therefore, I, William W. Brandon, Governor of the State of Alabama do heartily concur in the plans for the National Muster Day and do hereby call upon every man of Military age (18-45) to show his public spirit and express his patriotic intent by enlisting for one day, and I ubgently request every civic, religious, fraternal or patriotic organization and all true Alabamians, male or female, to lend every effort and assistance in all possible ways, to make this ocasion, our second National Muster Day, a marked success. I call upon the people of this State on July 4th, to participate in this patriotic demonstration at such hour and occasions during the day as is most convenient for their respective communities. This demonstration is to be superimposed upon any occasions already planned, and will acquaint the American people with their National Defense Policies and obligations, and the workings of the National Defense Act; as well as emphasize the historical occasion when Congress first pledged the man-power and resources of the Country for National Defense; and will commemorate the scrifices made for that Defense.

In witness whereof, I have set my hand and seal of the great State of Alabama this the 16th day of June, 1925.

Wm. W. Brandon,

INFIDEL SNEERS AT CREATOR AND DIES

London, Eng.—Almost immediately upon resuming his chair after making a bitter attack upon Christianity, George Whale, Chairman of the Rational Press Association, keeled over against the table, and in a few minutes was dead.

The startling occurence took place at a dinner given in London recently to observe the centenary of Thomas Huxley, and to encourage the campaign against Christianity. The last few minutes of theinfidel's life were devoted to a ruthless attack on the Christian religion and against Protestant ministery. The speaker ridiculed the Holy Ghost, made fun of the New Testament and belittled Christ and His teachings. The more than 200 guests at the banquet cheered the blasphemous phrases and laughed heartily at his slurs against Christianity, but five minutes later they saw him sink in death. Their shouts turned to hushed whispers, smiles left their awe-struck faces.

One of their number had arisen to propose a toast to the chairman, glasses were lifted high, an outburst of applause was breaking forth, when a suddan hush fell, and all eyes turned to the leader. They saw him slump forward in his chair. The banquet was at its close, and already the orchestra was striking into the strains of the opening dance. But the presence of death stilled the instruments. No official announcement was made of the tragic happening, but the word quickly passed about the crowded room, and the guests, by common consent, quietly departed. George Whale had solved the mystery of the universe and discovered whether he, or the Man of Galilee, knew best whence comes the soul of man and whither it goeth.

ANCIENT VESSELS ARE UNEARTHED IN TURKEY

Constantinople.—Archaeological discovories have been made in the villiage Kadikeuy on the Asiatic coast two miles from Constantinople. During recent excavations in the streets, workmen came across various marble water conduits and reservoirs, and two days later unearthed other valuable objects, including vases, rings and bronze coins, the latter bearing inscriptions and the date of the years 379 to 395, thus proving them to be of the time of the Roman Emperor Theodosius the Great. As the latter is understood to have possessed a palace in the neighborhood, the museum authorities are now conducting excavations in the hope of further discoveries.

There is no law against the intermarriage of whites and blacks in the following states: Connecticut. District of Columbia. Illinios. Iowa. Kansas. Maine, Massachusetts. Michigan. Minnesota. New Hampshire. New Jersey. Mexico. New York. Ohio, Pennsylvania. Rhode Island. Vermont. Washington. Wisconsin and Wyoming.

HAPPINESS REWARD FOR GOOD DEEDS

A good tale speeds best when well told."

There is a faithful negro woman in Clanton who is growing old, but she is burdened with the rearing of a granddaughter. This old mammy is compelled to leave the grandchild at home, when she goes out to work.

The story is pathetic. It was evidently well told to the children in Dr. N. S. Johnson's neighborhood; for their better impulses were aroused. Around to the old darkey's home they sped, and carried their treasures to "Orphan Annie." Happier were they because of their efforts to promote happiness of the less fortunate.

So it is through life.

That lesson of serving cannot be learned too well: its importance cannot be over-estimated. The returns in happiness are cummensurate with one's efforts to serve.

When the lesson of servine is learned, then, and not until then can one be pronounced a citizen.

Those embryo citizens who shared their treasures with "Orphann Annie," were: Pauline and Grace Plyer, Dixie Johnson, Elizabeth Browden. Elizabeth McSwain, Hilda Starkey, Joe and Katherine Ware

THE COW MAY MOO, THE DOG MAY BARK

Portland, Ore.—Barking of dogs and mooing of cows cannot be stopped by city ordinance and owners of animals cannot be blamed if these animals exercise these functions of expression, the city attorney advised the city council when that body directed him to have a Portland man arrested for maintaining dogs which were said to be a nuisance. Neighbors had objected to their barking.

"The law cannot prevent humans from speaking, likewise it cannot prevent a creature of the animal or fowl world from exercising its organs of expression," his opinion read in part.

Montgomery—Scoring evolution and declaring that the theory is not scientific. Dr. Livingston T. May called upon Christian people to resent what he termed as a shame, in his sermon Sunday night at a lity-wide Baptist meeting here.

MRS. ARTHUR JOHNSON ENTERTAINS CLANTON CARD CLUB.

The Clanton Card Club was entertained by Mrs. Arthur Johnson on last Wednesday afternoon.

Mrs. Johnson's home had been made quite attractive for the occasion by the many varieties of cut flowers that the summer season affords. Predominent among these was the dahlia, that Mrs. Johnson seems to know how to grow to perfection.

The favorite card game was played throughout the afternoon.

Upon conclusion of the games, Mrs. Grady Reynolds was found to be the winner of the Club prize, and was awarded a cut-glass candy jar.

The guest prize, an embroidered cup towel, was awarded to Mrs. Hughes Kennedy of Birmingham.

After the awarding of the prizes the hostess served to the Club and their guests a tempting salad course.

A roster of Mrs. Johnson's guests, here the following names: Mesdames J. H Alred, Jno. Browden, N. S. Johnson, Hugh Simpson, J. V. Heard, Grady Reynolds, L. F. Gerald, Oscar Jones, J. Watts Moore, Grady Broadhead, Omar Reynolds, Philip Horn and Hughes Kennedy of Birmingham, and Sam Johnson of Seattle, Wash., and Misses Kathleen Mullins and Madelyn Orr.

CONGRATULATIONS IN ORDER.

The News is congratulating itself upon its good fortune in securing the efficient services of Miss Madelyn Orr as sales manager of its advertising department.

Miss Orr is a woman of wonderfully pleasing personality. Futhermore, she knows a good thing when she sees it; she knows the value of an add in the paper she represents. Her arguments are convincing.

Miss Orr knows that it pays to advertise. Those who expect to come out ahead, had better speak for News advertising space before it is all gone.

Miss Orr is enthused over the prospects in this new undetaking, for she is meeting with cheerful and ready response on the part of her patrons.

Many friends wish for glowing success for Miss Orr as "space seller" for one of the most hustling and up-to-date county papers in the state, the Chilton County News.

APOLOGIES!

Did you never misplace anything?

Well, you never misplaced the setting of one of the season's most beautiful dinner-parties!

Well that was the unique experience of the writer in the last issue of the News. Mrs. J. Watts Moore's skilfully planned and very elaborate dinner parties, with the entertainment of over twenty guests, was placed or misplaced in another prominent Clanton matron's home.

The least said in regard to the reason might be quickest mended.

"Not on the job," probably was the real reason; certainly an accidental mis-placement. It shall not occur again.

Mrs. Moore on the specified occasion, entertained more than twenty guests on the Wednesday before the last, under the auspices of the Clanton Sewing Club. The setting of which was in the richly furnished dinning-room of her own handsome home.

SUNBEAMS PICNIC AT DAKE'S POND.

The Sunbeams of the Clanton Baptist church, chaperoned by Mesdames C. C. Harris, J. Earl Gowan and W. M. Wyatt, had a picnic at Dake's Pond on Monday afternoon.

The Sunbeams assembled in front of the Baptist church for departure to the pond at 2:30.

Forty-two Sunbeams were on hand for the picnic; also their leaders, Misses Erin Danforth and Maud Waggoner.

The picnic was enjoyed thoroughly. Wading in the limpid stream a short distance below the bridge, afforded the usual amount of delight.

The picnic luncheon did not fail to please. Altogether, a great deal of pleasure for all was crowded into the few short hours out at Dake's Pond on the occasion of the Sunbeam picnic.

BEAVER-MORGAN.

On last Saturday afternoon at two o'clock Miss Ila Mae Beaver of Boaz and Mr. B. P. Morgan were married at the home of the bride. They then motored to Birmingham, where they were entertained by friends at Bluff Park Hotel on Shades mountain.

The home-coming on Sunday afternoon of Miss Sophia Mullins was celebrated by her mother, Mrs. P. D. Wilson, with an enjoyable dinner-party on the evening of arrival.

The setting for the dinner-party was the private dinning-room of Hotel Wilson.

POPWELL-BURNETT

A June marriage around which is kindled the interest of many friends, was that one of Wednesday morning, when the vows were spoken that united Miss Mary Anne Popwell to Mr. Julius C. Burnett.

The bride and groom, lovers since early childhood, with a few relatives and close friends, repaired to the pastorium, where Dr. S. J. Ezell performed the ceremony.

After the honeymoon trip, Mr. and Mrs. Burnett will return to Clanton, where a little love-nest on the west side of town is made ready and awaits their coming.

Good wishes of many friends are extended the happy couple.

Mrs. Ludie Lenbir had the misfortune to get spurred by a rooster last week on the arm which is causing her quite a little pain.

EVERY WORKER A PROPERTY OWNER

Speaking on Labor's share in ownership of industry and property, Arthur Williams, vice-president of the New York Edison Company, ina recent address, reviews the progress being made by the larger industrial and utility corporations of our country in bringing capital and labor closer together. He advocated that "we shall give to the great body of workers in this country—not give in any sense of philanthropy or charity, but in the substance of right—some monetary part or its equivalent and some saving sense of proprietorship in the country's progress and productive enterprises from year to year."

He stated that it should not be assumed that he was considering or advocating nationalization or equal distribution of property or wealth. "On the contrary" he said, "I believe that great wealth in the hands of either an individual or corporation has been one of the nation's greatest blessings. Increasingly, possessors of great wealth give every indication of realizing that because of its possession they are trustees of human welfare and advancement in many directions.

"Consider what many of our grea corporations are doing in the public interest which could not be done without a superior degree of financial strength. The rapid development of 'personel' work as an executive and administrative function—a feature now generally found in well conddcted corporations—offers an example of a further and very vital effort to serve and improve the human element in industry.

"None of this, human element—this development toward a higher civilization which eventually will reach the daily lives of every one living in the republic—would have been possible through any plan ever suggested or put to practice under any system of nationalization of property or its equal distribution. On the contrary, I find myself unable to mention a single instance of human welfare service in which our government as such has taken an initiatory part. The field of theory, research and preliminary or experimental applicaton has been left to individuals severally or united into corporations possessing large financial resources. Why should we not render unto Caesar that which belongs to Caesar and give these facts their proper weight in our economic and social structure?

"The men and women who work and yet own and possess nothing which they recognize as property—there are still many millions of them in our country—are the most receptive soil for the seeds of discontent and destructive radicalism. Whatever happens—they hear from the professional or political demagogue—can only be to their advantage and that of their families, for they have nothing to lose and everything to gain. In this country there are many publications, having in the aggregate a very large circulation, preaching destructive theories against private ownership of property and against our present form of government.

"The causes of discontent and restlessness can be removed largely; but this object cannot be accomplished by kind words or fine phrases or moral precepts alone. The curg can only be brought about through constructive and economic agencies and upon a basis of faithful service and industrial justice.

"Every faithful worker an owner of property or 'every worker a capitalist'—is a destructive tendencies so evident in many directions. The theory has been adopted by the great Steel Corporation, Standard Oil group, Consolidated Gas & Electric Utility group of New York, public utilities, telephone, railroads and other large industries.

"Such organizations as these, directed by most expert and highly developed mentalities, may be accepted as safe guides along the highway of social and economic development of our industrial and commercial life."

The man who lives by the side of the road nowadays has a house full of dust. Mail crossing the continent in a day now travels about as fast as bad news. If the next war is to be fought in ther air, as predicted, it will have to wait until the last one gives it up.

Telling the whole truth and making it understood never harms anyone, it is half-truths or publishing that which is wholly untrue that does the injury to all alike.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

SOCIABLE BIRDS

"Shall we join the others?" asked Mr. Yellow-Headed Blackbird, of his mate.

"Oh, yes, that would be so nice," his mate answered cheerily.

"There is such a good crowd near yonder prairie," Mr. Yellow-Headed Blackbird continued. "And I know where there is a good marshy pond, too."

"Oh, you are very wonderful," said Mrs. Yellow-Headed Blackbird.

"What do you say to these plans, birdlings?" asked Mr. Yellow-Headed Blackbird of the four bird youngsters.

"There'd be lots more playmates then, eh, chack, chack," the birdlings answered.

"Ah, they take after us," said Mr. Yellow-Headed Blackbird.

The four birdlings had been gray eggs some time before, gray eggs speckled with tan. They had been in a nest of rushes which was safely held by stronger rushes up above the pond. The nest had been warm and deep and comfortable.

So the Yellow-Headed Blackbird family went to join other yellow-headed blackbird families. There had been some others where they had lived, and these all went along, too.

A good many of them went and joined a huge, huge colony.

"Ah," said Mr. Yellow-Headed Blackbird, when they arrived at their new home, "we should have come here earlier in the season. It's delightful here.

"So many nice families, too."

All the others greeted Mr. Yellow-Headed Blackbird and Mrs. Yellow-Headed Blackbird, and the children were greeted, too.

Mr. Yellow-Headed Blackbird looked very handsome with his yellow cap and bright yellow waistcoat and beautiful black suit with white touches to the wings.

Mrs. Yellow-Headed Blackbird wore a brownish suit, and her yellow hat and front feathers were not so bright as Mr. Yellow-Headed Blackbird's were. Her hat too, was trimmed with brown.

It was unusual for these birds to have joined the others when they did, for usually all the birds are together during the time that they are all setting up nest keeping and attending to the young.

But this family with a few others joined the great colony later than they should have done in order to keep up the Yellow-Headed Blackbirds ways.

"You Are Very Wonderful," Said Mrs. Yellow-Headed Blackbird.

"There is no mistake about it, we do love company," said Mr. Yellow-Headed Blackbird, as he began chattering to the old and new friends.

"We are a sociable crowd," said Mrs. Yellow-Headed Blackbird. "There is no mistake about that."

"What fun it will be with so many of us," the birdlings said.

They were quite grownup by now. At least they considered they were, and it was not far from the truth, although their mother and father thought they were still young children.

All of the Yellow-Headed Blackbirds chattered and then they gave a concert that evening in honor of the new arrivals.

Had the new arrivals been other than Yellow-Headed Blackbirds, they would not have thought it an honor, for the Yellow-Headed Blackbirds make a very queer noise when they sing.

It sounds more like a squeaking chorus than a singing concert.

They give different sorts of squeaks and feel quite satisfied with themselves and with each other.

At least, they do not object to the squeaking sounds, for they gather together in huge crowds, and where you find one you're sure of finding many.

They move about in a most curious way when they make these squeaking sounds, as though it was quite painful, but they keep on doing it, so it cannot be so very painful.

Surely, they can't think it so beautiful that at all costs it must be done.

"It's fine that we came," said Mr. Yellow-Headed Blackbird.

"Fine," said Mrs. Yellow-Headed Blackbird.

"Fine," said the four children.

And all their new friends and neighbors squeaked:

"Fine, fine, fine."

FOCUS ON SPORTS APPAREL; SHOES FOR THE FASTIDIOUS

JUST at this season of the year when all our world goes jaunting about on vacations and outings, fashion interest centers on sports clothes and designers busy themselves with new versions of the best liked styles. We see the prophecies that this would be a "white summer" fulfilled today in sports and other apparel in which white predominates, with touches of color introduced in details of the dress or in accessories worn with it.

The white skirt, usually plaited, and made of silk crepe, wool or rayon materials, maintains its important position for street and sports wear and is worn with silpon blouses of gay printed silk showing colored patterns on a white ground. White crepe de chine with printed border designs in high colors is used for these blouses, which are made with short kimono sleeves, the border appearing at the bottom of the blouse. All white blouses of crepe de chine prove themselves useful for either sports or other wear. One of these, with a white plaited skirt, is shown in the picture, worn with a scarf and hat set of printed silk. The ends of the scarf are finished with ribbon, extended into ties that fasten about the wrists. By this clever contrivance the scarf plays a double role making a graceful sleeve drapery.

When a blouse of printed silk is worn with a white skirt, fashion favors a white hat and scarf set, the scarf finished at the ends with a border like the silk in the blouse. Or if a white blouse with colored border is chosen the scarf is bordered to match, or motifs cut from the printed silk are applied to it at the ends.

In footwear white strap slippers or sport shoes, or black slippers are popular but do not monopolize the showings of summer sports shoes. Light gray and tan, or combinations of white with a color, in shoes having a definite sports character, contribute variety in dainty footwear. Other interesting accessories shown are the gay Chinese parasols of paper that will withstand a little shower, for one thing, and cretonne jackets and coats for another.

Concerning the apparel of women more man has always expressed himself in a way that is forceful and betrays where his thoughts dwell. But as a result of his logic he usually strikes the nail on the head, and now he is saying that women are wearing millinery on their feet. This is a very arresting and revealing remark—a tribute to the daintiness and beauty of current styles in footwear Women have grown so fastidious in the matter of clothing their feet that we stand in need of terms less matter-of-fact than "shoes" or "footwear" to describe the creations that bootmakers are turning out.

Kid is the favorite medium for the graceful and dainty footwear which distinguishes the summer season Practically all the shoes for street wear or for afternoon are made of it and also many of the dressier types for evening. The new models prove very flattering to the feet made with toes a shade more rounded and heels a trifle higher than they have been—all feet look small in them. Styles are conservative and elegant, with many attractive combinations of leather to give them interest, and endless variation of the strap slipper and oxford to choose from. The handsome pumps of black kid, trimmed with a shaped band of white kid, shown here worn with a crepe afternoon frock are typical of present styles. In the slippers at the right the pinnacle of summer comfort and style is achieved in brown kid worn with silk hose to match, and this outfitting of the feet is approved for morning or afternoon with tailored or dressier costumes. Below are handsome white kid oxfords for wear with summer frocks and sports clothes and equally good style with tailored suits and frocks. They will delight those women who choose white footwear in summer.

The main difference between pleasant and unpleasant people is mainly that the latter demand consideration and the former are quick to give it.

SEASONABLE GOOD THINGS

A good, nourishing soup is always seasonable. Try the following:

Veal Soup.—Cook a two-pound knuckle of veal slowly in water to cover until the meat falls from the bones. There should be five or six cupfuls of stock. Add two cupfuls of diced potato and cook until soft; add the meat and one and one-half tablespoonfuls of catsup, one-half teaspoonful of flour, a few dashes of pepper. Thicken slightly with one tablespoonful each of flour and butter cooked together. Pour over sliced hard-cooked egg and garnish with thin slices of lemon.

Leftover Lamb.—Put six tablespoonfuls of currant jelly, four tablespoonfuls of butter, one-half tablespoonful of lemon juice with salt and tabasco sauce to taste, into a saucepan or shallow dish. Lay in slices of lamb and heat until thoroughly hot. Serve with the sauce poured around the lamb.

Braised Mutton Chops.—Heat two tablespoonfuls of suet and fry a slice or two of onion, a tablespoonful of chopped celery and the same of carrot. Brown the chops quickly on both sides, add a pint of boiling water and cook one and one-half hours at a very low temperature on the back of the stove.

Australian Fillet.—Pound a fillet of beef flat, rub it well with salt on both sides and spread out on a meat board. Chop a fourth of a pound of bacon, three or four boned sardines; mix with pepper a pinch of ginger and several tablespoonfuls of bread crumbs. Spread this dressing on the meat, roll up and tie. Heat some butter in a frying pan, put in the meat and brown on both sides. Add five or six tablespoonfuls of thick sour cream and keep it a few minutes longer over the strong heat, reduce the heat and simmer for an hour.

A nice well-seasoned potato soup with a cupful of hot tea and bread and butter makes a good luncheon. Use two medium-sized potatoes, mash and add to a pint of milk which has been scalded with a slice of onion. Season with salt and butter.

Refreshing Drinks.

We cannot know too many ways of serving good cool drinks to thirsty friends.

Pineapple Julep.—Add the juice of two oranges to a grated pineapple and a pint of mashed raspberries; stir in half a cupful of powdered sugar and at serving time add plain or effervescent water.

Currant Water.—All sorts of fruit waters may be prepared from this recipe: Mash the fruit, add sufficient sugar and water to make the proper flavor and consistency. For currants, a pound of ripe currants, for raspberries, a quarter of a pound. Strain the juice through a sieve, add a pound of sugar, let stand until serving time, and add water to make it palatable.

Mint Cup.—Boil a pound of sugar and a quart of water for five minutes; strain. Take the leaves from twelve stalks of mint, chop fine and pound them to a pulp, then add them and the juice of two lemons to the sugar and water and strain. Turn into an ice cream freezer and stir until the mixture is frozen like snow. Serve in glasses.

When serving any fruit punch, spoonfuls of lemon ice added occasionally to the punch adds wonderfully to its palatability.

Cherry Shrub.—Wash a quart of ripe, stoned cherries through a colander; boil a pound of sugar and a quart of water for five minutes; add the cherries and the juice of a lemon, strain, stand aside until very cold. Serve with shaved ice or partly freeze.

Apple Cup.—Wash and core six apples, then cut them into thin slices without paring. Put them in a granite kettle with a cupful of raisins, two bay leaves, a two-inch stick of cinnamon and the grated rind of three lemons. Add two quarts of cold water, bring to a boil, add two quarts of cold water, cover the kettle and simmer for thirty minutes; strain through a muslin bag. When cold add the juice of three lemons, and at serving time add shaved ice.

St. James Pudding.—This is a simple pudding, easy to make and needs no eggs. Melt three tablespoonfuls of butter, add one-half cupful of molasses, a half cupful of milk, one and two-thirds cupfuls of flour, a half teaspoonful of soda, the same of salt, a half teaspoonful each of clove, allspice, nutmeg and a half pound of dates cut into fine pieces. Steam in half-pound baking powder cans for two and one-half hours.

Lesson for June 28

REVIEW

GOLDEN TEXT—Ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth.—Acts 1:8.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Boy Jesus at the Temple School.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Asking and Answering Questions.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Growth of the Early Church.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How the Gospel Spread.

As usual, the methods employed in the review largely depend upon the teacher and the class. Two methods are suggested:

First: The biographical. This is a method which can nearly always be used to advantage, since pupils of all ages are interested in the study of persons. Peter, Paul, Stephen, Philip and Barnabas are very prominent characters in the quarter's lessons. These may be assigned to members of the class the week before with a view of a brief biographical sketch being prepared and read to the class.

Second: The summary method. This method calls for the review of the principal facts of each lesson with statement of the leadings teachings thereof. The following is suggested:

Lesson I.—On the Day of Pentecost, the risen and ascended Christ sent the promise of the Father causing the Holy Ghost to descend upon the disciples to qualify them to be witnesses of His death and resurrection to all the world.

Lesson II.—The healing of the lame man shows that the risen Christ is able to make strong a man who was born a cripple. The man who was healed thoroughly advertised the miracle. Those who have experienced the life of God cannot help but make it known.

Lesson III.—The church is God's dwelling place. Since it is His dwelling place it is as holy as the holy place in the sanctuary. The judgment which befell Ananias and Sapphira proves that God will not allow the hypocrite to escape His judgment.

Lesson IV.—The behavior of Stephen proves that the risen Christ is able to sustain His witnesses, even while they are sealing their testimony with their blood. His standing shows His active interest in His disciples, and that He welcomes home to heaven those who are faithful.

Lesson V.—The experiences of Daniel and his companions show that total abstinence pays.

Lesson VI.—Philip, the only man in the New Testament called evangelist, is in the energy of the Spirit preaching the Word and winning men to Christ.

Lesson VII.—The conversion of Saul, the bitter enemy of Christ, is an illustrious example of what the revelation of Christ in His glory can do, and also illustrates the method of the conversion of Israel.

Lesson VIII.—After Saul's conversion, he straightway preached Christ as the Son of God. Those who are really saved know whom they have believed.

Lesson IX.—The stupendous miracle wrought by the risen Christ at the hands of Peter proved that the gospel lost none of its power by being preached abroad.

Lesson X.—When Christ would break down the middle wall of partition between the Jews and Gentiles, He gave to Cornelius and Peter each a vision. When the gospel was offered to the Gentiles, the Holy Ghost came upon them as at Pentecost.

Lesson XI.—Before the foreign missionary enterprise was launched, a new center of operation was established at Antioch. The Holy Spirit established this strategical center and sent out the missionaries.

Lesson XII.—The risen Christ hears the prayers of the church and sends His angels to deliver His faithful servants.

The Best Judges Us

Our attitude concerning the great value, the great reality, the great personality, is not to put pressure upon our own minds or upon the minds of others to believe in them; and not primarily either with ourselves or others to defend them or to argue for them, but simply to give them opportunity with us, and to do what we may to help others, too, to give that opportunity. The best, thus, judges us rather than we it.—Henry Churchill King.

Better Than Guilt

Better it were, that all the miseries which nature owns were ours at once, than guilt.—Shakespeare.

Let Us Not Lose Faith

Earl Balfour said not long ago: "Let us not fear that the future is going to be less glorious than the past. Problems of which we never dreamed multiply upon us until we are almost overwhelmed. But let us not lose faith or courage."

For Truth's Sake

To love truth for truth's sake is the principal part of human perfection in this world and the seed-plot of all other virtues.—John Locke.

Ovation Accorded to "Babe Ruth's Brother"

The biggest tiger in the world, so I believe, resides in the Calcutta zoo. I saw him there.

And they also point out to you the granite shaft which marks the site of the infamous "Black Hole," in which 123 out of 146 British soldiers were smothered one summer night.

But stranger than these things was the report of a baseball game played in Calcutta in July by sailors from Uncle Sam's warship lying in the harbor, says Girard in the Philadelphia Inquirer. I am indebted to our fellow townsman, William Lancaster Jones, consul general at Calcutta, for the report which appeared in the Calcutta Statesman:

"In America there is a great man named Babe Ruth—a veritable Jack Hobbs, in fact—who apparently has several brothers. At all events, several batsmen representing the navy took the pitch with a concerted yell, 'Here's Babe Ruth's brother!'"

His Symptoms

"I believe Pole Taddleum is tiggering on getting married or something of the sort," said the landlord of the Petunia tavern.

"What makes you think so?" asked Burt Blurt.

"Well, he was a good checker player no longer than a month ago, but now instead of playing the game he just funters with it. Sometimes he won't play more than two hours and he says he's tired and quits. Of course, a feller is allowed to do a reasonable amount of studying before making a move, but sometimes Pole will set and stare at the board for half an hour if you don't poke him and not make a move. Yes, sir; as sure as you're born, he is either thinking about getting married or else is afraid he's got an incurable disease."—Kansas City Star.

Business Tender Hearted

Officials of the Birch Valley Lumber company at Tioga, W. Va., demonstrated that "big business" has a tender heart sometimes. This company refused to fill a Philadelphia lumber yard's order for white oak until a robin, which was discovered rearing a young brood on top of the pile, had time to teach the fledglings how to fly. The officials declined to allow the workmen to remove the timbers, though it meant waiting some days for the brood to grow up, and there were no other seasoned white oak planks in the yard.

A New Variety

Joedy's mother was planning to take him to see the circus parade, and, as it was his very first parade, she thought perhaps some explanation would be apropos. So the sights to be seen were marshalled before him in fancy, and great stress was put on the cowboys. He listened gravely but said nothing. When the silence on his part was noticed she asked him, "Why Joedy, don't you want to see the cowboys?" The answer came slowly, "Well, yes, mother dear, but I'd rather see a lamb boy."

New Professions

In the ten years between the federal census of 1910 and 1920 there were only two new professions developed, so far as being recognized by the classifications of the United States census are concerned. These two were osteopathy and aeronautics. The federal bureau of the census classifies all gainful occupations according to its index, and recognizes no other officially.

WAS NOT FIT TO DO HER WORK

Dreadful Condition of Mrs. Fullerton's Health Remedied by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Clearfield, Pa. — "I cannot begin to tell you how much Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped me in every way. Before taking it I couldn't stand on my feet without pains running all through my whole body from my waist down, just like threads pulling. I was not fit to do any work. My mother got me to try the Vegetable Compound and I have found great benefit, and I not only recommend it for such troubles, but to build up the whole system. I have used it for most everything that gets wrong with me. When I begin to feel nervous and irritable I don't stop long in getting a bottle of the Vegetable Compound if I haven't got one in the house. It gives a fine appetite and makes a new woman of me. You may use this testimonial in my own town or anywhere else, and I will answer any letters I receive." — Mrs. RUSH FULLERTON, 525 S. 2nd Street, Clearfield, Pa.

To Harness Desert Heat

Scientists who have been delving into the future of the development of natural utilities have suggested that it is feasible to harness the heat of the great Sahara desert sands. While the suggestion is a vapory one just now, scientists who look upon the idea seriously say it is hardly more impracticable than the harnessing of waterfalls seemed to be some years ago.

Sheep Diseases Causing Losses

Much of Trouble Among Western Flocks Can Be Readily Controlled.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A series of related sheep and lamb diseases which have caused western flock owners increasing losses can readily be brought under control by preventive measures. This announcement by the United States Department of Agriculture is based on the results of investigations by Dr. W. T. Huffman, federal veterinarian stationed in Idaho, who has worked in co-operation with Dr. J. S. Dade, inspector in charge for the state board of sheep commissioners.

Trace Many of Losses.

In the past the sheepmen have accepted most of the losses from strange diseases philosophically as one of the hazards of the business, but the increasing prevalence and virulence of the infection have caused them to seek relief. Acting on requests for assistance from flock owners in southern Idaho, the veterinary investigators have traced many of the losses to four forms of the disease known as necrobacillosis. These related ailments are: Foot rot, lip-and-leg ulceration, a venereal form of the disease affecting breeding stock, and liver infection of young lambs through the navel. In the form of the disease last mentioned, affected lambs invariably die—usually before three weeks old.

The monetary loss is also heavy for sheep affected with foot rot, since they cannot travel, and as a consequence are unable to obtain much feed. A similar result follows infection with lip-and-leg ulceration. Moreover, sick sheep fall an easy prey to coyotes and other range marauders. The existence of any one form of the disease may lead to other forms in the same band, a fact which sheepmen apparently have not understood. Accordingly, the investigators report, the infection of adult sheep must be controlled if flock owners wish to avoid the fatal liver infection of their lambs.

Best Means of Control.

Treatment for the first three forms of necrobacillosis consists in the use of antiseptics and astringents, combined with the prompt removal from the flock of affected sheep. Medicinal treatment of affected lambs is useless, as infection involves the liver and soon proves fatal. Disinfection of the navel for a day or two is sometimes beneficial in prevention, but the best means of control is to keep infection out of the flock.

"Where the soil is not sandy or otherwise porous," say the investigators, "we advocate the use of a layer of gravel at least two inches deep in the lambing sheds. When covered with straw, this makes a clean dry bed; and the soil is not worked up as occurs with dirt floors. While concrete floors for lambing sheds have been suggested, these are scarcely suitable for range conditions where the sheds are largely temporary or are on leased land. Gravel can be disinfected without difficulty. It is inexpensive and has proved highly satisfactory for the purpose."

"To give an idea of the extent of lamb losses," the report states, "one flock master who had a band of 3,000 ewes, declared that this year the liver infection had been fatal to $1,000 worth of lambs. Another owner who was grazing 1,000 ewes, lost 200 of them—20 per cent—from the foot-rot form of the disease."

Can Control Losses.

Observations of the investigators support the belief that sheepmen can control their losses and prevent further spread of the disease, in its various forms, if they will "cure up" all infected stock before letting it go on the range. A great many ewes, also, are being shipped East, and purchasers are urged to co-operate in suppressing any infection that may develop.

The disease appears to be associated largely with bad weather, crowded and insanitary feed lots, infected ranges, failure to separate infected animals promptly from the flock, and muddy and insanitary lambing sheds. With the control methods outlined and a clear understanding of the close relationship between the various forms of the disease, sheepmen need not continue to sustain heavy losses. In Idaho where the conditions described have received special study, further information may be obtained by addressing the State Board of Sheep Commissioners, Boise. The United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, also will furnish bulletins on sheep diseases and parasites to interested persons.

Tuberculosis Is Spread Through Carelessness

Failure to destroy or bury deeply the carcasses of animals that die from natural causes, so that other animals cannot have access to them, is responsible for the spread of much infection on farms. In a recent investigation a farmer admitted having lost between 80 and 100 chickens from disease. He had thrown the dead fowls into the hog pen and had also hauled the cleanings from the chicken house into a field in which his hogs ran. Tuberculin testing showed about 25 per cent infection of tuberculosis among the fowls; and a sow that was tested with avian tuberculin proved to be tuberculous and indicated, moreover, that the infection was of the fowl type.

Ground-Hog Day Is Fast Losing Favor

Control Campaigns Begun in Some Sections.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Because of its burrowing and feeding habits, the ground hog is considered in most localities an undesirable resident, and to make matters worse its "weather predictions" on the second of February are no longer taken seriously. "Ground-hog day" thus bids fair to disappear in states where the habits of this rodent run counter to the interests of the farmer, and in such places ground hogs, or woodchucks, or marmots, as they are variously termed, will face forcible ejection if necessary. In places where they do little harm they may be allowed to live in moderate numbers for use as game and food.

Ground-hog control campaigns in Indiana and Illinois have been popular this spring, and the biological survey of the United States Department of Agriculture has been called on to co-operate with state officials and individuals in conducting them. Four county-wide campaigns just completed by the representative of the survey in charge of rodent control in the eastern district have proved successful and have resulted in requests for similar work in 20 other counties in the district. More than $6,000 has been raised by county commissioners for the purchase of fumigation material, which will be distributed in most cases without cost to the farmers.

Milk Fever Is Serious Menace to Fresh Cows

All of the high producers should be closely watched for milk fever during the 48-hour period immediately following freshening, says John M. Shaw, dairy husbandry specialist, Iowa State college. The only man who may feel secure from loss from this disease is the man with low-producing cows.

Restlessness, stamping of the feet and general nervousness are among the early symptoms. These are quickly followed by a paralysis in the rear legs, which causes the typical stagger. This condition becomes rapidly worse until the animal gets down and is unable to rise. Cows suffering from milk fever are often found thus with heads thrown back with their muzzles pointed flankward.

While the disease often results fatal within 24 hours, the "air treatment" is one of the surest cures. Inflate the udder by means of a milk-fever outfit and tie each teat with a strand of cloth to prevent air escape. In severe cases two or more inflations of the udder are often necessary. The air should remain in the udder from 12 to 24 hours, or longer in case of only partial recovery.

Have Hay Available for Calves From Very First

Hay for calves should be available from the first. By the time they are fifteen days old, they will be eating an appreciable amount. There is some uncertainty as to the kind of hay best suited for calves. Some dairymen have no bad effects where alfalfa hay is used for calf feeding, while others find that the calves scour badly. For this latter group, red clover seems to give much better results. It has been argued by some that if alfalfa is available from the beginning, there is less danger than if it is first fed after the calf is two or three weeks old.

Silage is a satisfactory calf feed if fed in moderation and care is exercised to remove all moldy portions. Calves at the Iowa State college dairy farm have shown more rapid and more economical gains when silage has been included in their rations.

Various figures have been given to indicate the feed requirements of a calf to six months. The following are from Eckles and are the average of the rations of seven calves: Whole milk, 360 pounds; skim milk, 2,804 pounds; hay, 270 pounds; grain, 113 pounds.

FARM NOTES

Muskmelons require warm soil and a great deal of fertilizer.

Sunflowers are ornamental and the seeds make good food for poultry.

Successful dairymen find the silo is an essential on farms where 30 or more cows are milked.

• • •

Potassium iodide fed to pregnant ewes will keep the lamb crop practically free from goiter.

An oil-can, wrench, or hammer at hand is worth two or three in the bush—or fence corner.

• • •

Sufficient live stock should be maintained on each farm to consume a considerable portion of the legumes raised.

Young, growing chicks need shade and free range, plenty of fresh water and proper food to make best profits for the owner.

A satisfactory type of portable house is one that is 10 feet wide, 12 feet long. The front should be about 7 feet high with the back 4½ feet high.

• • •

The first feed in the morning is generally scratch feed, which is fed in the litter. The sooner this is fed in the morning the better, for it encourages the hens to get off the roost.

Not Well Since Three Years Old

Catarrh of the Ear Neighbor Recommended PE-RU-NA

The experience of Mrs. J. C. Dacus, 1621 Booker St., Little Rock, Ark., was not an unusual one. It was in fact a repetition of what has happened in thousands upon thousands of instances. She had a running condition of the ear from the time she was three years old.

In spite of treatment it persisted and became very offensive. One day a neighbor recommended Pe-ru-na and La-cu-pia which had relieved his wife of the same trouble.

Mrs. Dacus used three bottle of each of these quick acting remedies and reports that the discharge and offensive odor are both gone.

Her disease was one of the very many forms taken by Catarrh and is known as chronic Otitis.

Wherever the catarrhal condition is located Pe-ru-na reaches it.

May be purchased any place in tablet or liquid form.

business of production, the protecting of crops from pests and disease, the introducing of varieties of crops and the movement on distribution of products to market, its newer lines of work are little known.

Under the direction of the Bureau of Agricultural economics—the latest branch of endeavor, the department of agriculture concerns itself only with problems of farm management, marketing and various economic services, writes Henry C. Taylor, chief of this bureau, in the June issue of the Kiwanis magazine.

One of the most important promotions of this bureau is the preparation and release of the crop and livestock estimates and condition reports, long used by exchanges, banks and business men. Closely allied to the crop reporting work are the annual reports now issued early each year on the agricultural outlook and the monthly bird's eye statement issued on the agricultural situation."

All these reports are now in great demand by business houses and financial and investment companies of all kinds, says Chief Taylor. In the New England states and in Montana the bureau now offers aid in issuing a report of localized conditions. Other states will soon adopt similar plans, according to the writer.

"With the crop reports go our market news service. This information is gathered from all the great producing centers and in all the principal markets and telegraphed in to Washington each morning. It is then compiled and wired back to shippers and dealers the country over."

A leased telegraph wire system of 7,500 miles is the backbone of this system, aided by every other known device—commercial wire mail, radio telephone and radio telegraph.

"It is a dramatic moment in the life of our bureau," says Chief Taylor, "when these reports are released. In a room equipped with many telephones and telegraphic instruments the representatives of the press and exchanges nervously await the release signal for sending out the reports that have been compiled behind locked doors."

FOR PRACTICAL STUDY OF WORLD PROBLEMS

In a note accompanying an anony gift of $500 toward the endowment fund of the Walter Hines Page School of International Relations to be established at Johns Hopkins University, the donor said:

"In memory of the son of a life-long friend who was killed on the side of the Allies and of the son of a brother who was killed on the side of the Germans."

The Page school is conducting a nation wide appeal for $1,000,000, under the chairmanship of Owen D. Young, to provide the initial endowment for establishment of the school at the Johns Hopkins University. Headquarters of the movement are 111 Broadway, New York

The establishment of this school is the most practical step yet taken to eliminate future international disputes

TRUE PUBLIC OWNERSHIP

The large amount of money that has been and is being put into the industrial corporations, particularly by the small investor, is bringing about the ownership of these industries not by the government, but by a proyortion of the people. This is not alone by their direct investments, but also through the indirect investments of the people's money by their insurance companies, banks, trust companies, and other fiduciary institutions. It is to be hoped, and the indications are it may be expected, that for the good of all, this tendency will extend until a far larger proportion of the people will become part owners in our great industrial life.—Martin J. Insull.

A COSTLY JOKE

Not compulsory automobile liability insurance but jail is the best cure for reckless automobile driving which disregards all rights of others.

"Compulsory automobile insurance a joke," said H. D. Wagner, Chicago claim adjuster for Employers Liability Assurance Corporation, "but under certain conditions it might prove to be a very serious joke. So far the legislators have had more sense than to begin such a dangerous experiment. No one knows the dangers of compulsory automobile insurance better than the claim adjuster.

"Such a law, if enacted, would make accidents more numerous, would make them more difficult to handle, would produce ten claims where there is now one, and would make trouble all along the line. If compulsory automobile insurance is ever put into effect it should provide that the protection to be furnished must be insurance and not merely indemnification. The insolvency of the insured should not affect the liability of the company for loss. That there are many concerns issuing contracts of indemnification which would attempt to qualify under the compulsory liability act, and the results would unquestionably be very unsatisfactory."

RURAL TEACHERS AND RURAL SCHOOL EQUIPMENT

Rural teachers are no longer indifferent as they formerly were to the necessity of having tools to work with and right sanitary conditions to conserve their health and that of their pupils. In the past negligent school boards only too often refused to make necessary purchases and thus teacher and pupils were handicapped through lack of adequate blackboard space modern maps, a wall clock, and the like. The teacher's only resource was the hope of raising money for these necessities through school entertainments.

Times, however, have changed and school board members interviewing young women in regard to rural teaching positions for next fall are discovering. Alert candidates have been taught, as part of their professional preparation for teaching, the essential articles of equipment. They know enough about the necessity of tools to work with that, after satisfying themselves that other conditions are to their liking, they ask to be taken to the schoolhouses in which they are to teach.

Having arrived at the schoolhouse the prepared candidate checks on an official blank which she has at hand the equipment found. She asks for essentials not found, and has the good sense to make her signing of a contract depenent upon a written promise that such equipment will be provided. "Why learn how to teach?" asks this prudent young woman, "and try to get along without tools and materials? Neither housekeepers nor farmers attempt it, why should teachers?"

BRITISH PARTERNALISM

Under the scheme for widows', orphans' old age pensions proposed in England there is the beginning of wholesale governmental insurance that will attract worldwide attention. Under the bill now pending in parliament, the operations of which are to be financed and guaranteed by the treasury, it is estimated that in ten years the annual distributable benefits will amount to about $400,000,000. To Americans the explanations of the measure are confusing, but enveloping it all is the negation of the British individualistic principle. A sort of German paternalism pervades it

If the British pension scheme is adopted statesmen and economists will have a new experiment in racial growth or decadence to observe. It would be idle to predict results. The British have a way of doing things. But so have Americans. Germany was profiting by the American idea before the war. England was losing by comparison. It remains to be seen how the opposing ideals of democracy will develop in the next two decades. There is constant pressure being exerted in the United States to establish state insurance of one kind or another as an entering wedge for the adoption of other socialistic schemes.

THE PUBLIC SUPPORTS FIREBUGS

The following editorial from the Portland, Oregon, Journal comments on a situation which is too common in practically every American City:

"Juries can free guilty firebugs when they want to. But the public pays.

Eight separate fires were started in a house in portland. The fire bureau was quick on the scene and put out the blaze in time to have a full view of the tracks of the firebug.

"The furniture was soaked with coal oil. Furniture that the owner paid $137 for was insured for $1300.

"In a Portland lodging house here were two fires within 35 days. Papers and shavings piled on the floor and stuffed in chimneys and oil-soaked rags near the remains of a burned candle were found in the rooms. Insurance of $1500 was carried on the contents, which had been offered for sale for $450 with out a buyer.

"A store building was burned March 21. Insurance of $8450 aws carried on the contents. The arson squad says there were no contents in the building.

"Arson has become an industry in Portland. Juries don't convict. A cafeteria was burned for the insurance. One of the owners said he burned it to get the insurance. He saturated a mop with coal oil, attached a short candle, lighted the candle and left the palce. The first jury hung. The confessions of both owners were before it, but it disagreed.

"The jur yat the second trial convicted, but recommended parole. And the judge granted it. If juries and courts don't punish firebugs, of course the business of burning and colecting the insurance will go on.

"And a lot of people think it all right in the belief that the insurance companies pay. But where do the companies get the money? They don't pay one cent of their own money for these incendiary or other fires. They pay with the money that the insured pay in premiums.

"The home owner pays. The merchant pays. The industrial plant pays. The owner of every kind of property insured against fire pays. It goes out of their pockets in higher rates, and they may not realize it, but they do all the paying for every fire.

"And that isn't the worst. As if there were not enough crime, the system of incendiary fires is making more and more criminals. Every firebug is a crook. Every new firebug is a new crook. And new crooks are being made all the time by the laxity of insurance agents in over-insuring property and by the gross and glaring failures of juries and judges to sense the vicious ness and criminality of burning property to get the insurance."

BUSINESS PRINCIPLES APPLIED TO FARMING

—o—

A group of farmers at Owatonna, Minn., operating under a cost keeping system put out five years ago by the University of Minnesota experts, have disproved the traditions that farming never pays.

They have found where the farm leaks are, in labor, in selling, in buying; and they have tried to plug every leak. They have paid themselves $60 a month wages, and 5 per cent on their investment. They have increased butter production 20 per cent per cow, and reduced production costs; they have found shorter cuts to profits in almost every branch of farming. Their farm income last year averaged $2,471, or better than $200 a month, which is far above the average tradesman or mechanic income.

Last year brought exceptional prices for wheat, corn and a few other products; but much of this Minnesota income was from miscellaneous farming alfalfa, poultry, dairy products. They had no magic sesame to success; they merely cut out the waste and stuck to the things that paid.

CO-OPERATIVE MARKETING IS YOUR PROBLEM

—o—

When a cooperative marketing association fails to accomplish what it should, the failure is not with cooperative marketing, but with the farmer members themselves. The trouble seems to be that many think cooperative marketing in itself brings prosperity. Nothing could be further from the truth and all the cooperative marketing laws that have ever been written on the statute books cannot in themselves bring prosperity.

Many seem to think that all that is necessary is to join the association and pay a membership fee, and that all problems pertaining to marketing crops and prosperity are settled. It is this attitude on the part of many that has held back cooperative marketing and kept it from making more rapid strides than it has made. The fact is that cooperative marketing has succeeded remarkably well despite this attitude on the part of many members.

CAN THE WINTER'S SUPPLY

—o—

Let's can plenty of fruits and vegetables this summer to carry us through the winter. There are many farms where there are enough fruits and vegetables going to waste, that if properly canned, would supply the family throughout the winter.

Those who have studied this proposition carefully, tell us that each one in the family should consume the following quantities of canned vegetables each year: Leafy vegetables, 10 quarts; tomatoes, 13 quarts, other vegetables such as peas, lima beans, string beans, etc., 17 quarts, fruits of various kinds, 30 quarts. Thirty quarts of fruit is about half what a person needs but the other half should come from dried and fresh fruits.

Let's put up enough to give each member of the family the above mentioned quantity.

FOUR HAY CROPS TO PLANT NOW

—o—

The severe drought will greatly injure old corn in many sections of the South. This means a feed shortage unless steps are taken now to prevent it. It is too late in most sections to plant corn, but there are several crops that will produce excellent hay that can be planted up to July 1 to 15.

Among these crops, the Laredo soybean, cowpeas, Sudan grass and sorghum are the leaders. In order to be as certain as possible to secure a good yield of these crops, it is advisable to thoroughly prepare the ground before planting. Break and harrow a number of times. This thorough preperation will go a long way toward insuring a stand and fair yield.

It is far better to go to a little trouble and effort to put in some of these crops now than to buy hay or other roughage next year. Let's put in a crop of one or all four of these where there is any reason to suppose that the feed supply will be short.

THE SUMMERTIME RADIO RECEPTION

While excellent radio reception is frequently possible during summer months, yet best long distance records come in winter. Signals are not quite as loud in the summer and electrical disturbances, such as lightning storms, naturally interfere with concerts, particularly those from distant points. A reasonable attitude will help the listener who should remember that he cannot expect every act in even the best vaudeville to be just what he wants, nor can he expect the weather every day to be clear and pleasant.

Now and then a summer storm may interfere with both radio and picnics. The listener should become acquainted with his local stations and enjoy them during the summer, and be satisfied with the long distance records he made or will make in the winter. He should get the best there is in radio during all seasons, and above all he should be reasonable.

If the listener is distant from the stations he wants to hear he can lengthen his aerial wires and increase their height from the ground. Both of these measures make signals louder as a general rule. He can add an oudia amplifier. He can increase voltage of his "B" battery or plate battery up to 90, 112 or even 135 volts (that is, to four, five or six of the usual 22 1-2 volt units or blocks). He can use a more sensitive loudspeaker and tune more carefully to get the very loudest signal his set is capable of giving. If there is a tickler adjustment on his set he should learn how to use it so as to get full volume of signals. The good results he will then get are going to be even better in the winter.—Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, Chief Broadcast Engineer, Radio Corporation of America.

MODERN LABOR MOVEMENT

"The labor movement in this country is so far in advance of that in any other country as to make comparison impossible," says The North Shore Bulletin. "In European countries, including Great Britain, labor organizations and other leaders are still pursuing antiquated methods that are comparable to the attempt of a man to lift himself by his boot straps.

"Here they are using the fulcrum of capital ownership and are actually lifting themselves into positions of well-being that amount to affluence in comparison with conditions of European laborers.

"Instead of fighting capital they are beginning to recognize its power and to use it as an implement for their own improvement.

"There are at least three kinds of evidence that indicate roughly the extent which labor is becoming their own capitalists in this country: First, the rapid growth of savings deposits; second, the investment by laborers in shares of corporations; third, the growth of labor banks."

FARMERS SHOULD HELP THEMSELVES

The Farm-Labor Union News says: It is foolish for farmers to run to the government for help as long as they make no move to help themselves. The government can't organize the farmers successfully—only the farmers themselves can and must do that voluntarily. Then, after they have entered into cooperation, the government can help the farmers by giving their cooperatives protection against the raids and unfair practices of the big business interests and by giving them the same credit and other advantages that the government now gives to other lines of business."

We need to get ourselves right. We need to thoroughly inform ourselves on cooperative marketing and then go ahead and cooperate as well as join and pay the fee.

Remember that if your cooperative marketing association is not going as it should, that you are at least partly to blame, because the organization is just as much yours as any other member's. It requires the actual, earnest interest of all members to make the association the success it should be let's get away from this idea of criticising the association to which we belong, but instead get busy and help correct any defects it may have.

OUR EDITORIALS

Naturally, any constructive work that is done for the betterment of a general situation will be of advantage to somebody, but this cannot be eliminated if a newspaper functions as a recorder of public affairs and a leader in directing public thought along lines which the editor believes sound.

In our discussion of subjects we eliminate personalities because we believe that the public interest and the welfare of the people as a whole are paramount to petty political jealousies or ambitions. For the same reason, we eliminate partisan politices from our arguments because we believe that a discussion of questions of public interest is a duty to be assumed by both Republican and Democratic papers.

While different political parties may seek to accomplish their aims by different ways and use different argument, the ultimate result that should be sought for is the greatest good for the nation as a whole.

If our ideas do not agree with yours in our discussion of various subjects, it does not mean that either one of us is entirely wrong but possibly by an exchange of opinion we can help evolve or bring about a satisfactory solution of a question of public interest.

Regardless of who is elected to political offices or what political party is in control, the country must forge ahead, payrolls must be maintained and people must eat. It is from this angle that it is our aim to comment on questions which we consider of public interest.

With this idea in mind we ask your consideration of our editorial comment and although we may sometimes differ in opinion, we recognize that each of us in his own way is seeking to uphold the traditions of this nation and carry it forward as the greatest exponent of freedom from humblest citizen on the greatest property operating in an honest and lawful manner.

CAPITALIZING INVESTMENT OF THE TAXPAYERS

A bus line raising money by sale of securities, published in a prospectus during the past year the following statement:

"Motor transportaton with fast freight service inherits all the advantages of the railroads without their heavy first investment costs. The motor transportation lines, using the highways already built, do not have to buy right of way. There are no ties, no rails to lay, no grading to do, no hills to cut down, no valleys to fill, no bridges or trestles to erect."

Rigt of way, grading, cutting down hills, filling valleys, building bridges, laying pavement and annual repairs on highways are all paid for by the taxpayer.

From standpoint o fairness to interurban electric lines and railroads the present system of motor bus and truck taxation by the state is entirely inadequate.

THE RAINS OF LAST WEEK HELPS THE CROPS

The rain on last Friday afternoon was very general over Chilton county, and greatly revived the crops everywhere. The rain has been worth thousands of dollars to the farmers of Chilton county, and a few more such rains will make the early corn crop. The cotton of course, does not require so much rain as the corn.

The weevils are reported as being plentiful in some localities, and are making some headway on the cotton.

The prospect looks bright for an early crop of cotton, but the future of the late cotton is to wait and see what the weevils will do to it.

The outlook for a good pea crop looks good. What we have seem so far looks fine. This is a good crop to grow as they usually bring a good price and the vines will wonderfully improve the land. More peas should be grown than there is, and it is not to late too grow a crop of them yet.

Hauling Ever-Increasing Quantities of Mail

Why is the Post Office Department of the United States more efficient than that of any other nation? Why do our mails move faster and at lower rates than mails in any other country? One of the principal reasons is that the great transportation lines of America lend their heartiest co-operation to the Postal Authorities, providing fastest schedules, and charging the Government very low rates for this service.

Latest available figures show that the receipts of the United States Post Office Department have increased $40,000,000 over the corresponding period of the year previous, an increase of about 9%.

The railroads of the United States are not only performing a great task in providing the world's best freight and passenger transportation, but they are facilitating the Post Office Department to such an extent that you enjoy exceptional mail service.

WORK, WORK!

SYNOPSIS.—Introducing "So Big" (Dirk DeJong) in his infancy. And his mother, Selina DeJong, daughter of Simeon Peake, gambler and gentleman of fortune. Her life, to young womanhood in Chicago in 1888, has been unconventional, somewhat seamy, but generally enjoyable. At school her chum is Julie Hempel, daughter of August Hempel, butcher. Simeon is killed in a quarrel that is not his own, and Selina, nineteen years old and practically destitute, secures a position as teacher in the High Prairie school, in the outskirts of Chicago, living at the home of a truck farmer, Klaas Pool. In Roelf, twelve years old, son of Klaas, Selina perceives a kindred spirit, a lover of beauty, like herself. Selina hears gossip concerning the affection of the "Widow Paanlenberg," rich and good-looking, for Pervus DeJong, poor truck farmer, who is insensible to the widow's attractions. For a community "social" Selina prepares a lunch box, dainty, but not of ample proportions, which is to be "auctioned," according to custom. The smallness of the box excites derision and Selina is heartbroken. But the bidding becomes spirited, DeJong finally securing it for $10, a ridiculously high price. Over their lunch basket, which Selina and DeJong share together, the school-teacher arranges to instruct the farmer, whose education has been neglected. Propinquity leads to mutual affection. Selina becomes Mrs. DeJong, a "farmer's wife," with all the hardships unavoidable at that time. Dirk is born.

Pervus drove into the Chicago market every other day. During July and August he sometimes did not have his clothes off for a week. Together he and Jan Steen would load the wagon with the day's garnering. At four he would start on the tedious trip into town. The historic old Haymarket on West Randolph street had become the stand for market gardeners for miles around Chicago. Here they stationed their wagons in preparation for the next day's selling. The early comer got the advantageous stand. There was no regular allotment of space. Pervus tried to reach the Haymarket by nine at night. Often bad roads made a detour necessary and he was late. That usually meant bad business next day. The men, for the most part, slept on their wagons, curled up on the wagon seat or stretched out on the sacks. Their horses were stabled and fed in near-by sheds, with more actual comfort than the men themselves. One could get a room for twenty-five cents in one of the ramshackle rooming houses that faced the street. But the rooms were small, stuffy, none too clean; the beds little more comfortable than the wagons. Besides, twenty-five cents! You got twenty-five cents for half a barrel of tomatoes. You got twenty-five cents for a sack of potatoes. Onions brought seventy-five cents a sack. Cabbages went a hundred heads for two dollars, and they were five-pound heads. If you drove home with ten dollars in your pocket it represented a profit of exactly zero. The sum must go above that. No; one did not pay out twenty-five cents for the mere privilege of sleeping in a bed.

One June day, a month or more after their marriage, Selina drove into Chicago with Pervus, an incongruous little figure in her bride's finery perched on the seat of the vegetable wagon piled high with early garden stuff. It was, in a way, their wedding trip, for Selina had not been away from the farm since her marriage.

As they jogged along now she revealed magnificent plans that had been forming in her imagination during the past four weeks. It had not taken her four weeks—or days—to discover that this great broad-shouldered man she had married was a kindly creature, tender and good, but lacking any vestige of initiative, of spirit. She marveled, sometimes, at the memory of his boldness in bidding for her lunch box that evening of the raffle. It seemed incredible now, though he frequently referred to it, wagging his head doggishly and grinning the broadly complacent grin of the conquering male. But he was, after all, a dull fellow, and there was in Selina a dash of fire, of wholesome wickedness, of adventure, that he never quite understood. For her flashes of flame he had a mingled feeling of uneasiness and pride.

In the manner of all young brides, Selina started bravely out to make her husband over. He was handsome, strong, gentle; slow, conservative, morose. She would make him keen, daring, successful, buoyant. Now, bumping down the Halsted road, she sketched some of her plans in large dashing strokes.

"Pervus, we must paint the house in October, before the frost sets in, and after the summer work is over. Then that west sixteen. We'll drain it."

"Yeh, drain," Pervus muttered. "It's soy land. Drain and you have got yet soy. Hard clay soil."

Selina had no answer to that. "I know it. You've got to use tile drainage. And—wait a minute—humus. I know what humus is. It's decayed vegetables. There's always a pile by the side of the barn; and you've been using it on the quick land. All the west sixteen isn't clay. Part of it's muckland. All it needs is draining and manure. With potash, too, and phosphoric acid."

Pervus laughed a great hearty laugh that Selina found surprisingly infuriating. "Well, well, well! School teacher is a farmer now, huh? I bet even Widow Paanlenberg don't know as much as my little farmer about!"—he exploded again—"about this, now, potash and—what kind of acid? Tell me, little Lina, from where did you learn all this about truck farming?"

"Out of a book," Selina said, almost snappishly. "I sent to Chicago for it."

"A book! A book!" He slapped his knee. "A vegetable farmer out of a book."

"Why not! The man who wrote it knows more about vegetable farming than anybody in all High Prairie. He knows about new ways. You're running the farm just the way your father ran it."

"What was good enough for my father is good enough for me."

"It isn't!" cried Selina. "It isn't! The book says clay loam is all right for cabbages, peas, and beans. It tells you how. It tells you how!" She was like a frantic little fly darting and pricking him on to accelerate the stolid sluggishness of his slow plodding gait.

Pervus stared straight ahead down the road between his horse's ears much as Klaas Pool had done so maddeningly on Selina's first ride on the Halsted road. "Fine talk. Fine talk."

"It isn't talk. It's plans. You've got to plan."

"Fine talk. Fine talk."

"Oh!" Selina beat her knee with an impotent fist.

It was the nearest they had ever come to quarreling. It would seem that Pervus had the best of the argument, for when two years had passed the west sixteen was still a boggy clay mass, and unprolific; and the old house stared out shabby and paintless, at the dense willows by the roadside.

They spent that night in one of the twenty-five-cent rooming houses. Rather, Pervus slept. The woman lay awake, wept a little, perhaps. But in the morning Pervus might have noted (if he had been a man given to noting) that the fine jaw-line was set as determinedly as ever with an angle that spelled inevitably paint, drainage, humus, potash, phosphoric acid, and a horse team.

She rose before four with Pervus, glad to be out of the stuffy little room with its spotted and scaly green wall paper, its rickety bed and chair. They had a cup of coffee and a slice of bread in the eating house on the first floor. Selina waited while he tended the horse. It was scarcely dawn when the trading began. Selina, watching it from the wagon seat, thought that this was a ridiculously haphazard and perilous method of distributing the food for whose fruition Pervus had toiled with aching back and tired arms. But she said nothing.

She kept, perforce, to the house that first year, and the second. Pervus declared that his woman should never work in the fields as did many of the High Prairie wives and daughters. Selina learned much that first year, and the second, but she said little. She kept the house in order—rough work, and endless—and she managed, miraculously, to keep herself looking fresh and neat. She understood now Maartje Pool's drab garments, harassed face, heavily swift feet, never at rest. The idea of flowers in bowls was abandoned by July. Had it not been for Roelf's faithful tending, the flower beds themselves, planted with such hopes, would have perished for lack of care.

Roelf came often to the house. He found there a tranquillity and peace never known in the Pool place, with its hubbub and clatter. In order to make her house attractive Selina had actually rifled her precious little bank hoard—the four hundred and ninety-seven dollars left her by her father. She still had one of the clear white diamonds. She kept it sewed in the hem of an old flannel petticoat.

The can of white paint and the brush actually did materialize. For weeks it was dangerous to sit, lean, or tread upon any paintable thing in the DeJong farmhouse without eliciting a cry of warning from Selina. She would actually have tried her hand at the outside of the house with a quart can and a three-inch brush if Pervus hadn't intervened. She hemmed dimity curtains, made slip-covers for the hideous parlor sofa and the ugliest of the chairs. Subscribed for a magazine called House and Garden. Together she and Roelf used to pore over this fascinating periodical. If High Prairie had ever overheard one of these conversations between the farm woman who would always be a girl and the farm boy who had never been quite a child, it would have raised palms high in an "Og hedem!" of horror. But High Prairie never heard, and wouldn't have understood if it had.

Selina was up daily at four. Dressing was a swift and mechanical covering of the body. Breakfast must be ready for Pervus and Jan when they came in from the barn. The house to clean, the chickens to tend, sewing, washing, ironing, cooking. She contrived ways of minimizing her steps, of lightening her labor. And she saw clearly how the little farm was mismanaged through lack of foresight, imagination, and—she faced it squarely—through stupidity. She was fond of this great, kindly, blundering, stubborn boy who was her husband. But she saw him with amazing clearness through the mists of her love. There was something prophetic about the way she began to absorb knowledge of the farm work, of vegetable culture, of marketing. Listening, seeing, she learned about soil, planting, weather, selling. The daily talk of the house and fields was of nothing else. About this little twenty-five-acre garden patch there was nothing of the majesty of the Iowa, Illinois and Kansas grain farms, with their endless billows of wheat and corn, rye, alfalfa and barley rolling away to the horizon. Everything was done in diminutive here. Selina sensed that every inch of soil should have been made to yield to the utmost. Yet there lay the west sixteen, useless during most of the year; reliable never. And there was no money to drain it or enrich it; no ready cash for the purchase of profitable neighboring acreage. She did not know the term intensive farming, but this was what she meant.

During that winter she was often hideously lonely. She never got over her hunger for companionship. Here she was, a gregarious and fun-loving creature, buried in a snow-bound Illinois prairie farmhouse with a husband who looked upon conversation as a convenience, not a pastime. She learned much that winter about the utter sordidness of farm life. She rarely saw the Pools; she rarely saw any one outside her own little household. The front room—the parlor—was usually bitterly cold, but sometimes she used to slip in there, a shawl over her shoulders, and sit at the frosty window to watch for a wagon to go by, or a chance pedestrian up the road. She did not pity herself, nor regret her step. She felt, physically, pretty well for a child-bearing woman; and Pervus was tender, kindly, even pathetic, if not always understanding. She struggled gallantly to keep up the small decencies of existence. She loved the glow of Pervus' eyes when she appeared with a bright ribbon, a fresh collar, though he said nothing and perhaps she only fancied that he noticed. Once or twice she had walked the mile and a half of slippery road to the Pools', and had sat in Maartje's warm bright bustling kitchen for comfort. Where was adventure now? And where was life? And where the love of chance bred in her by her father?

The two years following Dirk's birth were always somewhat vague in Selina's mind, like a dream in which horror and happiness are inextricably blended. The boy was a plump, hardy infant. He had his father's blond exterior, his mother's brunette vivacity. At two he was a child of average intelligence, sturdy physique and marked good humor. He almost never cried.

He was just twelve months old when Selina's second child—a girl—was born dead. Twice during those two years Pervus fell victim to his so-called rheumatic attacks following the early spring planting when he was often forced to stand in water up to his ankles. He suffered intensely and during his illness was as tractable as a goaded bull. Selina understood why half of High Prairie was bent and twisted with rheumatism—why the little Dutch Reformed church on Sunday mornings resembled a shrine to which sick and crippled pilgrims creep.

Selina had been married almost three years when there came to her a letter from Julie Hempel, now married. The letter had been sent to the Klaas Pool farm and Jozina had brought it to her. Seated on her kitchen steps in her calico dress she read it.

"Darling Selina:—

"I thought it was so queer that you didn't answer my letter, and now I know that you must have thought it queer that I did not answer yours. I found your letter to me, written long ago, when I was going over mother's things last week. It was the letter you must have written when I was in Kansas City. Mother had never given it to me.

"Mamma died three weeks ago. Last week I was going over her things—a trying task, you may imagine—and there were your two letters addressed to me. She had never destroyed them. Poor mamma . . .

"Well, dear Selina, I suppose you don't even know that I am married. I married Michael Arnold of Kansas City. The Arnolds were in the packing business there, you know. Michael has gone into business with pa here in Chicago and I suppose you have heard of pa's success. Just all of a sudden he began to make a great deal of money after he left the butcher business and went into the yards—the stock yards, you know. Poor mamma was so happy these last few years, and had everything that was beautiful. I have two children—Eugene and Pauline.

"I am getting to be quite a society person. You would laugh to see me. I am on the ladies' entertainment committee of the World's fair. We are supposed to entertain all the visiting big bugs—that is the lady bugs. There! How is that for a joke?

"I suppose you know about the Infanta Eulalie. Of Spain, you know. And what she did about the Potter Palmer ball. . . .

Selina, the letter in her work-stained hand, looked up and across the fields and away to where the prairie met the sky and closed in on her; her world. The Infanta Eulalie of Spain. . . . She went back to the letter.

"Well, she came to Chicago for the fair and Mrs. Potter Palmer was to give a huge reception and ball for her. Mrs. P. is head of the whole committee, you know, and I must say she looks queenly with her white hair so beautifully dressed and her diamond dog-collar and her black velvet and all. Well, at the very last minute the Infanta refused to attend the ball because she had just heard that Mrs. P. was an innkeeper's wife. Imagine! The Palmer house, of course."

Selina, holding the letter in her hand, imagined.

It was in the third year of Selina's marriage that she first went into the fields to work. Pervus had protested miserably, though the vegetables were spoiling in the ground.

Selina had regained health and vigor after two years of wretchedness. She felt gaunt and strong and even hopeful again, sure sign of physical well-being. Long before now she had realized that this time must inevitably come. So she answered briskly, "Nonsense, Pervus. Working in the field's no harder than washing or ironing or scrubbing or standing over a hot stove in August. Women's work! Housework's the hardest work in the world. That's why men won't do it."

She would often take the boy Dirk with her into the fields, placing him on a heap of empty sacks in the shade. He invariably crawled off this lowly throne to dig and burrow in the warm, black dirt. He even made as though to help his mother, pulling at the rooted things with futile fingers, and sitting back with a bump when a shallow root did unexpectedly yield to his tugging.

"Look! He's a farmer already," Pervus would say.

So two years went—three years—four. In the fourth year of Selina's marriage she suffered the loss of her one woman friend in High Prairie. Maartje Pool died in childbirth, as was so often the case in this region where a Gampish midwife acted as obstetrician. The child, too, had not lived. Death had not been kind to Maartje Pool. It had brought neither peace nor youth to her face, as it often does. Selina, looking down at the strangely still figure, could not help but be active, so bustling, realized that for the first time in the years she had known her she was seeing Maartje Pool at rest. It seemed incredible that she could lie there, the infant in her arms, while the house was filled with people and there were chairs to be handed, space to be cleared, food to be cooked and served. Sitting there with the other High Prairie women Selina had a hideous feeling that Maartje would suddenly rise up and take things in charge; rub and scratch with capable fingers the spatters of dried mud on Klaas Pool's black trousers (he had been in the yard to see to the horses); quiet the loud wailing of Geertje and Jozina; pass her gnarled hand over Roelf's wide-staring eyes, wipe the film of dust from the parlor table that had never known a speck during her regime.

Will Selina's energy and ideas transform the farm? Or will she succumb to environment?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Kittenish

"Those firemen must be a frivolous set," commented Mrs. Dumpling.

"Why?" asked her overworked half.

"I read in the paper that after the blaze was under control firemen played all night on the ruins. Why didn't they go to bed like sensible folks instead of romping around like cats?"

POULTRY

CHECK BLACKHEAD IN TURKEY FLOCK

Every year blackhead in turkey flocks becomes a little more common, and every year the losses from the dread disease are a little larger. And while no positive treatment has ever been discovered, a remedy is being used by hundreds of successful turkey growers that proves very satisfactory if used before the fowls are in the last stages of the disease, says a writer in Successful Farming.

A slight lameness is usually discernible in a turkey coming down with blackhead. The bird gradually grows weaker, refuses to eat, but drinks an unusual amount. Diarrhea is usually present, and when the disease is in an advanced stage, the droppings are usually a bright yellow. The wings and tail are not held up. The head is drawn close to the body.

Sometimes the flesh parts of the head turn a bluish-black. If you are not sure whether it is blackhead or some other ailment that is affecting the bird, it will be wise to make a post-mortem examination. If the liver is covered with black or gangrene spots it will not be necessary to look further for the trouble. You may be sure blackhead is the trouble, and begin treatment accordingly.

Powdered ipecac may be used either as a remedy for blackhead or as a preventive. We prefer to use it as a preventive, as any disease is better prevented than cured. When blackhead enters our flock it usually causes the greatest losses before the poults are six weeks of age. For this reason we begin feeding the ipecac to the poults as soon as we begin feeding mash. It is fed in a wet mash—one teaspoonful of powdered ipecac to enough mash for 20 turkeys—twice a week. The same amount is given to the young birds and the mature fowls. This treatment will prevent blackhead entering your flock, though the youngsters are allowed to range with the older birds, and on infected ground.

If blackhead has entered your flock before treatment is begun, the sick birds should be fed half a teaspoonful of powdered ipecac in wet mash (for each bird) for three successive days. If the disease is not in the advanced stage it will not be difficult to remedy, but if the fowls are nearly dead when the treatment is begun, you cannot expect a large percentage of cures.

Heretofore, the only cure for blackhead has been to move to new, uninfected land, and this is usually only effective for the first season.

Do You Remember?

The following questions which are put to the record flock keepers of Iowa by the Iowa State college are pertinent suggestions to all poultry keepers. "Do You Remember?" they say:

When milk ever spoiled the fertility or hatchability of an egg?

When a chick didn't make good growth when it has milk in its ration?

What a time you used to have getting a lot of early chicks hatched with hens?

When you had a mongrel flock and wished some one would come along and get you started with a good breed?

The time you had raising chicks on the old ground that had been used for 25 years without a change?

How your chicks acted when they were affected by worms and coccidiosis?

How you tried to fight internal parasites without new ground?

Poultry Facts

Milk in some form should be kept before chicks during the first month.

One of the things that our culling should do is to weed out the persistent sitters. The heavy layers do not waste time in broodiness.

Many chicks are not getting enough green feed. If they are not on range carry sod to them or fix up a feeder and give them cut alfalfa or clover hay. You'll be surprised how they will eat it.

Wheat treated with copper carbonate to prevent stinking smut is not harmful to chickens, at least if fed for only a short time. Neither is it harmful to hogs, when fed in small amounts.

Sunlight and cod liver oil are said to prevent leg weakness. So will getting the chicks onto the ground, either outside the brooder house or on chunks of sod placed on the brooder floor.

• • •

Remember that heavy, sudden rains and floods do great damage to young poultry which are not given brooder housing under the right conditions. A house set low and open to rats and vermin is a menace to the profits of the flock.

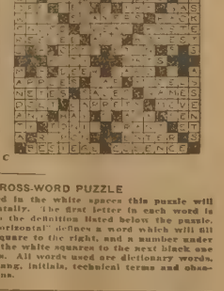
Solution of Last Week's Puzzle.



HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the columns headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

Few Realize Great Pressure Under Sea

When you drop something into two or three miles of ocean, you immediately invite hurd usage. First, there is the pressure of the water. The weight of the sea at 1,000 fathoms (approximately one mile) is one ton to the square inch, or 150 times as great as the air which we breathe. Go down 2,500 fathoms and there is a pressure many times more powerful than that of the steam in a locomotive boiler.

Captain De Carteret told me of a test that was made on the cable ship Colonia in midocean, writes George W. Gray in the American Magazine. An empty soda water bottle—one of the kind that has a conical bottom—was fitted with a long stopper of hard wood rimmed to fit the neck of the bottle snugly, and cut so as to make it barely touch the bottom of the bottle. The bottle was weighted and let down to a depth of 2,000 fathoms. When it was brought up, the point of the wooden stopper was protruding through the thick glass bottom. The pressure of the water had converted the stopper into a hydraulic ram, and had driven it so nearly through the bottom of the bottle that there wasn't even a star fracture in the glass.

Another cable seaman told of lowering a piece of meat, properly weighted to make it sink, in the mid-Atlantic. After being exposed to the near-freezing temperature and the squeezing weight of a thousand fathoms of ocean, that tough roast beef came up as tender as veal.

Oldest Almanac?

Probably the almanac preserved in the British museum, which dates back 1,200 years before the birth of Christ, to the time of Rameses the Great of Egypt, is the oldest in the world. It is written on papyrus, in red ink, and covers a period of six years. The entries relate to religious ceremonies, to the fates of children born on given days, and to the regulation of business enterprises in accordance with planetary influences.

Tommy on Twins

A boy's composition on twins: "Twins is a hanky, only it's double. It usually arrives about 4:37 in the morning, when a fellow is getting in his best licks, sleepin'. Twins is accompanied by excitement and a doctor. When twins do anything wrong, their mother can't tell which one to lick, so she gives it to 'em both to make sure. We got twins at our house and I'd swap 'em any day for an airdale or most anything."—Boston Transcript.

Bee Really Stupid

That the busy bee is really awfully stupid instead of wise, that it is industrious because it cannot help itself, just as a clock that has been wound cannot help busily ticking, is the conclusion reached by Frank Balfour Browne, lecturer of the Royal Institute of Great Britain.

"All through your observations," the lecturer declared, "you get the idea that these creatures are sensible but all the time these ideas are being destroyed. They are doing only those things that are inherent."

ACCUSED MAN TO GET HEARING

FARMER WHO SHOT MAN WILL BE GIVEN PRELIMINARY HEARING

Haleyville, Ala.—The preliminary hearing of John Jackson, farmer, accused of slaying Lee Martin when a masked band attacked Jackson's home, has been set for Tuesday at Russellville, where Jackson is confined in jail. Oliver Hall, the attorney for Jackson, has been in Russellville and arranged for the preliminary.

A demand will be made, it is expected, for the outright acquittal of the accused man. If this is not granted by the judge a nominal bond will be asked. The killing of Martin, although occurring near Haleyville, was just over the line in Franklin County and for that reason Jackson was confined in the Russellville prison. He admits shooting at the intruders. It is stated.

Reports that Jackson's wife was arrested are untrue. She went to Russellville, where her husband was confined and later left for her people's home at Naomi, Tenn. No formal charges were preferred against her.

Rumors were also current here that two others in the masked band that attempted to break into the Jackson home were injured. This is believed untrue. It is known that one Haleyville man has been confined to his home since the occurrence, but friends say that he is sick and in no way injured.

The preliminary hearing Tuesday is expected to draw a large crowd from Haleyville and from the neighborhood nearby where both Jackson and Martin lived.

EGGS SUPPLY MANY REQUIRED MATERIALS

Iron as Well as Fat and Protein Easily Digested Are Essential.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

From March to July is the time of year to make sponge cake, sunshine cake or angel food, if one must consider the cost of one's cakes represented in the number of eggs used. The housekeeper need not feel extravagant if she uses from five to eight eggs at this season in order to give her family an unusual treat. Extra eggs in the menu supply iron and other minerals needed by the body, as well as fat and protein of an easily digested kind.

Any of these good cakes may be regarded as dessert in itself, as well as a useful accessory with ice cream. Sponge cake is sometimes made the basis of other desserts, too—charlotte russe, strawberry or other kinds of shortcake, jelly roll, so-called cream pie and pineapple charlotte are some possibilities. Either of the others may be used in the same way, and all are suitable to serve in the afternoon with tea, chocolate or coffee.

These three cakes are made without fat. Eggs supply the liquid and serve as a means of adding air for leavening. In sponge cake the same number of egg yolks and whites are used, in sunshine cake a larger proportion of whites, and in angel cake the whites only. Lemon juice or cream of tartar is added in each case because the acid affects the egg in such a way as to make the cake more tender. Fine, soft wheat flour gives best results.

Here is a table prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture showing the best proportions for these three closely related cakes. The quantities given will make two medium-sized loaves each:

Ingredients	Sponge Cake	Sunshine Cake	Angel Food
Flour (soft wheat)	1 cupful	1 cupful	1 cupful
Eggs	1 cupful (5 whites and 4 yolks)	1 cupful (6 whites and 5 yolks)	1 cupful whites (8 fairly large)
Sugar	1 cupful	1 to 1¼ cupfuls	1 to 1½ cupfuls
Salt	½ teaspoonful	½ teaspoonful	¼ teaspoonful
Flavoring and acid	1 teaspoonful of lemon juice—½ lemon rind grated	1 teaspoonful flavoring—1 teaspoonful cream of tartar	1 teaspoonful flavoring—1 teaspoonful cream of tartar

Because of their delicate texture, sponge cakes require more careful mixing and baking than other types. The usual method of mixing plain sponge cakes is as follows: Add the sugar to the beaten egg yolks and then the flour and half the salt after the flour has been sifted. Add the other half of the salt to the egg whites, beat them stiff, fold into the mixture and add the flavoring last. For beating the eggs a dover beater gives satisfactory results and requires less time and energy than a wire whisk. Pour the batter, as soon as it is mixed, into smooth ungreased baking pans. For a large or medium-sized loaf, a tube pan is best because the center opening allows the mixture to beat evenly. Powdered sugar may be sifted over the top to make the crust more crisp. The oven should be ready for the cake as soon as it is mixed and in the pan. A large or medium-sized sponge cake should be baked slowly at about 325 degrees F., small cakes at somewhat higher temperature, or about 340 degrees F.

Sunshine cake is mixed and baked in the same way as plain sponge cake except that some of the beaten whites are mixed with the yolks and sugar to help moisten them before all of the flour is added.

Angel food is mixed in a slightly different way than plain sponge cake. The sugar, flour and half the salt are sifted together several times. The egg whites are beaten with the other half of the salt until they are frothy; then the cream of tartar is added and they are beaten until stiff. The dry ingredients are then folded carefully in the beaten whites, and when the mixture is partly blended the flavoring is added. Only the folding motion should be used in mixing, for stirring tends to release the air depended on for leavening. A smooth tube pan is best for baking angel food, and a fairly large cake will require about an hour in an oven at a temperature of 325 degrees F. It may be tested in the same way as any other cake.

Reliable Recipe Given for Making Lye Hominy

A reader of the household asks for a reliable recipe for making lye hominy. The following recipe is one that has been used in the editor's home for years:

For one gallon of hominy select three large ears of corn or four smaller ones. Shell the corn and cover with water in which has been dissolved two tablespoonfuls of lye. Use either lye made from wood ashes or the commercial lye. Place the corn over the fire and stir until the hulls are entirely eaten off by the lye. Remove from fire and begin washing the grains in clear water. As soon as the grains are cool enough, rub with the hands to remove the eyes and hulls. The corn is now ready to cook. Place in clear water over a low fire and cook until the grains are tender. If kept on the back of a coal or wood range it will require a good part of a day for the cooking. After the grains become tender set in a cool place and it will keep for weeks.

Any preferred method may be used for serving the hominy. Some merely brown the grains in hot butter or frylings while others season it with cream and butter.

Government Recipe for Making Last-Minute Soup

Bacon and potato soup is made as follows, according to the United States Department of Agriculture:

Peel and cut up in small pieces two medium-sized potatoes and start them cooking in one quart of boiling salted water. Meanwhile fry two thin slices of bacon crisp; take them out of the pan, and in the same fat cook two tablespoonfuls of minced onion for five minutes, or until tender. When the potatoes are done, take them out of the water and mash them. Use some of the mashed potato to blend with the bacon fat and onion, gradually adding all of it and finally the water in which the potatoes were cooked. Cut the bacon into very small pieces, add it to the soup. Season with pepper and minced parsley, if desired, though this is not absolutely necessary.

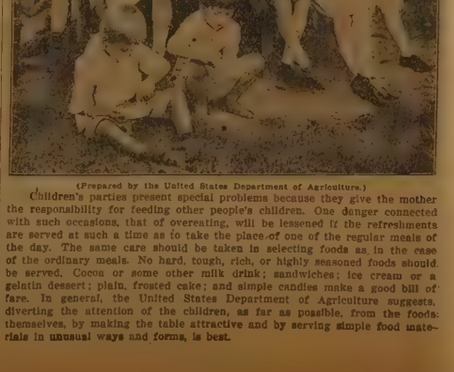
Kitchen Table Improved by Linoleum Covering

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

If one can't have an enameled kitchen table in the kitchen, there are several ways of making the old table easier to care for. One of these was reported to the United States Department of Agriculture from counties in Virginia where extension agents have been stressing kitchen improvement. A piece of inlaid linoleum frequently left over from some floor is cut to fit and cemented to the table.

Convenient Kitchen Table.

WHAT TO SERVE AT CHILDREN'S PARTIES



(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Children's parties present special problems because they give the mother the responsibility for feeding other people's children. One danger connected with such occasions, that of overeating, will be lessened if the refreshments are served at such a time as to take the place of one of the regular meals of the day. The same care should be taken in selecting foods as in the case of the ordinary meals. No hard, tough, rich, or highly seasoned foods should be served. Cocoa or some other milk drink; sandwiches; ice cream or a gelatin dessert; plain, frosted cake; and simple candies make a good bill of fare. In general, the United States Department of Agriculture suggests, diverting the attention of the children, as far as possible, from the foods themselves, by making the table attractive and by serving simple food materials in unusual ways and forms, is best.

Goodness Outshines Genius

Man is created for action. It is his supreme endowment coupled with his capacity for affiance in God. Everything a trumpet sounds. I run the golden battlements of Eternity, summoning him to noble living. If he refuse to obey the summons he sinks to the scale of being. He surrenders himself to accept animalism. The degree in which a man is striving after virtue and obedient to the law of duty determines his real value. "Goodness," says Emerson, "outshines genius, as the sun makes the electric light cast a shadow."—Rev. R. P. Downes, LL. D.

Health and Home

PROPER FOOD FOR SCHOOL CHILDREN

The age during which children are attending school may aptly be called "The Dangerous Age." It is the period of rapid growth and every care should be taken to insure the child of a normal and healthy body. The idea of eating only fit and wholesome foods should be early impressed on the youngest members of every family in order to protect them against later ill health and its accompanying unhappiness. If the utmost care is not taken in the food that is used by children, cases of food poisoning, indigestion and kindred ailments may result.

Milk, being the chief item in the diets of most children, should be carefully guarded. It is, because of its nature, prone to infection if exposed to germs and may soon become unfit for use. Wherever there is the slightest reason for doubt as to its purity and food value, steps should be taken to insure the sterility and the fitness of milk intended for consumption by children. Many mothers have adopted the excellent practice of using milk that is absolutely pure and sterile and free from any germs or bacteria. The most satisfactory, as well as the safest milk used in preparing food for the growing child is evaporated milk.

It is sterile, and therefore safe. It is more digestible than market milk. Its uniformity, convenience and cost are another item recommend it.

The following dishes are well suited to the needs of the growing child; they are easily digested and very nourishing:

Caramel Custard.

1 cup evaporated milk diluted with 1 cup water
3 eggs
¼ cup sugar (caramelized)
2 tbsp. sugar
½ tsp. salt
½ tsp. vanilla

Scald the diluted milk. Caramelize the sugar and add to milk to dissolve. Beat eggs slightly, add sugar, salt, and flavoring and combine with scalded milk. Pour into custard cups and set in a pan of hot water and cook in a moderate oven. When done, a knife blade run in the center will come out clean.

Fish Chowder.

1 pint raw fish cut in 1-inch dice
6 small potatoes, sliced
2 onions chopped fine
¼ pound fat salt pork, sliced
3 cups boiling water
1 cup evaporated milk diluted with 1 cup water
6 crackers

Fry out the salt pork. When brown, remove pieces of pork and put fish, potatoes, and onions in kettle. Cover with boiling water. Simmer until potatoes are tender. Add the milk and cook 5 minutes longer. Season with salt and pepper. Just before serving add the crackers.

PROMINENT BASEBALL STARS WITH TELEPHONE CO.

Like Tris Speaker, Walter Johnson, pitching ace of the Washington Senators and hero of the 1924 World series with the New York Giants, began his career as a telephone man. In the days before he was discovered he was employed as a surveyor for a telephone company in Idaho, spending his spare time in playing baseball.

At just about the same period, Tris Speaker was employed as a telephone lineman down in Hillsboro, Texas, happy and contented and looking forward to the time when he might eventually become plant chief. Both Johnson and Speaker made good in the telephone game, while their success since then is a matter of baseball history.

JULY the FOURTH

Every family in Chilton county should have at least one hog. It will cost no more to keep than a worthless dog. If more people would get rid of their dogs and replace them with a hog their families would fare better.

Politics are warming up, and we can expect some hot times in Alabama before they end.

A traveler in the far-flung fastnesses of the Ozarks met a ramshackle Ford car racketing along, while following behind it came a half-grown calf striving with might and main to keep up. Farther on the traveler met a resident of the region following a bellowing cow. Bringing the animal to a struggling halt by means of the rope around her neck the native saluted, "Howdy! I don't reckon you've seed a red-completed, bald-faced calf along this road anywhurs?"

STRING CAUGHT IN COOSA RIVER WOULD SUPPLY FISH FOR MANY DINNERS.

With the above caption, a photo is reproduced in Sunday's Birmingham News, of a "catch" made by Mr. J. Hance Alred of Clanton at Lock 12. Eleven drum; thelargest weighed eight pounds.

Those drum appeared to be almost man size, due to improper focusing. The photo with wording of the News placed on post cards might attract more people to Lock 12, via Clanton, than could be attracted to Birmingham on account of themany letters on "Why you should come to Birmingham to live," that were forwarded by many who entered the recent contest of the News.

The writer is informed that the photo in question inspired many Birmingham fishermen to go to Lock 12. On account, however, of certain restriction, the fishermen did not go.

Three-fourths of Clanton's merchants are advertising this week.

Clanton baseball team will hook up this afternoon with the strong West Point Railroad club team of Montgomery this afternoon in what promises to be one of the best games of the local season. The visiting team is one of the best teams in the state. Local fans will no doubt turn out en masse to show their appreciationof the boys' good work.

It is moulton's turn to pitch, but the pitcher showing the best form will be used against the railroaders. Some of the boys who played here with Sidney Lanier are with the West Pointers, and will be familiar faces to many fans.

The Birmingham city league leaders will be here for two games Saturday, morning and evening. The morning game will start at 10:or 10:30 while the afternoon game will be at 3.

The local boys say they intend to keep up their good work, and trim "Ham" Stevens again Saturday when he shows up with the paint boys.

VOLUME 4. CLANTON ALABAMA, THURSDAY, JULY 2, 1925 NO. 43

Fourth of July Will Be Observed in Clanton; Barbecue and Musical Program All Day; Ball Games; Ku Klux Program

METHODIST LADIES HAVE ARRANGED BARBECUE AND ARE SPONSORING THE BOYS BAND FROM MASONIC HOME; DOUBLE HEADER BALL GAME, MORNING AND AFTERNOON; BIG KU KLUX NATURALIZATION SATURDAY NIGHT

Clanton is prepared to entertain the largest crowd in its history Saturday, July 4th, when her doors will be thrown wide open to the hordes of people who will come for the big day's program.

The boys band from the Masonic Home at Montgomery will be present to disperse music all during the day and at night.

The ladies of the Clanton Methodist church are sponsoring the day's activities, as is their usual custom, and the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan will put on an evening's entertainment that will no doubt be witnessed by thousands.

In the morning and afternoon ball games will be played by Clanton's fine ball team and the strong Benson Paint and Varnish team of the Birmingham city league. These will be two of the best games ever witnessed in Clanton and if you are a baseball fan you cannot afford to miss them.

The program will be put on on the campus of the high school. The concerts by the boy's band will usher in the day's entertainment, and we have been informed that the band's director will be here to direct the music, and this feature alone will be worth your coming.

After the ball game in the evening the robed Knights will be in charge and the hooded order promises some novel features and thrills for those who witness the performance.

Following is the evening's program:

6:00 p. m. Gates open to the ball park.
6:30 p. m. General assembly.
7:00 p. m. Band concert by the Masonic Home Band of Montgomery.
8:00 p. m. Lecture by the Imperial Representative.
8:30 p. m. Open air naturalization ceremonies.
10:00 p. m. Magnificent display of Klan fireworks.

Reynolds Barn Burns Wed.

The barn of Judge L. H. Reynolds was destroyed by fire about five o'clock Wednesday morning.

The blaze was discovered by Judge Reynolds when he got up Wednesday. He at first thought it was the morning sunrise.

An alarm was quickly turned in. By use of a garden hose Judge Reynolds saved the chicken house, but it is believed a lot of chickens were burned under the barn floor.

No cause can be ascribed for the fire, but it is likely that it was caused by a defective electric wire which ran to the barn.

CANADA SAID TO HAVE THREE GREAT PROBLEMS

London.—If the attachment of Canadians to the King and to Great Britain should weaken or be dissolved, the English-speaking provinces would fly off in sections and would be absorbed into the United States, declared Sir Robert Falconer, president of Toronto University, addressing the Canadian Club here. Sir Robert Falconer also declared: "Canada has three great problems: the internal unification of the Dominion, the future of its population, and the complaint that Canada is reserved in its attitude toward Great Britain and the Empire. The complaint that Canada is reserved and sensitive about her rights has some justification. Canadian nationhood can only be developed through the strengthening of loyalty to the King."

The dinner was attended by a large number of distinguished people. Lord Eustace Percy, a member of the Baldwin Cabinet, made the other principal addres.

Eufaula — Cheneyhatchee bridge closed for repair work.

SECRETARY MELLON GIVES VIEWS ON TAXES

"The levy of an income tax, at proper rates, is a fair and economical sound means of raising the immense revenues required for operation of the government," says Secretary of the Treasury Mellon. "But the tax must not be levied so high as to hamper business, slacken initiative, distort investment and encourage avoidance of the tax.

"If the position of the income tax is to be made secure, we must prove its essential integrity. We must give to the country a law which closes the most obvious doors of escape from taxation without at the same time exposing the law to contempt by loading it with complicated provisions unsuccessful in stopping tax avoidance. Our present law has many of these defects."

He said a taxable investment should yield a return of about 8 per cent to equal the net return of a 4 1-2 per cent tax-exempt security.

"On the other hand," he explained, "under a total normal and surtax of 20 per cent, a taxable security yielding slightly more than 5 1-2 per cent would be equivalent in net return to a 4 1-2 per cent municipal bond.

"We can see, therefore, if the surtax rates are reduced to a reasonable figure, the lure of tax exempt securities will become less appealing and the man of large income will find it advantageous to invest in productive business."

A Kansas City man, charged with driving a hotor car while intoxicated and running over his wife with the car, made this plea in court: "It was only my wife, judge." So the court fined him $50. Fortunately the wife is expected to recover, or it might have cost him $75.

Paving Contracts Let to Mitchell Bros. for Main Streets of Clanton; Work Started

Contracts for paving the main streets of Clanton have been let to Mitchell Bros. of Oneonta, Ala., the contract including paving on Sixth and Seventh streets and First avenue, as well as Second street.

The contract for this paving was let last week, and is the biggest paving project ever undertaken by the town of Clanton. It includes paving Second street from the Wilson Hotel to the court house; Sixth street from the alley north of court house to First avenue north; one block on First avenue between Sixth and Seventh street, and all the paving on Seventh street between Fourth avenue north and First avenue not done by the state highway department.

A large force of laborers are now at work, putting in storm sewers and curbs preparatory to the laying of the paving.

When this contract is finished it will makeof Clanton one of the most beautiful little cities in the south.

Officials of the contracting firm stated to the News representative that they intend to push this job to early completion so as to not handicap the business men of the city no more than is absolutely neccessary.

ANOTHER ICE AGE PREDICTED

Portland Ore.—Man will escape freezing in another ice age which some scientists have predicted will occur 10,000 years in the future.

C. E. Graunsky, San Francisco engineer in his presidential address to the Pacific [illegible] section of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, explained that the great [illegible] the past was due to a climate not of extreme cold, but of more warmth than at the present time. Since the earth is continually cooling, never again will such heavy rainfall and great accumulations of snow and ice be possible. Man is to be saved the possibility of having to live as Eskimos during some future rivival of the times when great sheets of ice covered the northern half of middle western and eastern United States and great glaciers crept slowly down the slopes of the Sierra Nevadas.

Paradoxical as it may seem, Mr. Graunsky holds that his researches among the beds of the ancient lakes, [illegible] the Great Salt Lake is a typical remnant, show that the ice age was a time when temparatures were higher and not lower, than they are at present. This must have been so in order to have the great precipitation of rain and now twice as much as now that was necessary in order to form the [illegible]

"The conception of a gradual [illegible] earth from a condition of great heat to the surface temperature as we now know them, there is no place for the sudden arrival of a temporary are of cold causing an ice [illegible] is generally assumed by geologists," said Mr. Grunsky. "Whether an ice field will grow or will shrink in any region where snow falls in winter depends on the annual amount of the snowfall compared with the annual melt and evoporation." If more snow falls than can be melted during the summer, the glacier grows; if not, it recedes, just as is the case in Alaska and Switzerland today.

DEBT PAYMENTS BY FIVE NATIONS

Washington—The Treasury yesterday received payments from Great Britain, Finland, Hungary, Lithuania and Poland on account of their funded indebtedness to the United States.

The British payment, a semi-annual remittance on interest, amounted to $68,310,000. It was paid in 2 3-4 per cent treasury certificates with a $75.94 payment in cash necessary to adjust the interest accrued.

The total payment from Finland, $133,650, was made in cash. Hungary funded half of its third semiannual payment of interest and paid the other half, $4,905.69, in cash. Lithuania also funded part of its first annual installment on principal and interest, and turned over to the Treasury $75,255 in cash, of which $45,225 was for interest and $30,000 for principal. This payment also was in lash.

The Treasury announced that it would retire the American securities turned in on the British payment when securities mature next Sept. 15. The first payment on account of the Polish Government, amounted to 500,000, but approximately $136,000 was turned over to the Treasury last January, and the remainder was remitted today in cash.

A structure, began in Peru ten thousand years ago, is yet unfinished. Must have been a government job.

PREPARING FOR SUMMER MILK

This big truck hauls the milk of several farms. Right—Milk must arrive at the plant in good condition.

It is now the time when the dairy cow, the foster mother of mankind, is to be given a chance under natural conditions. New information which has recently been discovered at some of the state agricultural colleges indicates that green feed and sunlight combined make it possible for a cow to build up her system by storing minerals and other body reserves, provided she receives a sufficient supply of good feed.

A heavy milking cow, however, will need feed in addition to pasture if the milk flow is to be maintained. Milking heavily with pasture as the sole source of feed causes the cow to lose weight. This loss of weight should be watched and extra feed given to prevent the cow from becoming thin, which will result in reduced milk production later.

With the coming of the summer season, new and interesting problems present themselves which concern the care of milk. The first warm nights are apt to cause milk to sour unless summer care is practiced. It is important to take precautions which will keep down the number of bacteria and prevent their growth. To do this milk must be produced under clean conditions, be kept in thoroughly cleaned utensils, and be cooled as soon as possible after it comes from the cow.

Summer is one of the easiest seasons in which to produce clean milk. There will be times, however, when a considerable amount of mud and dirt will collect on the udder and flanks of cows, and if a portion of this material drops into the milk it will injure its keeping quality. The dirt which collects on the flanks and udder should be removed before milking time by wiping with a damp cloth. If the hair on the udder and underline is clipped short the cleaning can be done effectively and quickly. Incidentally, the practice of clipping the cow all over before turning to pasture not only makes it easier to keep her clean, but it relieves the itchy condition that develops during the stabling months.

Much of the milk produced in the country is hauled long distances in large trucks. In summer if the cans of milk are not protected from the sun before leaving the farm, and again enroute, it will be difficult to keep the milk sweet until it is used. Every time a day's milk is returned to the farm, for whatever reason, there is a distinct financial loss. Only by producing a sanitary milk and then taking care of it can satisfactory results be obtained to all concerned.

When the "Embattled Farmers" Made Their Famous Stand on the Bridge at Concord

Scene of the Lexington-Concord bridge battleground where one hundred and fifty years ago "the shot was fired that was heard 'round the world." In the foreground is the monument commemorating the Lexington engagement; on the other end of the Concord bridge is seen the Minute Man's statue to the memory of the valiant defenders of the span.

At Acton, Mass., is this monument, erected to Capt. Isaac Davis, who commanded the troops of Acton in the battle of Concord Bridge. Captain Davis was the first man killed.

Arthur F. Davis, librarian of the Acton (Mass.) public library, painted this picture of the Acton troops under Capt. Isaac Davis, leaving Acton for the Old North Bridge, Concord, at the report of the march of British troops. This picture was painted by him from records and letters that date back to the Concord battle.

THOSE acquainted with the events that led to the Revolution probably more than once have asked themselves why the 19th of April is celebrated as the anniversary of the "Battle of Lexington" rather than the "Battle of Concord." Concord was the objective point of General Gage's raid into the country, and Lexington, as well as Cambridge and Menotomy, merely happened to be on the road that led thither. Nobody in the whole province was alarmed about Lexington, but everybody was anxious for Concord and the precious war material that was stored there, the very heart and vitals of the incipient rebellion. The Minute Men of the neighboring counties, when they turned out the morning of the 19th for the defense of Concord, not of Lexington, all knew where Concord was and the roads that led there, but it is doubtful if one in a dozen had ever heard of Lexington, or at any rate knew whether it lay to the north, east, south or west of Concord.

One reason why the fight has become known as the Battle of Lexington is that the rolls of all the Minute Men who turned out from other towns are filed at the statehouse in Boston and there docketed as the "Lexington Alarms." Some years after the event an appropriation was made to pay the men who rushed to the defense of Concord for their military service and travel and the captains from all over the province sent in their attested muster rolls. Concord paid her own soldiers and there is no record in the statehouse of the men from this town who served on that eventful day.

Muster Roll of Heroes.

In February, 1901, the muster roll of Capt. Charles Miles' company of Concord Minute Men, engaged at the North bridge, April 19, 1775, was sold at auction in Boston for $275. This list of men was the only complete list of the Concord men in this particular engagement, though the names of nearly all of them appear in the town's records scattered through several pages as they were paid by the town treasurer from time to time. The names, however, are not so arranged as to make it certain to what particular company any individual soldier belonged.

The origin of the expression "Minute Men" is of interest. Practically from the beginning of the province there had been a militia composed of the entire body of citizens (with certain exceptions such as clergymen and paupers). This body of militia was mustered and paraded one or more times each year under officers whose commissions ran in the name of the king and were signed by the royal governor. Long before the outbreak of hostilities in 1775, General Gage, the royal governor of the province of Massachusetts, had become suspicious of this body and had as far as possible prevented the assembling of the militia and had discontinued the annual musterings. In some cases the commissions of the militia officers were revoked, but for the most part they had not been recalled. The throttling by Governor Gage of the general court, the constituted legislature of the province, led to the assembling in Concord on the 11th of October, 1774, of a body of delegates chosen from the several towns in the same manner as the representatives to the general court were chosen. This new body of delegates called itself a provincial congress and held three sessions; the first of five days in October, the second two weeks in the same month in Cambridge and the third of nearly three weeks in November and December, also at Cambridge. One of the first proceedings of this body was to take into consideration the disorganized condition of the militia and to take measures to form a new force.

Safeguarding Liberty.

One resolution provided for the appointment of a committee of safety who should "have power and they are hereby directed whenever they shall judge it necessary for the safety and defense of the inhabitants of this province and their property, to alarm, muster and cause to be assembled, with the utmost expedition and completely armed, accoutered and supplied with provisions sufficient for their support in their march to the place of rendezvous, such and so many of the militia as they shall judge necessary for the ends aforesaid, and at such place or places as they shall judge proper, and then to discharge as soon as the safety of this province shall permit."

Other resolutions provided for the purchase of arms, ammunition, provisions and all kinds of military stores, and for their accumulation and care at Concord and Worcester. The new force was to be raised by voluntary enlistment to the extent of one-fourth of the men of military age in the province. The committee that drew up these resolutions for the congress knew perfectly well that if there was a clash of arms it would be imperatively necessary to have a military force upon which they could depend, a force of men who had taken up arms of their own volition, and with full knowledge that such taking of arms might, and almost certainly would, lead to open rebellion and treason. So by the process of voluntary enlistment in the new force, the congress weeded out the loyalists from the ranks of the militia.

"At a Minute's Warning."

It was this force of men to which the name of "Minute Men" was applied, a term which appears to have been at first a popular name for the force doubtless derived from the terms of the enlistment paper which were as follows:

"1. We, whose names are hereunto subscribed, will, to the utmost of our power, defend his majesty, King George the Third, his person, crown and dignity.

"2. We will at the same time, to the utmost of our power and abilities, defend all and every one our charter rights, liberties and privileges, and will hold ourselves in readiness at a minute's warning, with arms and ammunition thus to do.

"3. We will at all times and in all places obey our officers chosen by us, and our superior officers, in ordering and disciplining us, when and where said officers shall think proper."

These terms of enlistment were drawn up by a committee of the town of Concord, and reported to a town meeting, January 9, 1775, when the town voted to pay each "Minute Man" at a certain rate a day for ten months.

From this fact it may be seen that to Concord belongs not only the honor of being the spot on which "was made the first forcible resistance to British aggression," but also of being the birthplace of the very name which for 150 years had been the synonym for a soldier of liberty.

First Provincial Congress.

There is an error in the minds of those who feel that the first provincial congress met in Salem. General Gage tried to pull the teeth of the proposed congress in Concord by issuing orders that each town should elect delegates to the general court to meet in Salem on the 5th of October. The "congress" had been called to meet in Concord on the 11th of the same month and many, if not most of the towns, had already chosen their delegates. It was plainly Governor Gage's intention to forestall the action of the congress by bringing together the legitimate and recognized assembly, over the actions of which he could possibly have control. However, many of the towns utterly refused to send any representatives to the general court, with the result that on the 28th of September Governor Gage was forced to issue a proclamation to the effect that no session of the general court would be held.

Notwithstanding the proclamation was issued nearly one hundred of the duly elected representatives assembled at Salem October 5, 1774, and awaited until the next day for Governor Gage to appear and administer the usual and required oaths. That functionary not appearing, the members present resolved themselves into a "convention" and proceeded to elect officers and then voted to "resolve itself into a provincial congress to be joined by such other persons as have been or shall be chosen for such purposes." As such congress it met the next day at Salem and organized by choosing John Hancock as chairman and Benjamin Lincoln as clerk. Then they "voted to adjourn to the court house at Concord, there to meet on Tuesday next," October 11. The rest is history.

DOWELL GRANTED ABSENCE LEAVE

DR. B. B. ROSS, DEAN OF SCHOOL OF CHEMISTRY, HAS BEEN NAMED AS ACTING PRESIDENT

Montgomery.—The executive committee of the Auburn board of trustees at a meeting in the governor's office, granted a 90-day leave of absence to Dr. Spright Dowell, president of Auburn, who was recently seriously injured in an automobile accident. Dr. B. B. Ross, dean of the school of chemistry and pharmacy at Auburn, was named as acting president of the college in Dr. Dowell's absence. Dr. Dowell's condition at the latest report received here, continued to show improvement, but it is realized that some time must elapse before he will be able to resume his duties.

Other action of the executive committee included the making of plans for the completion and furnishing of Ramsay Engineering building, so that it will be ready for occupancy by the beginning of the fall term, and also plans for completion of the water works at the college.

The committee approved the budget of the Experiment Station for the ensuing fiscal year.

Keep Bees Busy to Make Money

Remove Filled Supers as Soon as Possible and Put in Empty Ones.

The "busy" bee is not nearly so industrious as he has been pictured by his admirers. In fact, he has some very human qualities. He works when there is an incentive to work, and he has been known to loaf on the job dreadfully when he has gotten up enough honey to keep him through the winter.

The bee would not contribute much to man's sweet tooth if he was not persuaded to do so through intelligent handling, and through fear of starvation. A hive of bees can be kept at work through most of the summer if you keep this fear constantly before the workers.

Quit When Full.

Under the old system of hiving a good swarm seldom produced more than 10 to 20 pounds of honey a season for the keeper. This was due to the fact that when Mr. Bee got his house full of honey, he quit working. Since beekeepers adopted the sectional hive with supers holding small pound frames, the records of production of a single hive have constantly grown until beekeepers say that in good seasons they sometimes run 200 pounds of honey to the hive. Certainly 60 to 80 pounds is an average yield.

The point is to keep a continual watch on each hive during the honey flow and to remove the filled supers as fast as possible, putting in empty ones. If you don't do this, you are losing just so much return from the bees. Oftentimes to delay doing it at the right time, finds the bees out of the "notion" and they will continue to loaf.

By planting alsike clover for midsummer feeding and even for late summer, the bees can be kept working right along during hot weather, and they can finish off on buckwheat or some other late crop. Buckwheat honey, however, does not appeal to the market as clover honey. If there is any considerable planting of sweet clover near by, either in fields or growing wild along the roadsides, it will keep the bees busy until well into the fall. And sweet clover is one of the best and cleanest honey-makers you can find.

Prices for Honey.

Last season honey was bringing beekeepers 50 cents a pound right at the local markets. In the larger cities, the price was even more favorable. And every pound that the bees can be encouraged to produce is just that much more "velvet" for the beekeeper. It pays to have the extra supers all ready to be slipped into place as needed. The fall honey flow always comes with a rush and the way the bees get it in often catches the beekeeper unawares, especially so if he is a new hand at the business. Constant prodding is good for Mr. Bee. It will help him to earn the right to the reputation he has enjoyed so long.

Satisfactory Ration to Produce Baby Beeves

Beef cattle investigations conducted by the animal husbandry department of the Alabama State Agricultural college show that fairly satisfactory baby beef can be produced on a ration consisting of cane silage, shelled corn, and no alfalfa hay. The calves fed this ration gained 2.08 pounds per head per day for 197 days.

The high degree of finish and economy of gains, according to the result of a second experiment, are determined by the length of time a limited amount of alfalfa hay is fed with cane silage, shelled corn, and cottonseed meal. The longer a limited amount of alfalfa is fed with this ration the greater the finish and economy of gain.

Another test showed that alfalfa alone is a satisfactory roughage to feed with shelled corn in fattening baby beef for market in so far as gains are concerned.

As Green Manuring Crop Rye Holds a High Place

Rye does not make use of atmospheric nitrogen as does the legume crops and for that reason it gives back to the soil only the nutriments which it takes from it. Its greatest value as a green manuring crop is its ability to return large amounts of organic matter to the soil which improves its mechanical condition, moisture capacity, etc. Rye should not be allowed to grow until it reaches a large size before it is turned under because it will exhaust the moisture supply and thereby injure the following crop. In some soils there is also danger of getting so much organic matter from a crop of rye that unless it is turned under early and allowed to begin decomposition the excessive amount of material turned under will interfere with the movement of the soil moisture.

Parasites Kill Pests

A well-known scientist once expressed the opinion that were it not for the tendency of insects to prey upon each other, thus holding down their numbers, life on this globe would be made impossible for the vertebrates, including man. Entomologists have been taking advantage of this warfare to help in keeping down the numbers of certain insect enemies of crops introducing parasites from various parts of the world.

Early Oats Good as Alfalfa Nurse Crop

Most Satisfactory When Cut in Green or Dough State.

"There is really no best way to put in alfalfa," says Professor Shepperd of the North Dakota Agricultural college. "It all depends on the fertility of your soil, whether your soil is sandy, loam, clay loam, free of weeds (especially such weeds as quack grass, foxtail and pigeon grass) also, whether you have the time, the tools and the inclination to do all the things necessary to best protect your little alfalfa plants under all conditions.

"In certain soils, there isn't enough plant food or sufficient moisture to take care of the needs of growing a full-sized nurse crop and ripening it ready for harvest, and at the same time supply the necessary plant food and moisture for the alfalfa plants. They have to send their roots deep enough into the ground so that they can get moisture in sufficient amount to supply the need when the nurse crop is removed and the sun shines directly on the little alfalfa plants during the hot, sunshiny period of harvest time.

"Of all the nurse crops early oats at the rate of two pecks to one bushel per acre with the alfalfa and then cutting the oats green or in the dough stage for hay, have given most satisfaction. It gives them shade in the early weeks of growth, and it keeps weeds and grass from starting and crowding out the alfalfa. Also, by removing it before it ripens, the moisture that would be needed to ripen the grain is conserved and not passed off into the air by the evaporation process. A light seeding of about two pecks of oats to the acre is a good protection for the little alfalfa plants from the blowing of sand.

"Barley seeded at the rate of one bushel to the acre on soils suited for barley has proven to be an excellent nurse crop. As a rule, it does not lodge as easily as oats, ripens early and excellent yields have been secured from 25 to 51 bushels on different farms where only a bushel of barley was used and seeded."

Most Profitable Crops for Hay and Pasturag

Alfalfa is the most profitable crop that can be grown in this state. It does best on soils that are fairly well drained and in a fair state of fertility and that are not acid. One adapted hardy seed, such as the Grimm is especially well adapted to Michigan conditions while Cossack, Ontario Variegated, Northern Grown and High Altitude Common usually give good results.

Sweet clover is gaining very rapidly as a pasture crop. On the other hand alfalfa is frequently used for pasture purposes.

The seed should be inoculated. Material for inoculation may be secured from the department of bacteriology, East Lansing, Mich. The price is 25 cents per bottle and each bottle contains sufficient material to inoculate a bushel of seed. Full directions for application accompany the material.

The spray of the orchard should not in any way lessen the feeding value of the hay.—C. R. Megee, Associate Professor of Farm Crops, Michigan Agricultural College.

Spray for Vegetables

Arsenate of lead is better than paris green as an application on vegetables and vines such as the potato, cucumber and bean, because it will stick to the plant longer. Paris green, however, will kill the bugs as quickly and as readily as arsenate of lead. Arsenate of lead should be used at the rate of one teaspoonful to two gallons of water, well stirred or at the rate of 1 pound to 50 gallons of water for arsenate of lead and one-half pound of paris green to 50 gallons of water. Cover the plants thoroughly to get good results.

FARM FACTS

Frequent and shallow cultivation will keep the garden coming along in good shape.

Overfeeding is bad for the calf. A good rule is always to keep the calf a little hungry.

A garden free from weeds not only produces more vegetables but is a sight worth seeing.

Because wood is so useful trees must be felled. Because wood is so useful trees should be planted.

In a number of instances very injurious insect pests have been in a measure controlled by introduced parasites.

The herd bull should run in pasture at least a part of the summer. The exercise will be a fine thing for him and the succulent green grass will "cool him out" and be a great relief from the dry feed he has probably been receiving for many months.

• • •

Cultivation of corn and other row crops, in excess of that required to control weeds and keep the surface soil in a granular condition, is not necessary or advisable. Deep cultivation prunes the roots of corn plants and may decrease the yield, especially if deep cultivation is practiced late in the season.

CARE OF CONVALESCENT IN SUMMER

For those who are just recovering from a serious illness the problem of food is a serious one. The patient, though well on the road to recovery, is usually weakened by the rigors of disease and the excessive heat is wont to sap his energy. Hence, the foods that are consumed during this period should be considered carefully as to digestibility, food value, ease of assimilation, purity and sterility. These are important in any food but especially so when the consumer is not strong and healthy.

In most cases, the one who is convalescing consumes milk in large quantities. This food contains all of the elements that are essential to the body. TWICE IN THIS WOMAN'S LIFE

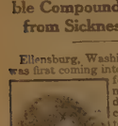
Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her from Sickness to Health



Ellensburg, Washington. — "When I was first coming into womanhood I suffered terribly every month. My mother did everything she could think of, so she took me to several doctors and they only helped me a little. Mother was talking to another lady about my condition and she told mother of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Mother got me six bottles and at the end of the first month I was much better, so I kept on taking it until I had no more pains. When I got married and had my first child I was in terrible pain so that it was impossible for me to do my housework. I thought of how the Vegetable Compound had been of so much benefit to me when I was a girl, so I went to Perine's Drug Store and got six bottles. It sure did help me and I still take it. I am a well woman today and I can't say too much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I will answer any letter that comes to me to answer about what your medicine has done for me." — Mrs. WILLIAM CARVER, R. F. D. No. 2, Ellensburg, Washington.

Needed Information

The shopwalker approached the rather perturbed-looking young man just inside the entrance of the big store.

"You look as though you wished some sort of information, sir. Can I be of service to you?"

"I don't know," said the young man. "I was told to buy either a camisole or a casserole, and I can't remember which."

"Well," said the shopwalker, patiently, "if you'll tell me what kind of a chicken you propose to put in it, perhaps I can help you."—London Tit-Bits.

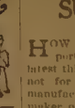
Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale



By Mary Graham Bonner

MANY-NAMED DUCKS

"Hello, Ruddy," said Mrs. Ruddy, "did you have a good time?"

"Splendid," said Ruddy, "I feel much better for the little turn in the air. I was feeling a bit sluggish staying still so long.

"I needed the exercise. I'm not used to being still so long."

"Well, it's a good thing you feel better," said Mrs. Ruddy. "You are always in such good health I was worried when I saw you weren't up to your usual form."

"Speaking of form," said Ruddy, "reminds me of a funny experience I had the other day. I met a young fellow named Billie Brownie, and he hadn't heard of all my names.

"I told him he could see there was sense to all of them, and he understood that after I explained.

"Of course he could see that I had a short, wide beak and that it was a little bit like a pug nose. He could tell that my tall feathers were very pointed and thin and that they were very stiff and smart in appearance.

"I explained to him that at this time of year I was the way he saw me—with a black cap, absolutely white cheeks and throat and a ruddy, russet-colored coat with a light waistcoat.

"But I also explained that in the winter my cheeks were duller in appearance and not so white because I thought one didn't want to look quite so gay in the winter.

"That was why, I explained, I wore a coat that was partly gray.

"I told him how you wore a gray costume while your cheeks were somewhat white, too, but not so white as mine.

"Then I explained about our names.

"I said we were called Bristle-Tail Ducks because of our stiff tail feathers, and Broad-Bill Dipper Ducks because our beaks or bills were broad in shape and because we could dip down and get things to eat good and quickly!

"I told him that another name we had was that of Bull-Neck Ducks because some people thought our necks were of that shape, but I never thought much of that name myself.

"Nor did he."

"Nor do I," said Mrs. Ruddy.

"He said of course that I was a large-sized duck, but that a bull's neck was so huge and really a different shape. No, he didn't think that was a good name."

"Did you tell him of the other name we're called so often?" Mrs. Ruddy asked.

"Oh, yes," said Ruddy. "You mean the name of Bumblebee Coot."

"That's the name I mean," said Mrs. Ruddy.

"Oh, yes, I told him about that name. And I showed him how we got that name. I flew for him and he could hear the buzzing sound my wings made as they moved so quickly.

"He could tell it was because they were so stiff and short and went so very, very quickly.

"He thought that quite a jolly name.

"I told him, too, of the nest for the ducklets as we always called them ourselves, though the usual name is ducklings, and is the name which every one else uses.

"I described how it was made of long, marshy grasses, lined with soft, comfortable down and that it was always put near the water or in between the rushes over the water.

"I told him how large the eggs were and that this year's brood was ten.

"Oh, yes, I told him a great deal of family history."

"You certainly did," said Mrs. Ruddy. "And who is this Billie Brownie?

"Oh, he's a jolly little creature who wears a brown suit with bright brass or gold buttons down the front, and a long brown stocking-cap. He comes from Fairyland or Brownieland, and Mother Nature has given him the power to understand all her children.

"He wouldn't hurt any of us, and he is just as friendly as can be. Some day, he told me, he would come and pay you a visit, too."

"Oh, how pleasant," said Mrs. Ruddy. "We must give him some of our famous marsh-water tea when he comes!"

A Mistake

"Hey, Bill," shouted the camper "how many chops did we leave in the ice box last night for breakfast?"

"Two, of course."

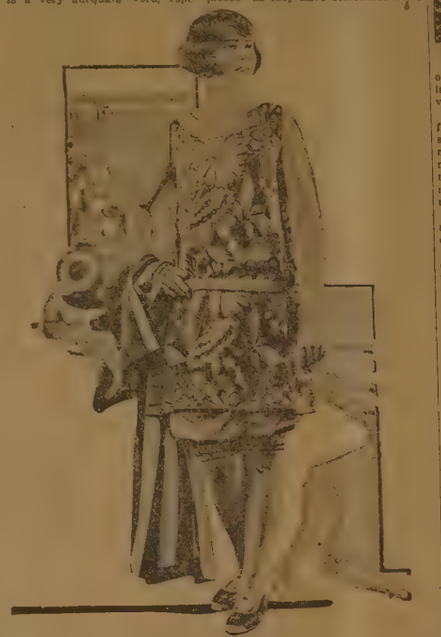
COLORFUL BATHING COSTUMES; SUMMER MILLINERY TURNS BACK

HOW would the puzzled fashion reporter be able to tell about the latest things in bathing suits if it were not for the resourcefulness of silk manufacturers? Some keen-minded maker of silks has hit upon the word "modernistic" to describe the new patterns in printed silks—it refers to the bold, unusual, vividly colored and glowing designs which are liked for bathing and beach suits and negligees. Nothing in the sky above, the earth beneath, or the waters under the earth is just like them—hence "modernistic" is a very adequate word, especially in the company of a picture to show what it stands for.



A Dazzling Bathing Costume.

A modernistic pattern in silk appears in the over-garment worn with black satin knickers in the picture. Although the photograph does not reveal its intricate colorings it is fairly safe to guess that they include rich purple, gold, soft greens, vivid blues and reds in artful shadings and combinations on a black ground. A banding at the neck, a binding at the bottom and a girdle would be in black with this suit, but in any case will match the background of the printed pattern. There is no question of the attractiveness of these new beach suits. Flourishing right along with them are black suits having only a little color introduced in bindings of gold, copenhagen blue or white.

Real swimming suits also divide their allegiance between dark and light colors. Tights fastening on the shoulder and having skirts looped on are made of pure worsted in purple, orange, royal blue, tan, bright green and in navy and black. Capes and coats to be worn over suits are shown in terry cloth in Roman and other stripes and in rubberized cloth. The latter are often lined with terry cloth. The aspect of the beaches is bright and gay—and no one looks bedraggled in modernistic bathing clothes.

For once in her career restless women seems to be satisfied with things as they are, in millinery. Except for the much increased proportion of all-white hats and hats in which white predominates, millinery displays continue to be made up of the beautiful headwear launched in spring and early summer. The small felt hat in pastel colors continues to sell like ice cream cones, with the white felt a close second. Large felt hats in light colors, hair braids and other light straws are demanded, showing that the minds of women are centered on midsummer headwear and that they are not so "uncertain, coy and hard to please" as they have sometimes been.

Among things that have forged ahead are hats of canton crepe, straw or hair braid with velvet crowns, bunzkoks and balibuntis with trimming of velvet ribbon, small turbans of belting ribbon that are comfortably soft and collapsible, hats made of white kid and trimmings of gilded kid. New developments in sports hats appear in soft, white silk hats, stitched with braid to give them firmness, or corded or machine stitched for the same purpose, in silk in a color, as blue, yellow, red or black.

with crepe facing and drapery, finished with a rhinestone ornament at the upper right a tagal straw below it with applique trimming of silk and braid. Opposite this is a hat of canton crepe and hair braid with flowers and fruit about the crown and below it a hair braid simper with drapery of figured chiffon. It is noticeable that the shapes are medium or small, conservative in lines and becoming.

Summer millinery is singing its swan song. These conservative models and the sheer, wide brimmed, picturesque hats of hair braid, lace or crepe, signify that the song is finished. White and light colored felt or fabric hats for sport or street wear provide the very last word.

OUT-OF-DOOR MEALS

Serving meals out of doors does not mean that one needs to go miles away to do it. A garden or porch that is roomy will give the atmosphere with less of the work. A meal in more than two courses is plenty, except on rare occasions an out-of-door meal is a great treat for the aged or invalids who cannot go far from home.

Sliced cold meats are always good for an outdoor meal; stuffed eggs, and salads of all kinds are agreeable. Such meals may all be prepared in the morning and left in the ice chest. Lettuce if washed and placed in a bag made of an old lace curtain is always ready to serve.

A jar of mayonnaise, fresh fruit and a cake with coffee or a cold drink will offer a good meal.

The young folks of the family will delight to arrange the table and call the clearing away fun, for it will be different than the daily meal.

To save work have the entire first course placed on the serving plate; use paper napkins and save in laundry work.

Combination Salad.—Take two cupfuls of fresh cooked peas, one cupful of diced celery, one red pepper finely shredded, a bit of finely chopped onion, and a half cupful of peanuts rolled until like coarse crumbs. Line a salad bowl with lettuce after rubbing the bowl with a clove of garlic cut into halves, then heap in the salad that has been well mixed with mayonnaise. Garnish with hard cooked eggs, and eighths of small ripe tomatoes.

Chicken in Mold.—Cook a fowl until tender with a bunch of celery and a small onion. Remove the vegetables and strain the broth. Cut the chicken from the bones. Crush the bones and cover them with water; simmer until all the gelatin is removed. Strain and add a teaspoonful of prepared gelatin and add to the chicken broth. Arrange the chicken in a mold, adding the broth a little at a time, letting it harden, until all is used. Set away for twelve to fourteen hours to mold. This may be molded in small forms or cut into slices and served on lettuce with a rich mayonnaise.

Things Worth Knowing.

Pears that are picked too green may be ripened in the hay mow. Turn them occasionally. Tomatoes or other fruit will ripen placed in a wire basket where the air surrounds the fruit. It is not necessary to turn it.

Keep brown sugar in an air-tight can or in the same box with a bag of prunes. The sugar will take the moisture from the prunes and keep from lumping and drying out.

After cooking fish wash the dish in clear water with a tablespoonful of two of vinegar and let it boil a few minutes.

The broiler pan of the gas stove is easily cared for if a little water is kept in it when broiling steak. All the fat drips into it and may be saved when cold and there is no danger of a blazing pan.

After using the meat grinder it is much more quickly cleaned if a crust of bread or a few dry crackers are run through it, then wash and clean it with a percolator brush.

For one who travels often it is wise to keep the small bag packed with necessities. Adding the clothing taken but little time, but a toothbrush, brush or comb forgotten in the last minute rush is very inconvenient.

When cleaning hardwood floors use cold water and a good soap. All grease is removed much easier. A brush and a good scouring powder are very effective on a much-soiled floor.

Old potatoes if peeled and left to stand in cold water for several hours will take up moisture and cook almost as well as if new.

New potatoes for salads should be cooked with their skins on. They have a much better flavor.

String beans cooked in an open kettle with a little soda, sugar and salt will be an attractive green. Plenty of good butter is needed to make any of these vegetables palatable.

A deep iron kettle called a Scotch kettle, with an iron cover, is the best of utensils for cooking meats and stew of all kinds. If the meat seems to be tough add a tablespoonful or two of vinegar to soften the fibers.

Another recommended method is to take a teaspoonful of powdered alum, dissolve in a tablespoonful of water and set in the oven to become transparent. Wash the broken edges in hot water and while still hot rub with the alum, lightly and quickly as the alum sets instantly. Set away to become firm.

When varnishing a floor place the can of varnish in a dish of hot water to keep the varnish thin and easy to spread. It goes farther and makes a better finish.

Lesson for July 5

THE BEGINNING OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

LESSON TEXT—Acts 13:1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT—And He said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.—Mark 16:15.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Two Men Become Foreign Missionaries.

JUNIOR TOPIC—How Foreign Missions Began.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Beginning of Foreign Missions.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Holy Spirit in Foreign Missions.

I. The Gifts of the Church at Antioch (v. 1).

Young as Antioch, the new religious center was, she had prophets and teachers. In Eph. 4:8-12 Paul declares that when Christ ascended He gave gifts to men for the purpose of perfecting the saints unto the work of the ministry. This shows that the church does not exist for itself, but for service to others. Christ, the head of the church, came not to be ministered to, but to minister and give His life a ransom for many (Matt. 20:28).

II. Barnabas and Saul Sent Forth (vv. 2-3).

These were the first foreign missionaries sent out. While the five ministers were praying and fasting, the Spirit of God commanded them to send forth Barnabas and Saul. The work of evangelizing the world was laid so heavily upon these men that they refrained from eating in order to seek the will of the Lord in prayer. This is the kind of fasting that meets God's approval. From the fact that they were directed to send forth those whom the Spirit called, we learn that the real call to Christ's service comes from the Spirit. The Spirit called and the church seconded the motion by sending those who were called by Him. The church should be constantly seeking the mind of the Spirit relative to the sending forth of laborers into the vineyard. The Spirit called and the church sent the very best men from the church at Antioch. These men seem to have been ready to go for they rendered instant obedience. This should be our attitude toward the Lord's work, holding ourselves in readiness for the immediate execution of His commission. Those who have received the Spirit's call are not taken by surprise when the church sets them forward to their specific work.

III. Preaching the Word of God in Cyprus (vv. 4-5).

We are not told as to why they first went to Cyprus, but we are left to infer that it was owing to the fact that it was the home of Barnabas. He was acquainted with the country and people, and could thus be assured of a respectable hearing among them. Besides it is most natural that those who have heard the good news to go with it first to their kindred and friends. Andrew first went to his brother, and the man out of whom the demons were cast was denied the pleasure of his request to follow Jesus. Christ commanded him to go home and tell what great things the Lord had done for him (Luke 8:39). As they went forth they carefully carried out their commission for they preached the Word of God, not current history, philosophy, ethics, etc. Those who are faithful to God will never preach anything but His Word. The great need today is Spirit-called, Spirit-filled men preaching God's Word. In fact Spirit-filled men will preach nothing else. The opposer of God and Christ can only be successfully met by this means.

IV. Withstood by Elymas, the Sorcerer (vv. 6-12).

Sergius Paulus, the deputy, invited Barnabas and Saul to tell him of the Word of God. Elymas maliciously sought to turn his mind from the faith. This is the first obstacle they encountered, but it was overcome through the power of the Spirit. This opposer is the same one who came to Adam in the garden of Eden, and Jesus in the wilderness. He is the enemy of God and man. He now sought to bar the gospel as it entered upon its career of the conversion of the heathen. Paul denounced him in the most scathing terms. He called him the child of the devil, denounced him as full of guile and villainy, pronouncing him the enemy of all righteousness, accusing him of perverting the right ways of the Lord. Surely a man is never more of a villain than when trying to turn a soul from the gospel.

Our Life

We are living now by justice, honor and mercy, by the moral mastery of ourselves and of our time; and this life while in time is not of time; it is life in God and for God; it is the life of freedom; it is free from anxiety, fear, doubt, despair, death; it is content with God and with its fate in God. —George A. Gordon.

Birds Courageous in Facing Bad Weather

At six o'clock one July morning 2,000 homing pigeons belonging to the Yorkshire Federation of Pigeon Owners were released at Arres, France, to race back to their home in Lancaster, a distance of a little more than 300 miles.

In midchannel they were enveloped in a heavy storm; in the south of England a worse storm was encountered, and in the Midlands the weather was no better. Yet at 3:30 p. m. the birds were arriving home.

The breast feathers of most of them were gone as the result of the beating wind, and some were so exhausted that, having alighted in the yard, they were unable to fly up to the loft. The winner of the race had nevertheless managed to make the long journey at a pace of 900 yards a minute.

The chief summit of the Himalayas, in south central Asia, is Mt. Everest, 29,141 feet high, the highest point of land known.

DEATH OF PERVUS

SYNOPSIS. — Introducing "So Big" (Dirk DeJong) in his infancy. And his mother, Selina DeJong, daughter of Simeon Peake, gambler and gentleman of fortune." Her life, to young womanhood in Chicago in 1888, has been unconventional, somewhat seamy, but generally enjoyable. At school her chum is Julie Hempel, daughter of August Hempel, butcher. Simeon is killed in a quarrel that is not his own, and Selina, nineteen years old and practically destitute, secures a position as teacher at the High Prairie school, in the outskirts of Chicago, living at the home of a truck farmer, Klaas Pool. In Roelf, twelve years old, son of Klaas, Selina perceives a kindred spirit, a lover of beauty, like herself. Selina hears gossip concerning the affection of the "Widow Paarlenberg," rich and good-looking, for Pervus DeJong, poor truck farmer, who is insensible to the widow's attractions. Pervus buys Selina's lunch box at the community "auction." Over her lunch box, which Selina and DeJong share together, the school-teacher arranges to instruct the farmer, whose education has been neglected. Propinquity leads to mutual affection. Selina becomes Mrs. DeJong, a farmer's wife," with all the hardships unavoidable at that time. Dirk is born. Selina (of Vermont stock, businesslike and shrewd) has new ideas for building up the farm, which are ridiculed by her husband.

"You can't run far enough," Maartje had said. "Except you stop living you can't run away from life."

Well, she had run far enough this time.

Roelf was sixteen now, Geertje twelve, Jozina eleven. What would this household do now, Selina wondered, without the woman who had been so faithful a slave to it? Who would keep the pigtails—no longer giggling—in clean ginghams and decent square-toed shoes? Who, when Klaas broke out in rumbling Dutch wrath against what he termed Roelf's "dumb" ways, would say, "Og, Pool, leave the boy alone once. He does nothing." Who would keep Klaas himself in order; cook his meals, wash his clothes, iron his shirts, take a pride in the great ruddy childlike giant?

Klaas answered these questions just one months later by marrying the Widow Paarlenberg. High Prairie was rocked with surprise. For months this marriage was the talk of the district. So insatiable was High Prairie's curiosity that every scrap of news was swallowed at a gulp. When the word went round of Roelf's flight from the farm, no one knew where, it served only as sauce to the great dish of gossip.

Selina had known. Pervus was away at the market when Roelf had knocked at the farmhouse door one night at eight, had turned the knob and entered, as usual. But there was nothing of the usual about his appearance. He wore his best suit—his first suit of store clothes, bought at the time of his mother's funeral. It never had fitted him; now it was grotesquely small for him. He had shot up amazingly in the last eight or nine months. Yet there was nothing of the ridiculous about him as he stood there before her now, tall, lean, dark. He put down his cheap yellow suitcase.

"Roelf."

"I am going away. I couldn't stay."

She nodded. "Where?"

"Away. Chicago maybe." He was terribly moved, so he made his tone casual. "They came home last night. I have got some books that belong to you." He made as though to open the suitcase.

"No, no! Keep them."

"Good-by."

"Good-by, Roelf." She took the boy's dark head in her two hands and, standing on tiptoe, kissed him. He turned to go. "Wait a minute. Wait a minute." She had a few dollars—in quarters, dimes, half dollars—perhaps ten dollars in all—hidden away in a canister on the shelf. She reached for it. But when she came back with the box in her hand he was gone.

Chapter VII

Dirk was eight; Little Sobig DeJong, in a suit made of bean-sacking sewed together by his mother. A brown blond boy with mosquito bites on his legs and his legs never still. Nothing of the dreamer about this lad. The one-room schoolhouse of Selina's day had been replaced by a two-story brick structure, very fine, of which High Prairie was vastly proud. The rusty iron stove had been dethroned by a central heater. Dirk went to school from October until June. Pervus protested that this was foolish. The boy could be of great help in the fields from the beginning of April to the first of November, but Selina fought savagely for his schooling, and won.

"Sobig isn't a truck farmer."

"Well, he will be pretty soon. Time I was fifteen I was running our place."

Verbally Selina did not combat this. But within her every force was gathering to fight it when the time should come. Her Sobig a truck farmer, a slave to the soil, bent by it, beaten by it, blasted by it, so that he, in time, like the other men of High Prairie, would take on the very look of the rocks and earth among which they toiled!

Dirk, at eight, was a none too handsome child, considering his father and mother—or his father and mother as they had been. It was not until he was seventeen or eighteen that he was to metamorphose suddenly into a graceful and aristocratic youngster with an indefinable look about him of distinction and actual elegance.

Selina was a farm woman now, nearing thirty. The work rode her as it had ridden Maartje Pool. In the DeJong yard there was always a dado of washing. Faded overalls, a shirt, socks, a boy's drawers grotesquely patched and mended, towels of rough sacking. She, too, rose at four, snatched up shapeless garments, invested herself with them, seized her great coil of fine cloudy hair, twisted it into a utilitarian knob and skewered it with a hairpin from which the varnish had long departed, leaving it a dull gray; thrust her slim feet into shapeless shoes, dubbed her face with cold water, hurried to the kitchen stove. The work was always at her heels, its breath hot on her neck.

Seeing her thus one would have thought that the Selina Peake of the wine-red cashmere, the fun-loving disposition, the high-spirited courage, had departed forever. But these things still persisted. For that matter, even the wine-red cashmere clung to existence. So hopelessly old-fashioned now as to be almost picturesque, it hung in Selina's closet like a rose memory. Sometimes when she came upon it in an orgy of cleaning she would pass her rough hands over its soft folds and by that magic process Mrs. Pervus DeJong vanished in a pouf and in her place was the girl Selina Peake perched a-tiptoe on a soap box in Adam Ooms' hall while all High Prairie, open-mouthed, looked on as the impecunious Pervus DeJong threw ten hard-earned dollars at her feet.

It would be gratifying to be able to record that in these eight or nine years Selina had been able to work wonders on the DeJong farm; that the house glittered, the crops thrived richly, the barn housed sleek cattle. But it could not be truthfully said. True, she had achieved some changes, but at the cost of terrific effort. A less indomitable woman would have sunk into apathy years before. The house had a coat of paint—lead-gray, because it was cheapest. There were two horses—the second a broken-down old mare, blind in one eye, that they had picked up for five dollars after it had been turned out to pasture for future sale as horse carcass. A month of rest and pasturage restored the mare to usefulness. Selina had made the bargain and Pervus had scolded her roundly for it. Now he drove the mare to market, saw that she pulled more sturdily than the other horse, but had never retracted. It was no quality of meanness in him. Pervus merely was like that.

But the west sixteen! That had been Selina's most heroic achievement. Her plan, spoken of to Pervus in the first month of her marriage, had taken years to mature; even now was but a partial triumph. She had even descended to nagging.

"Why don't we put in asparagus?"

"Asparagus!" considered something of a luxury, and rarely included in the High Prairie truck farmer's products. "And wait three years for a crop!"

"Yes, but then we'd have it. And a plantation's good for ten years, once it's started. I've been reading up on it. The new way is to plant asparagus in rows, the way you would rhubarb or corn. Plant six feet apart, and four acres anyway."

He was not even sufficiently interested to be amused. "Yeh, four acres where? In the city land, maybe." He did laugh then. If the short bitter sound he made could be construed as indicating mirth. "Out of a book."

"In the clay land," Selina urged, crisply. "And out of a book. That west sixteen isn't bringing you anything, so what difference does it make if I am wrong? Let me put my own money into it. I've thought it all out, Pervus. Please. We'll underdrain the clay soil. Just five or six acres, to start. We'll manure it heavily—as much as we can afford—and then for two years we'll plant potatoes there. We'll put in our asparagus plants the third spring—one-year-old seedlings. I'll promise to keep it weeded—Dirk and I. He'd be a big boy by that time. Let me try it, Pervus. Let me try."

In the end she had her way, partly because Pervus was too occupied with his own endless work to oppose her; and partly because he was, in his undemonstrative way, still in love with his vivacious, nimble-witted, high-spirited wife, though to her frantic goadings and proddings he was as phlegmatically oblivious as an elephant to a pin prick.

Though she worked as hard as any woman in High Prairie, had as little dressed as badly, he still regarded her as a luxury; an exquisite toy which, in a moment of madness, he had taken for himself. "Little Lina"—tolerantly, fondly. You would have thought that he spoiled her, pampered her. Perhaps he even thought he did.

That was Pervus. Thrifty, like his kind, but unlike them in shrewdness. Penny wise, pound foolish; a characteristic that brought him his death, September, usually a succession of golden days and hazy opalescent evenings on the Illinois prairie land, was disastrously cold and rainy that year. Pervus' great frame was racked by rheumatism. He was forty now, and over, still of magnificent physique, so that to see him suffering gave Selina the pangs of pity that one has at sight of the very strong or the very weak in pain. He drove the weary miles to market three times a week, for September was the last big month of the truck farmer's season. Selina would watch him drive off down the road in the creaking old market wagon, the green stuff protected by canvas, but Pervus wet before ever he climbed into the seat. There never seemed to be enough waterproof canvas for both.

"Pervus, take it off those sacks and put it over your shoulders."

"That's them white globe onions. The last of 'em. I can get a fancy price for them, but not if they're all wetted down."

"Don't sleep on the wagon tonight, Pervus. Sleep in. Be sure. It saves in the end. You know the last time you were laid up for a week."

"It'll clear. Breaking now over there in the west."

The clouds did break late in the afternoon; the false sun came out hot and bright. Pervus slept out in the Haymarket, for the night was close and humid. At midnight the lake wind sprung up, cold and treacherous, and with it came the rain again. Pervus was drenched by morning, chilled, thoroughly miserable. A hot cup of coffee at four and another at ten when the rush of trading was over stimulated him but little. When he reached home it was mid-afternoon. Selina put him to bed against his half-hearted protests. Banked him with hot water jars, a hot iron wrapped in flannel at his feet. But later came fever instead of the expected relief of perspiration. Ill though he was, he looked more ruddy and hale than most men in health; but suddenly Selina, startled, saw black lines like gashes etched under his eyes, about his mouth, in his cheeks.

"He—He's Breathing So—" She Could Not Bring Herself to Say, "So Terribly."

In a day when pneumonia was known as lung fever and in a locality that advised closed windows and hot air as a remedy, Pervus' battle was lost before the doctor's hooded buggy was seen standing in the yard for long hours through the night. Toward morning the doctor had Jan Steen stable the horse. It was a sultry night, with flashes of heat lightning in the west.

"I should think if you opened the windows," Selina said to the old High Prairie doctor over and over, emboldened by terror, "it would help him to breathe. He—he's breathing so—he's breathing so—" She could not bring herself to say, "so terribly." The sound of the words wrung her as did the sound of his terrible breathing.

* * * * * * * *

Perhaps the most poignant and touching feature of the days that followed was not the sight of this stricken giant, lying majestic and aloof in his unwonted black; nor of the boy Dirk, mystified but elated, too, with the unaccustomed stir and excitement; nor of the shabby little farm that seemed to shrink and dwindle into further insignificance beneath the sudden publicity turned upon it. No; it was the sight of Selina, widowed, but having no time for decent tears. The farm was there; it must be tended. Illness, death, sorrow—the garden must be tended, the vegetables pulled, hauled to market, sold. Upon the garden depended the boy's future, and hers.

For the first few days following the funeral one or another of the neighboring farmers drove the DeJong team to market, aided the blundering Jan in the fields. But each had his hands full with his own farm work. On the fifth day Jan Steen had to take the garden truck to Chicago, though not without many misgivings on Selina's part, all of which were realized when he returned late next day with half the load still on his wagon and a sum of money representing exactly zero in profits.

Selina was standing in the kitchen doorway, Jan in the yard with the team. She turned her face toward the fields. An observant person (Jan Steen was not one of these) would have noted the singularly determined and clear-cut jaw line of this drably calloued farm woman.

"I'll go myself Monday."

Jan stared. "Go? Go where, Monday?"

"To market."

At this seeming pleasantry Jan Steen smiled uncertainly, shrugged his shoulders, and was off to the barn. She was always saying things that didn't make sense. His horror and unbelief were shared by the rest of High Prairie when on Monday Selina literally took the reins in her own slim work-scarred hands.

"To market!" argued Jan as excitedly as his phlegmatic nature would permit. "A woman she don't go to market. A woman—"

"This woman does." Selina had risen at three in the morning. Not only that, she had got Jan up, grumbling. Dirk had joined them in the fields at five. Together the three of them had pulled and bunched a wagon load. "Size them," Selina ordered, as they started to bunch radishes, beets turnips, carrots. "And don't leave them loose like that. Tie them tight—by the heads, like this. Twice around with the string, and through. Make bouquets of them, not bunches. And we're going to scrub them."

Selina, scrubbing the carrots vigorously under the pump, thought they emerged from their unaccustomed bath looking like exhumed specimens of purgold. Jan, by now, was sullen with bewilderment. He refused to believe that she actually intended to carry out her plan. A woman—a High Prairie farmer's wife—driving to market like a man! Alone at night in the market place—or at best in one of the cheap rooming houses! By Sunday somehow, mysteriously, the news had filtered through the district. A fine state of things, and she a widow of a week! High Prairie called at the DeJong farm on Sunday afternoon and was told that the widow was over in the west west sixteen, poking about with the boy Dirk at her heels.

By Monday afternoon the parlor curtains of every High Prairie farmhouse that faced the Halsted road were agitated as though by a brisk wind between the hours of three and five, when the market wagons were to be seen moving toward Chicago.

Selina, having loaded the wagon in the yard, surveyed it with more sparkle in her eye than High Prairie would have approved in a widow of little more than a week. They had picked and bunched only the best of the late crop. Selina stepped back and regarded the riot of crimson and green, of white and gold and purple.

"Aren't they beautiful! Dirk, aren't they beautiful!"

Dirk, capering in his excitement at the prospect of the trip before him shook his head impatiently.

"I don't know what you mean. Let's go, mother. Aren't we going now? You said as soon as the load was on."

"Oh, Sobig, you're just exactly like your—" She stopped.

"Like my what?"

"We'll go now, son. There's cold meat for your supper, Jan, and potatoes all sliced for frying and half an apple pie left from noon. You ought to get in the rest of the squash and pumpkins by evening. Maybe I can sell the lot instead of taking them in by the load. I'll see a commission man. Take less, if I have to."

She had dressed the boy in his home-made suit cut down from one of his father's. He wore a wide-brimmed straw hat which he hated. Selina herself, in a full-skirted black-stuff dress, mounted the wagon agilely, took up the reins, looked down at the boy seated beside her, clucked to the horses. Jan Steen gave vent to a final outraged bellow.

"Never in my life did I hear of such a thing!"

Will Selina sell every vegetable at a high price? Or will she come home in despair?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

She Meant Well

A student brought his mother to the university and was showing her about. The dear old lady was anxious to make her boy think that she understood everything.

"Over there, mother," said the son, "are our wonderful polo fields."

"Oh," sighed the old lady, "what is there that is nicer than fields of waving polo?"

Unlucky

"I heerd tell this afternoon," said Mrs. Johnson, upon her return from a neighborhood call, "that Mizzus Giggery cut her foot powerful bad whilst chopping up stovewood. Ain't that just too bad?"

"It shore is," replied Gap Johnson of Ruinous Ridge. "Pore Gabe won't have no wife to support him for—lemme see—months."—Kansas City Star.

WOMAN BUILDS CABINET FOR HER KITCHEN

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Here is a picture of a cabinet which was made by a woman living on a farm in Goochland county, Virginia. Mrs. Nicholls did not have a closet or pantry, so she set about to build a cabinet which would effectively meet her needs. The investment represented was little more than what was needed for nails, hinges and handles on the drawer. She also made the high stool, and put the box under the shelf on rollers. As it contains her pots and pans, she has frequent occasion to pull it out. The work was done in connection with the county kitchen improvement contest, directed by the state and county home demonstration agents, co-operatively employed by the United States Department of Agriculture and the Virginia Polytechnic Institute.

DELICIOUS DESSERTS MADE FROM CHERRIES

It Pays to Use Them at the Height of Their Season When Freshest.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

"Cherries are ripe! Let's have a pie!" is probably exclaimed in hundreds of homes as soon as the remark happens to fit the growing season. The family fortunate enough to have a cherry tree in the garden can count on many delicious desserts as well as cherry pie, whether the cherries are sweet or sour, black, white or red. Even when the cherries have to be bought, it pays to use them at the height of their season when they are freshest and cheapest. They may be served in place of, or in addition to other fruits, for the sake of a change of flavor.

Every housekeeper has her own way of making cherry pie—not every one, however, knows the secret of making a juicy fruit pie with a crisp undercrust. Here are several suggestions furnished by the United States Department of Agriculture to insure success: Prebake the undercrust until it is delicately colored, but not too brown, or it will be overcooked around the edges when the filling has been put in and the final cooking is done. Thicken the juice slightly with flour. Moisten the rim when laying the top crust in place and tuck the edge in carefully so that the juice will not leak out. Prick the crust to allow steam to escape.

For cherry tarts, make any desired pastry, and bake the shells on the outside of muffin pans. Cook the fruit only long enough to dissolve the sugar, thickening the juice a little if desired. Fill the cases with the cooked cherries. An extra touch may be given by adding a meringue or a spoonful of whipped cream.

Cherry Roly Poly.

A good old-fashioned hot dessert is roly poly pudding. This can be made with any kind of fruit in season—raspberries, blackberries, blueberries, apples or even with dried fruits—raisins, dates, prunes, figs—but it is particularly delicious when cherries are used, and they are one of the earliest available fresh fruits. To make it use:

2 cups flour
5 teaspoonfuls baking powder
1 teaspoonful salt
¾ cup milk
1½ cups pitted cherries
½ cup sugar
2 teaspoonfuls butter

Mix all together except the fruit and sugar and then roll the dough out in a sheet. Spread the fruit and sugar over the dough and add a little sugar if desired. Roll up like a jelly roll.

Leave a one-inch margin of plain dough all around. Sew the pudding up in a cheesecloth bag, allowing room for swelling. Steam or boil one hour.

Serve with a cherry hard sauce made by adding from one-half to one cupful of chopped pitted cherries to ordinary hard sauce.

Cherry Foam.

Desserts made with uncooked egg whites are meant to be served and eaten promptly or they lose their fluffy texture. Cherry foam is similar in principle to apple or orange "snow," and has the pleasing cherry flavor. Here is the recipe:

2 egg whites
Dash of salt
1 cup sugar
1 cup cut cherries
1 tablespoonful lemon juice

Wash and pit cherries and cut them in half. Cook them for a few minutes until the sugar is dissolved. Chill thoroughly. Beat the whites of the eggs until very stiff, then add the slightly cooked fruit, mixing lightly. Serve at once with a custard sauce or whipped cream.

Dress Form Popular in Western Sewing Clubs

Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In the clothing work in Thurston county, Washington, the home demonstration agent, representing the United States Department of Agriculture and the state agriculture college, spent ten days with three groups of interested women. After finding that the price quoted on commercial dress forms was $2.75, it was agreed to discontinue their use and substitute the gummed paper form, at a cost of $1 to each maker. Eight forms were finished at Grand Mound, 14 women were enrolled at the Spurgeon Creek community fair, and the same plan was presented at the South Bay fair, with an enrollment of 12.

Making a Gummed Paper Form.

In Pierce county, Washington, the home demonstration agent reports 68 paper dress forms made. A commercial device was purchased for moistening the paper, the cost of which the women propose to meet by paying 10 cents extra for the first 40 forms. One woman said the fun of making a form is worth the $1. It costs. The women have been doing this work themselves after seeing one demonstration.

Rhubarb Betty Is Good Dessert for Variation

Here are two old friends who, in a good many homes, have never met each other. Rhubarb, by itself—served as sauce—is sufficiently familiar to need no introduction; in fact, this is almost the only form in which many people know rhubarb. Even when they enjoy rhubarb pie, the rhubarb is sauce before it is pie. "Betty"—bread crumbs and fruit, baked in alternate layers—is most often "apple betty," sometimes peach or prune betty. There is no reason, however, why rhubarb betty should not vary the spring desserts and be popular with the family. It may be made with sweetened rhubarb sauce or raw sliced rhubarb, sprinkled with sugar and alternated with buttered spiced crumbs. The United States Department of Agriculture has tested the following proportions:

Rhubarb Betty.

1 quart sweetened rhubarb sauce or raw sliced rhubarb and sugar
2 or 4 tablespoonfuls melted butter
Cinnamon or nutmeg
1 quart fine, dry bread crumbs

Mix the butter with the crumbs. Place the rhubarb and the crumbs in alternate layers in a greased baking dish, and sift the cinnamon or nutmeg over the top. Bake the pudding in a moderate oven. If rhubarb sauce is used, this will require about fifteen minutes. If raw rhubarb is used, cover the baking dish at first and bake 25 minutes or until the rhubarb is tender. Serve the pudding hot, or let cool and serve with hard sauce.

Horse Carries Tail Light

Camden, N. J., has a police horse that carries a tail light. The horse is used by a mounted patrolman, and has been bruised several times by being struck by machines whose drivers did not see the animal. Determined to protect himself and his mount, the patrolman attached a red reflector to the tail of his horse. The reflector flashes red when the lights from a motor strike it, and the driver instinctively steers clear of the danger signal.

Clanton Takes Three Straight from Anniston

After losing two out of three games in Anniston two weeks ago, the Moulders were invited to Clanton for three games last Thursday, Friday and Saturday, and proceeded to show them the art of playing the national game.

When Saturday's game was finished the Clanton team had won by the score of 7 to 6 in one of the most interesting games of the season. After Potter had been knocked out in second inning, Earl Hawkins, late of the Coton States league, proceeded to hold the Clanton boys in check but for the home run of Connatser in the eighth inning which won the game for Clanton.

Jones, Sewell and Connatser connected for the circuit as did Rowe of the visitors. Starling pitched a good game, although he weakened in the fourth and sixth innings, allowing the visitors to tie the count.

Thursday's game was one-sided Moulton pitching a good game for the home team, while "Ham" Stevens, erstwhile Howard star, and who has been sold recently to the Philadelphia Athletics, being hit freely. Jack Hayes and Thompson took special liking to his offerings, each getting three hits and Moulton hit home run. Thompson and Connatser got three baggers, and Starling, Lowery and Wright being credited with two-based hits.

On Friday Whorton hooked up in a pretty game against Chilton, and Jo[illegible] pitched a good game, [illegible] eighth the home boys put the game on ice, led by Connatser's 3-sacker, and a few errors and hits, scored four runs, finally winning 6 to 2.

Saturday's game has already been described. The box scores follow:

DEALERS IN GENERAL MERCHANDISE

Our friends are always welcome. The store where your DOLLAR has more CENTS.

J. A. MADDOX, Prop.

C. REESE MULLIS, Agt.

I wish to state to my friends and patrons of this county that there is a man by the name of T. E. Grier going over the county selling Singer sewing machines, and, I understand from a number of my friends, that he is making the statement that the Singer Machine Company is letting me out and that he has been sent here to take my place.

I want to say to my friends and patrons if he has made this statement, that it is entirely without any foundation whatsoever, and that it is a baseless and malicious falsehood. I further wish to state to my friends who are contemplating buying a Singer sewing machine that I have just received a new shipment today, June 1st, and I will get in another shipment next week. I will also have a car load of machines to reach me about July 15th for fall delivery. If you want a new Singer, please write, phone, or call on me at my office, where you will find me every Saturday. Machines sold on easy payments, old machines taken in exchange, a liberal discount for cash. All kinds of second hand machines, including Singers, New Homes, Whites and many others, practically at your own price.

We cordially invite all our friends in Chilton and adjoining counties to visit our town and place of business on JULY 4TH.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

On Carrying Cheoks Around

"Have you heard about the trouble Jim Sykes is in, Aunt Emmy?" asked Molly, who dearly loved to talk about her neighbors.

"Why, no," answered Aunt Emmy; "what is it?"

"Well, Aunty, you know how proud he was to get that building job from Mr. Parker. He needed the money so much. When it was finished Mr. Parker gave him a check for $3,000. Of course Jim had obligated himself to pay a lot of that out for materials and things. Well, you know what an old slow poke Jim Sykes is. Instead of taking the check to the bank right away he carried it around in his pocket and then poor Mr. Parker died. Now he must wait until Mr. Parker's estate is settled, and that may be a couple of years before he can cash the check. Poor Jim, isn't it a shame!"

"It's too bad," agreed Aunt Emmy, "but quite in keeping with most folks' carelessness about money. People should be prompt in depositing checks. Aside from such a serious thing as a death, an undeposited check is a nuisance to lots of people. Banks and business houses keep their books carefully balanced. If at the end of a month a check that has been issued has not been put through for collection it means a lot of unnecessary bookkeeping for the person who issued the check and for the bank.

"Then, too, there is the danger of loss. People often write their names across the back of a check and then carry it around for a day or two before banking it. An indorsed check is as negotiable as money. To be safe always indorse it to your bank. Write 'Pay to the Order of ——' then the name of your bank and below that sign your name. That protects the check from being used, if it should get out of your hands. But never waste any time about depositing checks you receive."

"Not after what happened to Jim and after hearing you tell me all these things, Aunty!" said Molly. "I'd be scared to keep a check a minute more than necessary."—Anne B. Aymes.

DISPOSES IN 282 WORDS OF THE BANK GUARANTEE LAW

"Understand bank deposit guaranty being proposed in your legislature," telegraphed R. B. Clark, president of the Bank of Tupelo, Miss., to Paul R. Brown, Secretary of the North Carolina Bankers Association. "Such a law in any form is a snare and a delusion. It is license and encouragement to irresponsible banks and banking and penalizes capital solvency and prudent banking. It creates a sense of security in the minds of the unthinking and uninformed that is false and impossible to be realized on ultimately. It tends to debauch one's sight and duty to be thoughtful and discriminating. To compare it to legitimate insurance is without reason and absurd. It jeopardizes the solvency of all banks and the safety of all depositors for the theoretical safety of a few. We have had it ten years, and the fund is hopelessly in arrears. Have been fighting for repeal and have made progress. Only repeal can save our state system of banks. Many of the best are nationalizing even now. Guaranty schemes always have been, are and always will be impotent, futile and disastrous. Consider Oklahoma, Texas, Nebraska, Mississippi and others. It is not new. Has been tried, failed and discarded at intervals for more than 100 years in this country. No well-informed, honest and intelligent mind can accept it in principle or practice. Well paid intelligently competent supervision, restriction of banks to territory that will warrant sufficient capital investment and encourage surplus accounts is the only sane and honest course and will afford all the guaranty the depositing public is entitled to as compared with all other human affairs. Arouse your people and crush the misguided effort for all time. To do so will be worth whatever it may cost, and the value will be to your people generally more than to the banks."

The bill was reported unfavorably.

PITFALLS FOR THE UNWARY

Seek Bankers' Advice on Foreign Bonds, Says Department of Commerce.

American investors in securities of foreign companies and foreign governments should take care to purchase them only through reliable bankers or brokers, says Commerce Reports issued by the Department of Commerce. It adds:

"There have recently been several flagrant cases of securities being advertised in American journals at prices from 10 to 100 times the price quoted on the same date in the markets of the countries where the concerns are located. Some of these cases have even attracted the attention of foreign newspapers. This is not a safe kind of speculation for an uninformed American, but the would-be investor can easily protect himself by asking the advice of his regular banker."

MAKING MONEY FIT BUSINESS

When Times Are Active the Supply Increases—Contraction Follows Seasonal and Periodic Slackening.

New York. — Demonstration that complete elasticity has been imparted to the currency in the United States by the Federal Reserve System despite assertions to the contrary is given in the American Bankers Association Journal by W. Randolph Burgess, assistant agent at the New York Federal Reserve Bank.

"Of all the money in circulation in the United States, Federal Reserve notes now make up almost one-half," he says in part. "In 1920 they were 70 per cent. The increase in currency which the war and high world prices made necessary was provided almost wholly by Federal Reserve notes. Just as the increase was wholly through Federal Reserve notes, so again the decrease was altogether in Federal Reserve notes. Reserve notes in circulation decreased from $3,300,000,000 in November, 1920, to $1,700,000,000 in March, 1925. Between the same dates other currency increased from $1,500,000,000 to $2,200,000,000, due to an increase in gold certificates.

"There are still some few who produce theoretical arguments to show that for some reason the Federal Reserve note is not elastic. These various arguments raise interesting questions, but they make little headway against the facts, for the facts show that the Federal Reserve note has been elastic.

How Currency Changes Volume

"The amount of currency the country requires reflects changing prices, wage levels, employment and volume of trade. As an example, retail trade at Christmas time is always larger than at other times. This results in a considerable increase in the need for hand to hand currency. Currency withdrawals and receipts at the Federal Reserve Banks illustrate the way this special demand was met. Prior to Christmas there was paid out about $300,000,000 of currency, all of which was returned to the bank within the two or three weeks following Christmas.

"The mechanism is that when Federal Reserve member banks need currency for their customers they draw it from the Reserve Bank. Member banks can secure additional currency by borrowing at the Reserve Bank. Conversely, whenever currency in circulation becomes larger than is required by business it begins to return to the banks and they immediately utilize it to pay off indebtedness at the Reserve Banks, on which they are paying interest.

"The Federal Reserve System has made all types of currency, except national bank notes, elastic because all except those notes can be issued in amounts required and they all tend to flow back to the Reserve Bank when they are not required. There is another phase of currency elasticity. A $100 Federal Reserve note may represent only $40 in gold, because a gold reserve of only 40 per cent is required against Federal Reserve notes. On the other hand, a $100 gold certificate must represent $100 in gold. Thus the Federal Reserve Banks can issue, in response to commercial demand, two and one-half times as many Federal Reserve notes as gold certificates before the reserve ratio reaches the legal minimum.

Secondary Stretch

"This secondary elasticity was illustrated during the war, when in response to war demands Federal Reserve notes were issued to the amount of $3,405,000,000. The Federal Reserve System could have issued more than $800,000,000 additional without lowering the reserve against notes below 40 per cent, or the reserve against deposits below 35 per cent. In any emergency the power to issue these notes increases by 150 per cent the amount of cash which might be supplied to the country.

"Federal Reserve currency has proved itself flexible in war expansion and in post-war reductions. Since the establishment of the System the currency has been responsive to the seasonal and emergency needs of business. The Federal Reserve Act obtained currency elasticity by placing the country's reserve cash in institutions not organized for profit, from which currency might be withdrawn or to which it might be returned in response to the country's needs. While the existence of the Federal Reserve System gives flexibility to almost all forms of currency, the Federal Reserve notes, secured in part by commercial paper, provides a possible secondary expansion in readiness for an emergency."

SUPPLYING THE NATION'S CHANGE

Supplying the wealthiest nation in the world with change is a job of tremendous proportions. During 1924 the United States mints struck off 89,394,000 one cent pieces and 28,315,000 nickels. The small change of the nation was enlarged by 37,940,000 dimes and 16,892,000 quarters. While a drive was started to popularize the silver dollar, only 13,539,000 of the "silver cartwheels" were coined. Singularly, the half-dollar is the most unpopular coin that the United States makes. During 1925 there were just 142,080 half-dollars struck off, and all of these were the commemorative Huguenot-Walloon coins. The mints coined 10,300,500 double eagles.

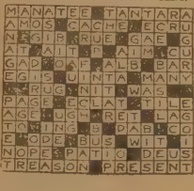
Solution of Last Week's Puzzle.



HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

Orchid Hunters Live on Brink of Grave

Orchids are paid for with human lives as well as with gold. Of all occupations, orchid collecting has the highest death rate.

A few years ago eight orchid hunters, working in Madagascar, dined one evening at Tamatave. They arranged to have another reunion dinner the following year. When the appointed day arrived seven of them were dead. The eighth was in a hospital. He stayed there for a year, and then sailed for Europe with permanently broken health, says the Buffalo Express.

That was unusually hard luck, but every orchid collector knows of many such cases. A collector, a German, who jeered at an idol in a Madagascar jungle village, was soaked in oil and burned to death.

You are always on the brink of the grave while orchid hunting. Invariably these bizarre, quaintly contorted little blossoms lurk in the unhealthiest depths of the jungle, where fever, snakes, great cats and ambushed savages with poisoned darts combine to wreak vengeance on the man who violates their privacy.

Process of Mapmaking Is Long and Tedious

One of the youngest of all the books that circulate in the government departments in England is to be found at the ordnance survey office at Southampton, where maps are made. Now the ordnance survey office is engaged in printing a wonderful array of new maps covering the whole country in scales ranging from one-sixteenth inch to the mile to twenty-five inches to the square mile, says the London Observer.

The book contains "successive proofs" of the different maps, showing the stages through which a map goes before it finally reaches the public.

The first page shows the map printed in black ink in skeleton form, giving nothing but the names of different places. The next page is devoted to perhaps only two thick red lines—the main roads wending their way through the particular section of the country.

The third page will show the skeleton map with the main roads printed on it, while the fourth will give four or five minor and proposed roads. The fifth will show those roads on the skeleton. The sixth page is a veritable Chinese puzzle in green—the highest points of the country.

All the series of outlines and daubs are in their turn printed on the top of the skeleton map, and the finished plate gives the map as it is issued to the public.

Toys From Grownups

"I never was prosperous so long as I designed toys that interested children only," a Detroit inventor said. "I learned that adults will not pay liberally for such playthings. The big profits, I discovered, come from toys and novelties which adults pretend to buy for the children, but which they really desire for their own amusement. That discovery is making me wealthy, but has robbed toy designing of its sentimental phase."

Mineral From Greenland

Trade of the United States with Greenland, says the National City Bank of New York, runs at the rate of nearly a quarter of a million dollars a year, and has aggregated approximately $2,000,000 in the last dozen years. Nearly all of our trade with Greenland consists of imports, and our own purchases from that island are chiefly composed of cryolite produced by an American corporation from a mine near Ivigtut on the southwestern coast. This peculiar mineral deposit, cryolite, discovered by the Danes 130 years ago, is the biggest known deposit of this material in the world, and the fact that we have a limited supply of this material in the state of Colorado has not prevented the American company, which controls the Ivigtut mine under a concession from the Danish government, from bringing many thousands of tons from the western coast of Greenland, about 2,000 miles, to the eastern ports of the United States, chiefly Philadelphia.

Just the Place for Him

A clock and watchmaker in a country town decided to go to California. A few days before his departure he met a friend, who asked him to what part of the world he was going.

"That's a terrible place!" remarked the man. "Why, only a short time ago there was an earthquake there that shook the town to its foundations. You wouldn't like that, would you?"

"Would I not?" responded the other. "Look at the number of clocks that would be needing mending after a kickup like that!"

BY MRS. CLARA B. CURRY

ROGERS-ORMAND

A pretty wedding ceremony took place at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Ormand, in Birmingham last Thursday evening at 8:30 o'clock when Miss Marjorie Elizabeth Ormand and Mr. Lewis William Rogers, of Mobile, were married with Rev. W. B. McGlawn, of the Walker Memorial church, officiating.

Mr. and Mrs. Rogers are spending 10 days in New Orleans and at Gulf coast resorts after which they will be in Clanton, for a month.

Mrs. Rogers was graduated from Birmingham-Southern college and later attended Columbia University in New York City. She is a member of the Alpha Omicron Pi Sorority.

Mr. Rogers is connected with the state highway department and is the son of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Rogers, of Mobile.

As a member of our high school faculty for the past session, Mrs. Rogers made many friends in Chilton county who entertain the wish that this epochal venture may result in the greatest amount of happiness for the "twain."

There stands in readiness for Mr. and Mrs. Rogers, an attractive apartment in the home of Mrs. Walter Calloway, where they will stay for a season, to their friends.

MR. AND MRS. W. W. MOORE VISIT CLANTON FRIENDS.

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Monroe, of Fayette, motored to Clanton on Sunday afternoon for a few hours visit in the Upchurch home. The Monroe's formerly lived in Clanton, and both have many friends here.

As principal of the grammer school, Mr. Monroe was a profound success. Certainly, if the wishes of the patrons of the school and the inhabitants of Clanton could have prevailed, Mr. Monroe's life-time job would have been as principal of the city grammer school.

But Mr. Monroe made the profession of teaching, a stepping-stone to his ultimate profession of practicing law. His last and probably his best efforts in training "young ideas how to shoot," were made for the benefit of Clanton boys and girls.

Mr. Monroe then became located in his present home where he has ever since continously engaged in the successful practice of his chosen profession.

O'Dell Headley left Sunday morning for Tennessee to spend his vacation with his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. O'Dell. While away he will visit relatives in Kentucky and Illinois.

The students, on Sunday morning returned to Montevallo to be in readiness for the resumption of their scholastic duties on Monday morning.

Mrs. Willie Jones went to Prattville on Wednesday afternoon to visit relatives. Mrs. Jones paid a brief visit to the home of her sisters. On Thursday morning, accompanied by her mother Mrs. G. L. Phillips, Mrs. Jones went over to Montgomery to visit relatives until Saturday afternoon when she and her mother returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Willis, of Shelby, accompanied by their neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Sawyer and a grandchild of the Sawyer's motored over to Clanton to spend Sunday afternoon with relatives. William Arthur Willis, Jr., accompanied the party.

Mrs. J. Hance Allred and son, Calien, and Miss Kathleen Mullins, have returned home from a delightful fort-night's visit to Tuscaloosa. While in th. city of oaks, Mrs. Allred and Miss Mullins were entertained by their former friend and school-mate, Mrs. C. J. Oliver. (Eleonora Teal.)

Mrs. M. R. Orr, of the Exchange Hotel, hied herself off to Athens on the past week end, where she enjoyed a brief but refreshing cessation from her business cares, in a visit to the home of her brother, Mr. Walter H. Ryan.

Frank Mullins who is pursuing a course of study in one of Montgomery's business colleges spent the week end at home.

Mr. Tom Jones, who holds a responsible position with one of the capital city's progressive firms, spent the week end with Clanton relatives.

Mrs. Wm. Kennedy who has been confined in a Montgomery sanitarium, returned home on Friday afternoon.

OFFICERS INDICTED

SOME ADVICE TO BROADCAST LISTENERS

Here are ten good rules for broadcast listeners;-

1. Don't try to hear ordinary broadcasting from Australia in midsummer.

2. Don't be disappointed if an occasional storm interferes with your radio evening. You can't expect to find a pearl in every oyster nor receive a record-breaking concert every night.

3. If you want louder signals, use a longer aerial, more tubes, higher plate voltage, more sensitive loudspeakers and more careful tickler and receiver adjustment.

4. A signal filling a moderate size room should be enough to give satisfaction. Musically, such a signal is ideal. It is wasteful to insist on tremendous signals which are generally less pleasant than moderate signals.

5. If local station drowns out, a smaller aerial will help drown him out, with a small condenser connected between aerial and ground. And if all measures to get rid of the local station fail, why not enjoy his concerts? He is working hard for you. Broadcast stations have to be closer to some people than to others.

6. For the longer waves above 450 meters, use a condenser connected between the aerial and ground terminals of your set.

7. A little patience in learing to handle your receiver yields rich returns in satisfaction from fine signals.

8. Read the radio column of a newspaper or a good radio magazine or two. It help you to know how your set works and keeps you up-to-date in radio.

9. Ask your radio dealer or manufacturer for advice; he will be glad to help you.

10. Keep direction sheets or instructions. They answer most of the questions which have been puzzling you and preventing you from getting the best of your set.

PROTECTION for 60,000 Employes

The management of this railroad has just made it possible for every employe, male or female, white or colored, to insure his or her peace of mind through the protection afforded by life insurance and substantial remuneration in case of fatal or serious injury.

Through the largest single insurance transaction in the history of underwriting, representing a policy of approximately $150,000,000 in the Prudential Insurance Co., both accident and life insurance are provided to every Louisville & Nashville employe, at a fraction of the normal cost—the railroad assuming a substantial difference in premiums between those paid by employes and those paid to the insurance company.

The management believes that this protection to the "L. & N. family" will make for more efficient service to the public.

Good Farmers In Chilton County

(By J. W. Ayres.)

In an article last week on the crops of Chilton county's farmers, I had seen I promised to give you another article this week dealing with the crops of Mr. J. G Woods and son, for the corn and cotton are not the crops we have in mind.

A twenty-acre field of cotton spread out before the eye was what we beheld here, and skirting this were rows of corn possibly a quarter of a mile, to be longer, with its dark rich color, reading with that of the cotton field made us feel that the horn of plenty was near at hand.

After looking over the crops of Messrs. Wilbanks, Hinkle and Knowles we drove over to Mr. J. G. Woods, and here is where we got our "eye-opener." No, we were not drinking, for as we stated last week, Policeman Hodge was along. An eye opener to be used in a far different way from what some folks are wont to use.

The "eye-opener" is simply this, while we were looking around, viewing the crops from the front yard, Mr. Woods, being what we sized up to be a good home-loving man, suggested that we take a peep through the house.

After introductions to the family, which, by the way, was mostly young ladies, we were led to a small room just off the back porch. No sooner had we stuck our head through than we understood why all the fine corn and cotton we had just viewed Row by row, and tier on tier at one-halves, quarts and pints of berries, peaches, apples, tomatoes, cucumbers, peas and every conceivable garden and orchard fruit, much of it canned this year. As we looked and our mouth watered, this came into our minds: Who could [illegible] such corn and cotton with such provisions as that for every meal?

Some of those who were with us kept [illegible] looking wistful, and we would not for the world intimate anything that would incriminate anybody, but we have just thought at different times, if really there was as many [illegible] in the room when we left as before. There might have been.

For the Woods' family, be it said, impressed the writer as being one of ideal contentment, self-sacrifice, obedient and subservient to the better things of life, and from the industry displayed in the home-lite, and that showing from the business side of the —the growing crops. Although this family may not lay up great riches here, the contentment and the cooperation apparent in this home, all lead to a proper conception of the ideals of the home hereafter. There are too few homes like this one.

W. M. U. EXECUTIVE BOARD ENTERTAINED JULY 9TH

The W. M. U. Executive Board was delightfully entertained by Mrs. Hattie E. Dickinson at her lovely country home near Billingsley on July 9th.

The guests were received by the hostess in the living room which was profofusely decorated with cut flowers and ferns. The color cheme being our National colors.

The meeting was conducted by the associational superintendent, Mrs. Grover C. Harris. The devotional being taken from the beautiful first chapter of St. John, which was forcibly presented by Mrs. Harris.

Mrs. W. C. Dyer of Stanton made an interesting talk on the school at Newton, which was endorsed by all present.

This brought the meeting to the noon hour. The guests were ushered into the dining room where the color scheme was again carred out. A delicous plate luncheon was served which was enjoyed by all present

The afternoon session was led by Mrs. Earl Gowan. Her subject being "Witnessing For Christ," which was most clearly and convincingly explained by this talented young woman. All who heard her were profoundly impressed. Mrs. Hester gave a most interesting and inspiring talk on the life of Miss Fanny E. Heck, from which every one received great inspiration.

After making plans for the next meeting, which will be held at Stanton, in the home of Mrs. W. C. Dyer, (date to be decided later) the board adjourned and as they returned to their respective homes they all felt it was "an end of a perfect day."

DARROW OBJECTS TO PRAYER AT COURT SESSIONS

Dayton, Tenn. Further prayer at the opening sessions of the evolution case will probably be dispensed with.

Court was again opened with prayer today, and this prompted Darrow and Dudley Field Malone to reques the judge to dosist from further prayer at the trial.

"This community has oeen sufficiently inflamed on religious lines and we don't care for any more propaganda in favor of the prosecution in the form of prayers," they told the judge. "This is a courtroom, not a church."

Raulston practically agreed to eliminate further prayer. Both ministers who have led in prayer in court so far have been fundamentalists.

PUBLISHES PAPER ON SWEET-GUM VENEER

An example of newspaper enterprise has come to this office in the shape of a full fledged "paper," printed on Alabama made stock and with nothing but Alabama ideas. Bob Vail, secretary of the Alabama Press association, which has just completed its annual session in Baldwin county, secured some sweet gum veneer about as thick as thin cardboard and proceeded to make a newspaper, complete in all departments.

The news is all in humorous style, prospects are paid to many members of the "fourth estate," and Editor Vail has come in for much eulogy for his originality and inventive genius in using Alabama ideas on Baldwin county veneer, made at Bay Minette.—Montgomery Journal.

AN OBJECT LESSON

A telegraphic dispatch from Moscow dated June 12, says:

"Under the terms of a decree now under discussion by the Soviet officials, common law marriages hereafter will be recognized as legal and binding by Soviet courts. Men and women will not need to go through either a civil or religious ceremony or even register themselves to be considered husband and wife and enjoy the protection of the Soviet law, but the period of their living together, under the proposed decree must be a reasonably long one, if the couple desires that the union be legalized."

Think of the confusion of property rights (if there is any such thing under the Soviet rule) which will result in a few years from this loose method of family relations. And yet there are thousands of persons in our country who if they had the power would [illegible] of socialism which in the end would tear down our government.

Hindenburg demands that the charges that Germany was responsible for the war be dropt; which is all right so long as he don't ask us to drop our charges for the war.

Henry Ford's new airplane flivvers will never be a success for transcontinental touring. They can't find stakes strong enough to hold them down at night while you're sleeping.

Man will stand for almost anything but we doubt whether he will permit tobacco to be taken away without resisting.

The smartest salesmen are women: even when they are doing their best to land a man they make him believe they are the buyers.

"Yes," replied the traveler. "I saw such a calf quite a way back, following a flivver car. What is the matter with animals?"

Let the Fourth of July Spirit Prevail

Saturday is the anniversary of the independence of the United States of America, and while we go about celebrating the glorious ocasion, we would be very ungrateful and unmindful should we not during these glorious moments, do reverence to the those whose blood was shed for this freedom. And also, back of all this, we as free Americans are not forgetting the fact that it was not them, but the God above who directed their hands in the great struggle which gave us the fredom we enjoy today, and have enjoyed all these years.

When we mingle Saturday in Clanton with those we know and love, and partake of the repast and refreshments the Methodist ladies are preparing; when we get hilarious over the two ball games most of the crowd will enjoy; and at night when we watch the maneuvering of the hooded hordes which will be present, and listen to the speakers who will explain what this order means to represent; when we see them in the naturalization ceremonies, let's not be so unthoughted as to forget that we owe a obligation ourselves to the same God who has watched over and guided us so far, and ask His continuance in the years to come.

If we do these things, and stand as those of old, our pathway through life will be strewn with roses, and the thorns of life will not be so thick on our pathway as we turn the corner to go down the western horizon of life. In your joys remember the One to whom you owe your being, and make your pledge to be faithful to the end.

At a propitious interval, to the familar strains of the wedding march, a miniature groom and bride, Master Wm. Green Retherford and little Miss Olive Rainer Elmore, marched through the living-room apparently on their way to happiness. Unconscious seemed the happy couple of the pair of fairies that followed, bearing a golden treasure-laden chest.

The chest disclosed many real tresures that were presented to the Mrs. [illegible]

Little Misses Mary Calloway and Jane Pitts were the adorable fairies.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

By Mary Graham Bonner

RING-NECKED PHEASANT

"My mother told me," said the Ring-necked Pheasant, "never to beat about the bush.

"She told me that was a saying that it would be well for me to remember.

"When people were told," she said, "that they shouldn't beat about the bush, it meant that they should do something in a direct fashion.

"Sometimes they were told this when they were speaking.

"'Don't beat about the bush, but come out and say directly what you mean.'

"That was what was meant by beating about the bush—not being direct about a thing.

"Well, when we fly we always fly in a straight line. We never go this way, and then that way, with turns and what not.

"We go in a straight line.

"We don't make curves and swoops and all such things. Straight ahead is our way.

"But of course we don't fly such a great deal. If we are frightened we usually try to run out of the way of harm or of whatever is frightening us.

"We like to hide from danger rather than fly from it.

"We aren't great flyers. We don't like to move fast or hurry.

"We're a bit lazy, you might say.

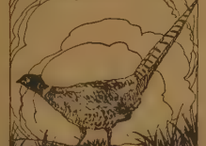
"Now, I am a Mr. Ring-Necked Pheasant, and my other name is Mongolian Pheasant.

"I am supposed to be very beautiful. I'm not conceited about my looks.

"It seems foolish to be conceited about one's looks when the world is so full of so much that is beautiful.

"Pheasants are never the way peacocks are about looks. Peacocks are beautiful, but so are other things beautiful, and they act as though they were the only beautiful things in the world.

"When I say I am beautiful I mean that the family as a family is a hand-



"I Am Supposed to Be Very Beautiful."

some one, but at the same time we know there are many other beautiful objects in the world.

"I have a very long tail—about a yard long. Some of us have longer tails than others.

We like it that way. We believe in having a little variety.

"We don't want to have the same length tails—all of us just the same—we don't want that.

"Dear me, no, that would be tiresome.

"The ladies in the family always have shorter tails than the gentlemen, just as they lack our gay colorings.

"They are far quieter in their styles. But they are handsome.

"I have a white collar around my neck. I think that is suitable. I don't believe in being without my collar. I wouldn't feel dressed properly without it, and yet lots of birds don't bother about collars.

"Even some of the pheasants don't. That is why I have the name of Ring-Necked Pheasant.

"It means that I have a ring around my neck—although I usually call it a collar.

"I have, as I've said, very handsome colorings and very gay and beautiful feathers.

"We believe in variety in our coloring, too, and we don't all have just the same coloring.

"We like the states of Washington and Oregon best in which to live.

"Some of the members of the family live elsewhere and in zoos, but we are very happy wandering about these great states.

"Give us two states in which to wander, and we're satisfied.

"Shouldn't we be?

"Surely so.

"And we are.

"That we know.

"We will stay.

"We won't go!"

A Slight Misunderstanding

I was at a dinner party last February where the little boy of the house was allowed to sit at the table. One of the ladies remarked that she saw a pair of white shoes coming down First street.

After a few minutes the little fellow asked: "And was nobody in them?"

Thank You

Small Boy—Thanks for the present, auntie.

His Aunt—Oh, that's nothing to thank me for.

Small Boy—That's what I thought, but mother said I should thank you for it anyhow.—Boys' Life.

KNITTED FULL LENGTH COATS; PARIS MODES FOR YOUNG GIRLS

THE knitted coat's the thing! One cannot look upon the handsome models which grace this season's showings without realizing that the knitted coat by virtue of its chic, charm and practicality is destined to play a most important part in fashionable life. Not that the full-length knitted coat ever failed of fascinating appeal, even from the days of its initial appearance but somehow heretofore we were prone to classify it rather as a passing fad or fancy, rather than as staple fashion. Not so from now on, for this season's models prove conclusively that the knitted coat has earned for itself a definite place in the field of stylish and practical wraps.

A model which bespeaks the last word in knitted coat fashions is pictured here. It is knitted of coral in an intriguing stitch, with cuffs, patch pockets and revers in frost gray. That smart tailored appearance, which is so necessary according to style requirements, characterizes this coat in every detail.

The midsummer collection of knitted coats accents the pastel shades. Frequently looped wool describes a smart embellishment in collar, cuffs and sometimes hem-border.

Most of the lightweight models are constructed of soft wool with rayon interknit either in attractive stitch, as instanced in this illustration, or defining self-toned block patternings or jacquard effects. The straightline wrap-around modes fastening with a decorative button are preferred.

SHOWING COAT AND PARTY DRESS

For wear over lingerie and sheer frocks these knitted coats are entrancing. The colors which glorify them contribute a summer loveliness to the costume. The all-white knitted wrap leads, perhaps, in popularity although the competition is keen among such lovely shades as nile green, pink to deep rose, powder blue, lariot and gay yellow. Double-breasted coats of two-toned mottled jersey are a fall item.

Before the littlest Parisienne is conscious of her clothes she is clad in garments that differ from those of her brothers, and this difference widens steadily as the years carry her into young girlhood. In the early teens she is always simply dressed, but much attention is given to details of finish and style in all that she wears. In many particulars—as in color and decoration—her belongings are made to follow the lead of the modes for grown ups.

Paris sends over drawings of two costumes for young girls in the first half of their teens, as shown in the illustration. In the figure at the left the young miss is thoughtfully regarding an embroidery in colors which brightens her three-piece costume of ten kasha. It has quite a grown-up appearance for a girl of thirteen, but the embroidery is in a simple pattern and might be in any bright color. The skirt is lengthened a little for each year up to sixteen.

At the right a coat in pastel-green kasha is lined with printed silk in any harmonizing colors one may choose, and may be worn over a matching dress or with other dresses. The use of kasha cloth and printed silk lining modestly acknowledges the lead of the mode and the coat is very carefully tailored. Mam'selle is much dressed up in these costumes and they will remind her to deport herself with dignity—in order to match their style.

In party dresses the young miss is allowed to shine in filmy fabrics and flowerlike colors like those worn by her elders. Taffeta, made with fitted, short-waisted bodice and full skirt, much beruffled and beribboned, is chosen in corn-color, pink, peach powder blue or pastel green for these gay party frocks. Georgette in the same colors or white, posed over silk slips in contrasting color, are shown in frocks with flaring skirts, usually set onto lace yokes and finished at the bottom with lace. Pluits are freely used as a decoration and narrow ribbon girdles to define a low waistline. Ribbon in two colors, or silver and a color, in a twisted girdle finished with a rosette brings a plaited georgette frock to the pinnacle of success.

A home based on right principles will be simple. No ostentation or living beyond one's means; simplicity in entertainments, in offering freely of what one has to friends, without apology or explanation.

HOT WEATHER DISHES

Fish, being easily digested, and with our quick transportation and refrigeration, available in almost any inland city of any size, makes an ideal summer food. Fish should be served at least once a week, and oftener if the family is especially fond of it.

Whether near the salt water on inland lakes, there is always enough variety to avoid monotony, and good canned fish is always obtainable anywhere. When buying canned fish, such as salmon, the housewife (for many dishes) will buy the cheaper grades. The red or Chinook salmon is considered the best, then the pink or club salmon, all good but the price varies—as well as the flavor. Salmon steaks are always the choicest and most expensive, though there is very little waste.

Certain ideas in regard to the eating of fish with ice cream or milk dishes, have gained wide circulation. When such combinations have been found to disagree they should be avoided, but the average person may indulge in lobster and eat ice cream with no ill effects.

Next to salmon and tuna comes the sardine in popularity. The true sardine is not found in American waters. Millions of cans are imported from Spain, Portugal and Scandinavian countries. The small fish caught off the shores of Maine are known as American sardines; they are good and comparatively cheap.

An old fisherman says if you have fish that are very full of fine bones, put the cleaned fish through a meat grinder and make it into small cakes. This sounds reasonable, if there is not too much bone meal.

Cherry Cake.—Cream three tablespoonfuls of shortening with one-half cupful of sugar, add an egg well beaten and two-thirds of a cupful of milk alternately with two cupfuls of pastry flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Mix and spread evenly in a long sheet in a baking pan. Over the top place a quart of pitted cherries, sprinkle lightly with a teaspoonful of cinnamon and one-half cupful of sugar. Dried cherries, soaked or canned cherries, soaked or canned cherries drained may be used when the fresh ones are out of season.

Nut Bread.—Beat two eggs until light; add one-half cupful of sugar, one teaspoonful of salt, two cupfuls of sweet milk; add a little at a time with four cupfuls of flour and four teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Beat well, add one cupful of nut meats and a tablespoonful of melted butter. Put into the small bread pans and let stand one-half hour, then bake a half hour in a moderate oven. This makes fine bread to serve for sandwiches. Make it the day before it will be used, as it cuts better.

Stuffing for Small Fish.—Fry one minced onion with two ounces of salt pork cut into dice and a large tomato, peeled and chopped. Add two tablespoonfuls of butter, one cupful of bread crumbs, a teaspoonful of salt and a few dashes of cayenne, one tablespoonful of parsley and enough hot water to moisten the crumbs. Mix well, stuff and tie the fish. If lacking in fat, lay thin slices of pork over the fish while baking.

The richer the doughnut mixture the more apt it is to absorb fat in frying.

Cool Drinks and Ices.

For this and next summer prepare a little shrub. It may be made from various fruits but raspberry is especially delightful.

Raspberry Shrub. — Take twice as much per measure of fresh raspberries as vinegar. Put over the best in a kettle and cook until the fruit is mushy. Strain through a muslin cloth and to each quart of the juice allow one pound of sugar. Bring to the boiling point and seal in sterilized bottles When serving allow two tablespoonfuls to a glass of iced water. If the strong cider vinegar is used in this recipe, reduce it by adding water, using the same measure diluted.

Ginger Special.—Put two tablespoonfuls of grape juice into sherbet glass and pour over it enough ginger ale to fill the glass. Serve at once.

Fruited Mint.—Make a sirup of two cupfuls of sugar and one-half cupful of water; do not stir. Boil until it spins a thread, add the strained juice of one orange and six lemons. Pour one cupful of boiling water over pulp and skins of the fruit. Set over the heat and let it come to the boiling point. Strain and add the first mixture. Cool. Add one cupful of red raspberries and one and one-half quarts of ice water. Serve with sprig of mint.

For a refreshing lunch for a chance caller, there is nothing more cooling than a glass of ginger ale with a ginger snap to accompany it.

Lesson for July 19

THE GOSPEL IN LYSTRA

LESSON TEXT—Acts 14:1-28.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."—Matt. 5:10.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Paul Heals a Lame Man.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Paul Stoned at Lystra.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Going Forward in the Face of Difficulties.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Tribulations and Triumphs of Missionaries.

I. Paul and Barnabas Preaching at Iconium (vv. 1-7).

Their experience here was similar to that at Antioch. They entered the Jewish synagogue and preached, causing a multitude of Jews and Gentiles to believe. The unbelieving Jews stirred up the Gentiles to the most bitter opposition.

1. Their Manner of Preaching (v. 1).

This is suggested by the little word "so" in verse one. They so spake that a great multitude believed. They were true preachers. Only that which brings conviction of sin and induces decisions for Christ can be truly called preaching in the Biblical sense. It is not enough to merely bring the truth to the people. It must be brought in such a way that men and women will decide for Christ. This is also true of the Sunday school teacher.

2. Their Attitude Towards Opposition (v. 3).

This is suggested by the word "therefore." Long time therefore they tarried. The opposition did not prevent their preaching, but incited them to continue preaching.

3. The Lord Accompanied Their Preaching With Miracles (v. 3).

Since the opposition was so fierce, the Lord granted special help which was needed.

4. The Effect of Their Preaching (v. 4).

The multitude of the city was divided. Where men faithfully preach the gospel, there will be division.

5. Paul and Barnabas Assaulted (vv. 5-7).

The Jews and the Gentiles united in this assault. Being apprised of their effort, they fled to Lystra and Derbe.

II. An Attempt to Worship Paul and Barnabas as Gods (vv. 8-18).

1. The Occasion (vv. 8-10).

It was the healing of the lame man. God's gracious power shown in healing this lame man occasioned a new difficulty. That which ought to have been a help was turned into a hindrance. This was a notable miracle. The man was a confirmed cripple. He had never walked. On hearing Paul preach, faith was born in his heart (Rom. 10:17). When Paul perceived that he trusted Christ, he called with a loud voice that all could hear for the man to stand upright. The cure was instantaneous for he leaped up and walked (v. 10).

2. The Method (vv. 11-13).

Barnabas they called Jupiter and Paul, Mercurius, because he was the chief speaker. The priest of Jupiter brought oxen and garlands ready to offer sacrifice unto these men (v. 13).

3. Their Efforts Frustrated (vv. 14-18).

This foolish act was happily averted by the tact of the apostles.

(1) They denied that they were divine beings, and declared that to worship beings with like passions to themselves was criminal.

(2) They directed the people to turn away from these vain things unto the living God who made heaven and earth, and has left witness of Himself in that He has always done good, giving rain and fruitful seasons, and filling their hearts with gladness.

III. The Stoning of Paul (vv. 19-22).

Wicked Jews from Antioch and Iconium pursued Paul with relentless hate to this place where they stirred up the very people who were willing to worship them a little while before. This shows that satanic worship can soon be turned into satanic hate. This hatred took form in stoning Paul and dragging him out of the city for dead. God raised him up, and with undaunted courage, he pressed on with his missionary duties, bearing the good tidings to the lost.

IV. The Organization of Churches in the Field (vv. 23-28).

Evangelization with Paul did not mean a hasty and superficial preaching of the gospel, but the establishment of a permanent work. Elders were appointed in every church. The work of the missionary is not done until self-governing and self-propagating churches are established on the field

Leverhulme Built Up Big Industry

The passing of Lord Leverhulme, the great soap magnate, has focused widespread attention on the tremendous daily output of that commodity from the works he founded at Port Sunlight.

In 1886, when the firm's first boiling of soap was made at the original factory at Warrington, the output was 20 tons a week. Now it is over 4,000 tons a week, necessitating the employment of 10,000 workers and the use of 10,000,000 packing cases a year. The latter require the consumption of 20,000,000 tons of wood.

Port Sunlight was founded in 1888 the site having been selected by Lord Leverhulme himself in his search for suitable riverside factory premises. In 16 years the business had grown so large that the site of the factories was extended to 800 acres. The trains employed annually in carrying goods from the factories would, if placed end to end, reach from Liverpool to London!—Tit-Bits.

Old Theory Shattered

Prof. Franz Wutz of Germany has collected what he calls newly found facts about the Hebrew Bible. He has with his claims shattered the old theory that the Greek-Alexandrian translation of the Old Testament known as the Septuagints, is derived from original Hebrew text. He says the Septuagints is largely a reproduction of Hebrew words written with Greek letters and that as early as 200 B. C. Jewish scholars utilized Greek-Hebrew texts for their translations into Greek. His claim opens up an entirely new vista on old biblical literature.

Gold Tooth Little Aid as Clew to Her Barber

Mrs. X——, a young and comely North side matron, is the possessor of a good-looking shingle which is the envy of some of her friends and she has had frequent inquiries as to the identity of her barber. She directed inquiries to a North side shop, and while she was unable to give the name of the barber who had accomplished such wonders with her hair, she identified him by saying that he had a gold tooth in front.

Two of the women thus informed chanced to arrive at the shop about the same time, and each identified a barber by a gold tooth in front, and each recognized the other after getting in the chair. They compared notes later and found that neither of them had been under the ministrations of Mrs. X——'s barber. Further investigation showed that each of the three barbers in the shop wore a gold tooth in front.—Indianapolis News.

That parent-teacher associations are valued by public-school officials becomes every year more apparent. An official inquiry conducted in Massachusetts showed that 112 superintendents consider parent-teacher associations a vital factor in promoting closer relations between the home and the school, and 82 superintendents rely upon these associations for support of programs for educational improvements.

POULTRY

FORCED PULLETS ARE BEST EGG PRODUCERS

James E. Rice of the Cornell university experiment station issued a bulletin relative to the possibilities of feeding early hatched pullets during the summer by retarded or forced feeding.

By retarding is meant the idea that feeding is necessary during the late summer to check the early tendency of laying, with the hope of getting a larger egg yield in the early winter.

By forced feeding is meant the giving of a rich stimulating mash to induce egg production.

Concerning the results of his work Mr. Rice has certain findings drawn from data which are submitted below:

1. Forced pullets made a better profit than retarded pullets.
2. Forced pullets ate less food per hen at less cost per hen than retarded pullets.
3. Forced pullets produced more eggs of a larger size, at less cost per dozen than retarded pullets.
4. Forced pullets produced more eggs during early winter than retarded pullets.
5. Forced pullets have better hatching results of eggs than retarded pullets.
6. Forced pullets made a better percentage of gain in weight than retarded pullets.
7. Forced pullets showed less broodiness than retarded pullets.
8. Forced pullets had less mortality than retarded pullets.
9. Forced pullets showed better vigor than retarded pullets.
10. Forced pullets showed the first mature molt earlier than retarded pullets.
11. Retarded pullets gave better fertility of eggs than forced pullets.
12. Hopper-fed dry mash gave better results in gain of weight, production of eggs, gain in weight of eggs, hatching power of eggs, days lost in molting, mortality, health and profit per hen, than wet mash.
13. Wet mash and grain-fed pullets consumed slightly less food at less cost, and produced eggs at slightly less cost per dozen than dry mash and grain-fed pullets.
14. Wet mash and grain-fed pullets produced slightly larger eggs of slightly better fertility, and showed less broodiness than dry mash and grain-fed pullets.
15. Dry mash and grain-fed pullets laid eggs of good size at an earlier period than wet mash and grain-fed pullets.
16. Hopper-fed pullets ate more than hand-fed pullets.
17. Pullets having whole grain ate more grit and shell than those having a proportion of ground grain.
16. Pullets fed on grain were more inclined to develop bad habits than those having a mash.
10. Earliest producers did not give as many eggs in early winter.
20. Early layers gained as rapidly in weight as those beginning later to lay.
21. Prolificacy made by slight difference in weight of hen and weight of egg.
22. The most prolific pullets did not always lay earliest.

Give Pullets Best Feed and Careful Attention

"The success of the poultryman is measured very largely by the quality of the pullets with which he replenishes his flock," says Martin Decker, poultry research specialist at the New Jersey agricultural experiment station.

"Great care should be exercised to keep the pullets growing uniformly from hatching to maturity, as a check or setback will cause them to mature too late for winter laying. Development is best promoted by free range with an abundance of shade and green food.

"We feed grain and keep mash before the growing stock continually. The mash is composed of nearly the same combination as our laying mash, but the pullets tend to begin laying too early if allowed too much of it. We must figure on having the pullets come into production about the middle of October, or before cold weather sets in.

"The pullets should be transferred to winter quarters, gradually—a few at a time. Do not put on the lights until they have become accustomed to their new surroundings. Then feed the laying flock the following rations:

Mash

100 lbs. wheat bran
100 lbs. wheat middlings
100 lbs. cornmeal
100 lbs. ground oats
100 lbs. meat scrap

Grain

100 lbs. wheat
100 lbs. cracked corn
100 lbs. oats.

Hens Pasture Feeders

Hens are pasture feeders, though seldom considered such on many farms, in that they are fenced away from good pasture. J. G. Halpin of the poultry department of the University of Wisconsin says that a heavy-laying hen will not last long unless the bowels are kept in a laxative condition. Most poultry keepers find green stuff more practical than drugs. Green feed adds the necessary bulk to the ration and apparently assists in the assimilation of minerals.

It Was Time to Act

By FRANCES E. GALE

(©, 1925, Western Newspaper Union.)

"DON'T you see what I mean, Hugh?"

"You mean that you don't care enough for me to take a chance on my succeeding—to help me succeed."

"That's not fair. We were not considering the question of my 'caring.' That was settled long ago."

They had left the towering office building where both were employed and turned into quiet streets.

"I know how it looks to you, Hugh—calculating and unwomanly, and all that—but I've been independent for ten years, I started supporting myself at eighteen, and I've got to see my way to something better, bigger, before I give it up."

Hugh Douglass walked on in silence for some moments. Then:

"I'm not going to beg you to do what you feel wouldn't be for your happiness, Marjory, but this I will say: It may be a good while before I can establish myself independently. I firmly believe that with you beside me I could do it sooner than without you, but that's not the point. I'm not asking you to work for me; I'm asking you to work with me, to be my partner in the real business of both our lives. If that business, the real, the important one, flourished, the money-making would, I believe, be sure to flourish, too. But I'll not urge you any more. I wouldn't have kept it up so long if I hadn't honestly believed it would be best for us both, and if you hadn't told me that there was never anyone you liked better. And I wonder, sometimes, if you're not placing too high a value on the sort of 'independence' you talk of. No, I won't go in today."

Marjory paused upon her boarding house doorstep.

"Hugh, you are splendid. I almost wish I were braver—or more foolhardy—than I am."

* * * * * * *

Marjory Graham, at her desk, arranged the tools of her trade, mapped out the day's work of an assistant, and finally rose in answer to the bell summoning her to her chief's office. There continuously for an hour her pencil flew with amazing speed, and later her fingers flew over the keys of her machine. Upon her return from lunch she learned that a directors' meeting was to be held, and that she would be required to jot down the proceedings.

Half a dozen men sat about a table, and Marjory, at a desk aside, took notes. After an hour's hard discussion regarding the advisability of opening a branch house under the management of a new man Marjory was instructed to transcribe her notes. Returning with her completed work she found the atmosphere charged with the electricity of clashing wills. As she entered one of the disputants was saying:

"My experience has invariably been that it is men that count, not capital, nor backing, nor even opportunity. It's the man-stuff, the human element, that makes the success or failure of any enterprise. We've got hold of the right man now and we may not find him again in a lifetime. The secret of success is knowing the time to act."

Marjory presented her typewritten sheets, hoping her task to be done, but awaiting further instructions. The appointments of the room were luxurious, and directly opposite her a long panel mirror reflected her own figure and the group about the table. As she gazed into it, suddenly the glass seemed to reflect another group—a woman, seated at the head of her table, surrounded by the loving subjects of her home domain, a full partner in the business for which every other business exists—the creation and development of a home.

Obedient to a word of dismissal she returned to her own office, but turned the revolving chair away from her machine and sat with hands clasped upon her lap.

What was it that man had said? "It's the man-stuff, the human element, that makes the success or failure of any enterprise." And those other words, spoken two days before: "I'm not asking you to work for me. I'm asking you to work with me—to be my partner in the real business of our lives."

In her neat, rapid hand she wrote a dozen words, and, calling the office boy, instructed him to give the envelope to Mr. Douglass in another part of the building.

Near the entrance to the park that evening she was joined by Hugh, but as they walked through the summer twilight, passing loitering couples frankly love-making, Marjory fell silent, searching for the words she had come out to say. It was with a tremor in her voice that she asked as they turned into a deserted by-path and paused beside a blossom-brimming brake:

"Do you still want to enter into that partnership we were talking about, Hugh?"

The young man started and seized her hand, bending his head to look into her eyes in the half darkness.

"For life, Marjory?" he asked.

"For life, Hugh," she answered, and, trusting in the friendly shadows, lifted her lips to his.

THIS SOUNDS REASONABLE

In discussing the subject of Compulsory Automobile Liability Insurance, Frederick H. Stinchfield, of the Minneapolis Bar says:—

"Carelessness is a universal, unending and constant quanity with every human being. Some people are more frequently negligent than others, but, negligence is, nevertheless, a characteristic of a certainty, at some time or other for everybody. When by carelessness you are hurt, oryour auto is injured, and another person guilty of that carelessness becomes indebted to you for the damage done, you have against him a cause of action andonly that He is your debtor. It, by law, he is compelled to carry insurance, you are receiving from the governmen direct statutory aid in the collection of your debt. Is that your theory of government? In comparatively few of the other affairs of your life do you ask or suffer governmental aid,

"I have never yet heard it suggested that every citizen who might contract smallpox or influenza or a cold, diphtheria or scarlet fever, or the thousand and one other ailments which are infectious, should give a bond or insure himself so that if he communicates that disease to others he will pay damages. I find no difference in principle. The communication of any disease is the result of carelessness.

"Why should not parents be requrired to give bond or an insurance policy to the children who shall be born, guaranteeing to them a reasonable opportunity for education, health, recreation, comfort and preparation for life? The children are not even consulted with reference to their being brought into the world. They are wholly innocent parties. The driver on the highway at least goes there voluntarily and is injured by the negligent of others. If you, the driver of an automobile, are protected from the damage done you by the carelessness of others, Heaven knows that children, who have no choice in the matter, are entitled to protection against unhappiness and lack of opportunity.

"You, unfortunately, are obliged to consult physicians and attorneys frequently during the year. They have been known to be careless. Why not say that every physician and attorney should give insurance against negligence in the conduct of the business of their patients and clients?

"It seems to me that the subject needs no further consideration. It is hard for me to understand how there could have been even any suggestion that such statute be placed on the books. To me it is the utmost absurdity: to me the proposers show a woeful lack of knowledge of the ordinary affairs of life and the ordinary ways in which government works, and the ordinary rules of conduct of men in their relationships with each other."

"Thousands in use and the demand increasing daily."—Watch for further particulars.

Watch for Dying Pines During the Summer

Timberland owners in the South are urged by the United States Department of Agriculture to keep a close watch this summer on their pine lands to note any clumps of pines dying from the attacks of the southern pine beetle. Recent studies made by the Bureau of Entomology indicate outbreaks of this insect occur during periods of abnormally low rainfall. The Weather Bureau reports that the rainfall for the first five months of 1925 has been much below normal in the southeastern sections of the United States, the deficiency in rainfall at some stations being as much as 15 inches.

All timberland owners in this region are familiar with the destructive work of the pine beetle. If the present dry spell should continue it is likely, says the department, that serious losses will occur this summer.

Pine owners are advised to make an examination of timberland once a month or oftener for clumps of dying trees indicated by fading or brown foliage. Such trees should promptly be worked up into lumber, or the logs placed in water until more opportune time for sawing. Reports of the presence of the beetle should be sent immediately to R. A. St. George, Bureau of Entomology Field station, P. O. Box 1158, Ashville, N. C.

Church people these days who claim afar off to be following Christ don't seem to be following Him as close as did some the leading church people at church of his discipes. When you go to church and occupied the front seats in the "amen" corner, like the beloved disciple John of old, but it seems they are following Him but it seems they are following Him church members on, or near the back of the church on all occasions.

To see the leaders take the back seats at church don't seem to be a very strong drawing card for the younger people to follow in church service and church work, and has tendency to discourage them from attending church, except to have a place to go.

Fifty years ago all the vacant seats were the back seats; today the vacant seats are in front.

It would be a great help to the preacher today if the front seats were filled and if any were vacant, let be the back seats.

A SAD CHANGE

The young men used to carry their best girl to church on Sunday night, but now they take them out auto riding. I don't know whether it is their best girl or not, but seems that their best girl would much prefer going to church on Sunday night instead of out car riding at night.

From the daily papers it seems that a great number of girls out auto riding at night, met a great many accidents of one kind or another that would be avoided if they would attend church.

Fathers and mothers used to know where their girls were at night, but now when they are out riding they don't know where they are or what company they are keeping, neither do they know, whose homes they visit.

We would be glad to see all the churches filled on Sunday nights, and that would make better boys and girls. And fathers and mothers would be much happier.

A LIFE AND MONEY SAVER

Electricity and the telephone have been the two greatest labor severs and conveniences ever given to mankind.

But now comes the electric refrigerator for the small home and farm.

It promises to be the savior of mankind from many ills and loses, with which he has been afflicted because of food either spoiled or improperly cared for previous to eating.

The electric refrigerator adds the final touch to modern housekeeping which makes food storage practical and safe, and as satisfactory as the gas or electric range.

Electric refrigeration will revolutionize the question o ffood and produce storage on the farm.

Watch Your Diet, Says Prima Donna

Cyrena Van Gordon.

Cyrena Van Gordon, prima donna of the Chicago Opera company, believes in the flapper and her privileges. She believes in the practice of this much-discussed person in wearing no corsets, in wearing short skirts, going in for athletics and out-door life and in thoroughly appreciating the theories and practices of her mother and grandmother. Miss Van Gordon, who is, in private life, Mrs. S. Bogart Munns, the wife of Doctor S. B. Munns, says that all of these things are woman's right and are necessary if a woman is anxious to keep her youth and beauty. But exercise is not the only thing that is necessary for the woman who is desirous of being attractive. She must watch her diet and be careful not to eat anything that will, in any way, be fattening.

There are certain dishes to which Miss Van Gordon is partial and to which she gives the credit for the retention of her beauty. These dishes she prefers to prepare herself and, when on tour with the Chicago Opera company, she carries a small electric stove in order that she will not be deprived of the food she deems necessary. These dishes are easily prepared. Miss Van Gordon uses for Celery and Cheese Casserole.

1 cup cheese
2 cups chopped celery
½ cup evaporated milk
½ cup water
2 tbsp. flour
1 tbsp. butter
1 cup cooked spaghetti
½ cup buttered bread crumbs
½ tsp. salt

She makes white sauce of milk, water, butter, flour, and salt, and mixes it with all ingredients except crumbs. She then places it in an oiled baking dish and covers with crumbs, baking in a moderate oven until brown.

Chicken a la King.

2 cups cold chicken, diced
2 tbsp. butter
2 tbsp. flour
½ green pepper, shredded
½ pimento, shredded
1 cup evaporated milk
¼ lb. mushrooms
1 cup chicken broth
1 egg yolk
Salt and pepper

Cook the peppers (also mushrooms, if they are used) in the butter for 15 minutes, keeping them covered while cooking slowly. Add the flour and seasonings, also the milk and broth. Stir in a smooth sauce. Put chicken in sauce to heat, and just before serving, stir in beaten egg yolk. Cook in double boiler to prevent curdling.

Farms Show Improved Financial Returns in 1924

An average cash balance of $1, 024, the margin of cash receipts over cash expense, was returned to owner-operators in 1924 on 15, 103 farms surveyed by the United States Department of Agriculture. In addition to this margin, the farms increased inventories of crops, livestock, machinery and supplie $181, making an average return of $1, 205 for the use of $17, 260 of capital and the labor of the farmer and his family. These farms also produced food and fuel consumed on the farm estimated to be worth $266 on the average.

This is a somewhat better showing than in 1923 when a similar survey on 16, 183 owner-operated farms average a cash balance of $890, increased inventory of $130, and produced food and fuel worth $265 on capitel amounting to $17, 490.

The balance of $1, 024 in 1924 was all the cash the average of these farms made available to the owner to pay his living expenses, take care of debts and make improvements. Interest paid on debts during the year 1924 average $230 and the reported outlay for improvements averageed $133.

Sales of crops in 1924 on the average totaled $1, 012, sales of livestock or livestock products were $1, 350, and miscellaneous receipts were $70.

Cash expenses totaled $1,410, which included hired labor worth $384 for the year, livestock $222, feed $248, fertilizer $66, seed $44, taxes $160, machinery $103, and miscellaneous $151.

The average size of these farms was 303 acres, and the reported value of land and buildings was $14, 323, the size and value of the farms being larger than the average reported in the 1920 census. The value of crops, livestock, machinery and supplies on hand at the beginnng of the year was $2, 937. The acreage of the farms reporting in 1923 was 300 acres and the average capital $17. 490

The department points out that the figures apply only to the farms reporting and to the farm business in each year. Many farmers have property bought by current receipts. It is probable, sides the farms they work, or supple-however, that the figures give a fairly ment their farm returns with outside accurate picture of the state of the work, and many drew on savings or business of owner-operators in the borrowed to meet expenses not cover- past years covered by the surveys.

Immaculately Clean

Good food products and good cooking are by no means the only requisites of a satisfactory meal. Spotless linen crystal-clear glassware and polished silver—these, together with a clean and neatly-dressed waiter, provide the finishing touch which has distinguished L. & N. dining car service.

This immaculate cleanliness prevails in the kitchens, storage bins and refrigerator as well—and the public is invited to inspect these out-of-view accommodations on any L. & N. diner.

No trip can be enjoyable without good dining car service—no dining service in the finest hotels or restaurants surpasses that afforded patrons of this railroad.

She went to the little wash room at the rear, felt better immediately she had washed vigorously, combed her hair. She returned to the wagon to find a panic-stricken Dirk sure of nothing but that he had been deserted by his mother. Fifteen minutes later the two were seated at a table on which was spread what Chris Spanknoebel considered an adequate breakfast. A heartening enough beginning for the day, and a deceptive.

The Haymarket buyers did not want to purchase its vegetables from Selina DeJong. It wasn't used to buying of women, but to selling to them.

Selina had taken the covers off her vegetables. They were revealed crisp, fresh, colorful. But Selina knew they must be sold now, quickly. When the leaves began to wilt, when the edges of the cauliflower heads curled ever so slightly, turned brown and limp, their value decreased by half, even though the heads themselves remained white and firm.

Down the street came the buyers—little black-eyed swarthy men; plump, short-sleeved, greasy men; shrewd, tobacco-chewing men in overalls. Stolid red Dutch faces, sunburned. Lean, dark foreign faces. Shouting, clatter, turmoil.

The day broke warm. The sun rose red. It would be a humid September day such as frequently came in the autumn to this lake region. Garden stuff would have to move quickly this morning. Afternoon would find it worthless.

The peddlers looked at her bunched bouquets, glanced at her, passed her by. It was not unkindness that prompted them, but a certain shyness, a fear of the unaccustomed. Her wares were tempting but they passed her by with the instinct that the ignorant have against that which is unusual.

By nine o'clock trading began to fall off. In a panic Selina realized that the sales she had made amounted to little more than two dollars. If she stayed there until noon she might double that, but no more. In desperation she harnessed the horses, threaded her way out of the swarming street, and made for South Water street farther east. Here were the commission houses. She knew that Pervus had sometimes left his entire load with an established dealer here, to be sold on commission. She remembered the name—Talcott—though she did not know the exact location.

The boy had been almost incredibly patient and good. At the wagon he had stood sturdily next his mother, had busied himself vastly assisting her in her few pitiful sales; had plucked wilted leaves, brought forward the freshest and crispest vegetables. But now she saw that he was drooping a little as were her wares, with the heat and the absence from accustomed soil. "Where we going now, mom?"

"To another street, Sobig—"

"Dirk!"

"—Dirk, where there's a man who'll buy all our stuff at once—maybe. Won't that be fine! Then we'll go home. You help mother find his name over the store. Talcott—T-a-l-c-o-double t."

William Talcott had known Pervus, and Pervus' father before him, and had adjudged them honest, admirable men. But of their garden truck he had small opinion.

In his doorway, he eyed the spare little figure that appeared before him all in rusty black, with its strained anxious face, its great deep-sunk eyes.

"DeJong, eh? Sorry to hear about your loss, ma'am. Pervus was a fine lad. No great shakes at truck farming, though. His widow, h'm? Him." Here, he suw, was no dull-witted farm woman; no stolid Dutch woman truckster. He went out to her wagon, tweaked the boy's brown cheek. "Wa-al now, Mis' DeJong, you got a right smart lot of garden stuff here and it looks pretty good. Yessir, pretty good. But you're too late. Ten, pret' near."

"Oh, no!" cried Selina. "Oh, no! Not too late!" And at the agony in her voice he looked at her sharply.

"Tell you what, mebbe I can move half of 'em along for you. But stuff don't keep this weather. Turns wilty and my trade won't touch it. . . . First trip in?"

She wiped her face that was damp and yet cold to the touch. "First—trip in." Suddenly she was finding it absurdly hard to breathe.

He called from the sidewalk to the men within: "George! Ben! Hustle this stuff in. Half of it. The best. Send you check tomorrow, Mis' DeJong."

One hand on the seat she prepared to climb up again—did step to the hub. You saw her shabby, absurd side boots that were so much too big for the slim little feet. "If you're just buying my stuff because you're sorry for me—" The Peake pride.

"Don't do business that way. Can't afford to, ma'am. My da'ter she's studying to be a singer. In Italy now, Caroline is, and costs like all get-out. Takes all the money I can scrape together, just about."

There was a little color in Selina's face now. "Italy! Oh, Mr. Talcott!" You'd have thought she had seen it, from her face. She began to thank him, gravely.

"Now, that's all right, Mis' DeJong. I notice your stuff's bunched kind of extry, and all of a size. Fixin' to do that way right along?"

"Yes. I thought—they looked prettier that way—of course vegetables aren't supposed to look pretty, I expect—" she stammered, stopped.

"You fix 'em pretty like that and bring 'em in to me first thing, or send 'em. My trade, they like their stuff kind of special. Yessir."

As Selina gathered up the reins he stood again in his doorway, cool, remote, unlighted cigar in his mouth, while hand-trucks rattled past him, barrels and boxes thumped to the sidewalk in front of him, wheels and hoofs and shouts made a great clamor all about him.

"We going home now?" demanded Dirk. "We going home now? I'm hungry."

"Yes, lamb." Two dollars in her pocket. All yesterday's grim toil, and all today's, and months of labor behind those two days. Two dollars in the pocket of her black calico petticoat. "We'll get something to eat when we drive out a ways. Some milk and bread and cheese."

The sun was very hot. She took the boy's hat off, passed her tender work-calloused hand over the damp hair that clung to his forehead.

She made up her mind to drive east and then south. Pervus had sometimes achieved a late sale to outlying grocers. Jan's face if she came home with half the load still on the wagon! And what of the unpaid bills? She had, perhaps, thirty dollars, all told. She owed four hundred. More than that.

Fear shook her. She told herself she was tired, nervous. That terrible week. And now this. The heat. Soon they'd be home, she and Dirk. The comfort of it, the peace of it. Safe, desirable, suddenly dear. No work for a woman, this! Well, perhaps they were right.

Down Wabash avenue, with the L trains thundering overhead and her horses, frightened and uneasy with the unaccustomed roar and clangor of traffic. It was terribly hot.

As She Gathered Up the Reins He Stood in His Doorway, Cool, Remote.

The boy's eyes popped with excitement and bewilderment.

"Pretty soon," Selina said. The muscles showed white beneath the skin of her jaw. "Pretty soon. Prairie avenue. Great big houses and lawns, all quiet." She even managed a smile. "I like it better home."

Prairie avenue at last, turning in at Sixteenth street. It was like calm after a storm. Selina felt battered, spent.

Then another thought came to her. Her vegetables, canvas covered, were fresher than those in the near-by markets. Why not try to sell some of them here, in these big houses? In an hour she might earn a few dollars this way at retail prices slightly less than those asked by the grocers of the neighborhood.

Agilely she stepped down the wheel, gave the reins to Dirk. She filled a large market basket with the finest and freshest of her stock and with this on her arm looked up a moment at the house in front of which she had stopped. The kitchen entrance, she knew, was by way of the alley at the back, but this she would not take. Across the sidewalk, down a little flight of stone steps, into the vestibule under the porch. She looked at the bell—a brass knob. "Pull it!" said the desperate Selina. "I can't! I can't!" cried all the prim dim Vermont Peakes, in chorus. "All right. Starve to death and let them take the farm and Dirk, then."

At that she pulled the knob hard. Jangle went the bell in the hall. Again. Again.

Footsteps up the hall. The door opened to disclose a large woman, high cheek-boned, in a work apron; a cook, apparently.

"Good morning," said Selina. "Would you like some fresh country vegetables?"

"No." She half shut the door, opening it again to ask, "Got any fresh eggs or butter?" At Selina's negative she closed the door, bolted it. Well, that was all right. Nothing so terrible about that, Selina told herself. Simply hadn't wanted any vegetables. The next house, and the next, and the next. Up one side of the street, and down the other. Four times she refilled her basket. At one house she sold a quarter's worth. Fifteen at another. Twenty cents here. Almost fifty there.

Twenty-first street—Twenty-fifth—Twenty-eighth. She had over four dollars in her purse. Dirk was weary now and hungry to the point of tears "The last house," Selina promised him. "the very last one. After this one we'll go home."

The last house. She had almost five dollars, earned in the last hour. "Just five minutes," she said to Dirk, trying to make her tone bright, her voice gay. Her arms full of vegetables which she was about to place in the basket at her feet she heard at her elbow:

"Now, then, where's your license?"

She turned. A policeman at her side. "License?"

"Yeh, you heard me. License. Where's your peddler's license? You got one, I s'pose."

"Why, no. No." She stared at him, still.

"Well, say, where d'ye think you are, peddlin' without a license! A good mind to run you in. Get along out of here, you and the kid. Leave me ketch you around here again!"

"What's the trouble, officer?" said a woman's voice. A smart open carriage of the type known as a victoria, with two chestnut horses whose harness shone with metal. "What's the trouble, Reilly?" The woman stepped out of the victoria.

"Woman peddling without a license, Mrs. Arnold. You got to watch 'em like a hawk. . . . Get along wid you, then." He put a hand on Selina's shoulder and gave her a gentle push.

There shook Selina from head to foot [illegible] a storm of outrage [illegible] before her eyes. The rage of a fastidious woman who had had an alien male hand put upon her. Her face was white. Her eyes glowed black, enormous. She seemed tall, majestic even.

"Take your hand off me!" Her speech was clipped, vibrant. "How dare you touch me! How dare you! Take your hand!—" The blazing eyes in the white mask. He took his hand from her shoulder. The red surged into her face. A tanned weather-beaten toil-worn woman, her abundant hair skewered into a knob and held by a long gray-black hairpin, her full skirt grimed with the mud of the wagon wheel, a pair of old side boots on her slim feet, a grotesquely battered old felt hat (her husband's) on her head, her arms full of ears of sweet corn, and carrots, and radishes and bunches of beets; a woman with bad teeth, flat breasts—even then Julie had known her by her eyes. And she had stared and then run to her in her silk dress and her plumed hat, crying, "Oh, Selina! My dear! My dear!" with a sob of horror and pity. "My dear!" And had taken Selina, carrots, beets, corn, and radishes in her arms. The vegetables lay scattered all about them on the sidewalk in front of Julie Hempel Arnold's great stone house on Prairie avenue. But strangely enough it had been Selina who had done the comforting, patting Julie's plump silken shoulder and saying, over and over, soothingly, as to a child, "There, there! It's all right, Julie. It's all right. Don't cry. What's there to cry for! Sh-sh! It's all right."

Julie lifted her head in its modish black plumed hat, wiped her eyes, blew her nose. "Get along with you, do," she said to Reilly, the policeman, using his very words to Selina. "I'm going to report you to Mr. Arnold, see if I don't. And you know what that means."

"Well, now, Mrs. Arnold, ma'am, I was only doing my duty. How cud I know the lady was a friend of yours, Sure, I—" He surveyed Selina, cart, jaded horses, wilted vegetables.

"And why not?" demanded Julie with superb unreasonableness. "Why not, I'd like to know. Do get along with you."

He got along, a defeated officer of the law, and a bitter. And now it was Julie who surveyed Selina, cart, Dirk, jaded horses, wilted left-over vegetables. "Selina, whatever in the world! What are you doing with—" She caught sight of Selina's absurd boots then and she began to cry again. At that Selina's overwrought nerves snapped and she began to laugh, hysterically. It frightened Julie, that laughter. "Selina, don't! Come in the house with me. What are you laughing at! Selina!"

With shaking finger Selina was pointing at the vegetables that lay tumbled at her feet. "Do you see that cabbage, Julie? Do you remember how I used to despise Mrs. Tebbitt's because she used to have boiled cabbage on Monday nights?"

"That's nothing to laugh at, is it? Stop laughing this minute, Selina Peake!"

"I'll stop. I've stopped now. I was just laughing at my ignorance. Sweat and blood and health and youth go into every cabbage. Did you know that, Julie? One doesn't despise them as food, knowing that. . . . Come, climb down, Dirk. Here's a lady mother used to know—oh, years and years ago, when she was a girl. Thousands of years ago."

Chapter IX

The best thing for Dirk. The best thing for Dirk. It was the phrase that repeated itself over and over in Selina's speech during the days that followed. In this period of bewilderment and fatigue Julie had attempted to take charge of Selina much as she had done a dozen years before at the time of Simeon Peake's dramatic death. And now, as then, she pressed into service her wonder-working father and bounden slave, August Hempel.

"Fa'll be out tomorrow and I'll probably come with him. I've got a committee meeting, but I can easily—"

"You said—will you say your father would be out tomorrow! Out where?"

"To your place. Farm."

"But why should he? It's a little twenty-five-acre truck farm, and half of it under water a good deal of the time."

"Fa'll find a use for it, never fear. He won't say much, but he'll think of things. And then everything will be all right."

A species of ugly pride now possessed Selina. "I don't need help. Really I don't, Julie, dear. It's never been like today. Never before. We were getting on very well, Pervus and I. Then after Pervus' death so suddenly like that I was frightened. Terribly frightened. About Dirk. I wanted him to have everything. Beautiful things. I wanted his life to be beautiful. Life can be so ugly, Julie. You don't know. You don't know."

"Well, now, that's why I say. We'll be out tomorrow, pa and I. Dirk's going to have everything beautiful. We'll see to that."

It was then that Selina had said, "But that's just it. I want to do it myself, for him. I can. I want to give him all these things myself."

"But that's selfish."

"I don't mean to be. I just want to do the best thing for Dirk."

It was shortly after noon that High Prairie, hearing the unaccustomed chug of a motor, rushed to its windows or porches to behold Selina DeJong in her mashed black felt hat and Dirk waving his battered straw wildly, riding up the Halsted road toward the DeJong farm in a bright red automobile [illegible] Julie Hempel Arnold at the wheel. It had met on the way Otto DeJong team and the DeJong dog Pom, and the DeJong vegetable wagon there was absolutely no sign. High Prairie was rendered unfit for work throughout the next twenty-four hours.

In the twelve years' transition from butcher to packer Aug Hempel had taken on a certain authority and distinction. Now, at fifty-five, his hair was gray, relieving the too-ruddy color of his face. In the last few years he had grown very deaf in one ear, so that when you spoke to him he looked at you intently. This had given him a reputation for keenness and great character insight, when it was merely the protective trick of a man who does not want to confess that he is hard of hearing.

Selina's domain he surveyed with a keen and comprehensive eye.

"You want to sell?"

"No."

"That's good. Few years from now this land will be worth money." He had spent a bare fifteen minutes taking shrewd valuation of the property from fields to barn, from barn to house. "Well, what do you want to do, heh, Selina?"

They were seated in the cool and unexpectedly pleasing little parlor, with its old Dutch luster set gleaming softly in the cabinet, its three rows of books, its air of comfort and usage.

Selina clasped her hands tightly in her lap—those hands that, from much grubbing in the soil, had taken on something of the look of the gnarled things they tended. The nails were short, discolored, broken. The palms were rough, callouned. The whole story of the last twelve years of Selina's life was written in her two hands.

Discovered

A young man whose gallantry was in excess of his pecuniary means sought to remedy the defect and to save the money required for the purpose of expensive flowers by arranging with a gardener to let him have a bouquet from time to time in return for his cast-off clothes.

One day he received a bunch of roses which he at once dispatched to his lady love.

In sure anticipation of a friendly welcome he called at the girl's house the same evening and was not a little surprised at a frosty reception.

After a pause the girl remarked, frigidly: "You sent me a note today."

"A note! I? To be sure, I sent you flowers; but—"

"And this note was with the bouquet. Do you mean to deny it?"

And the young man read: "Don't forget the old trousers you promised me the other day."

Work and don't worry if you would be happy. Otherwise worry and don't work.

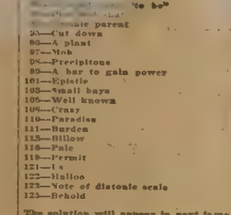
Solution of Last Week's Puzzle.



HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

Salt Useful to Kill Barberries

Common Crushed Rock Variety Seems to Be Ideal for Destroying Weed.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Crushed rock salt is the best chemical to use in killing the common barberry which spreads the black stem rust of cereals. Officials of the United States Department of Agriculture selected salt from more than 40 different chemicals as the most satisfactory for this purpose. The four prime requisites of a satisfactory chemical with which to kill barberries are cheapness, availability, effectiveness and a minimum of danger to adjacent plants and to grazing animals. In the final selection of chemicals for this purpose only three were found to be both cheap and effective. These are salt, sodium arsenite and kerosene.

Danger in Sodium Arsenite.

Sodium arsenite is very effective but it is extremely poisonous to live stock. Because of this danger it is not recommended for general use. Kerosene is cheap and effective but its action is very slow. Barberries treated with kerosene in the summer often are not dead until the beginning of the next summer. Another great disadvantage in the use of kerosene is the difficulty experienced in transporting it to the place of application.

Salt, preferably crushed rock salt or ice cream salt, seems to be ideal for the purpose as it is comparatively cheap and easily obtainable. It is very effective. Ten pounds will kill a bush having a diameter of 12 inches at the base. Salt ordinarily is not poisonous to live stock, but overdoses of it have proved fatal to some animals, especially hogs and poultry. Some precautions must be observed, therefore, in the application of salt to barberries, to prevent any possibility of harm to live stock. If salt is applied to bushes growing in pastures, the cattle and horses should be properly salted beforehand to insure they are not salt-hungry when they are turned into the pasture.

Not Always Favored.

In spite of the fact that salt is very satisfactory as a killer for barberries its use is not recommended in every instance. If the barberry to be killed is close to valuable plants or trees, it is advisable to dig it. Bushes or trees whose root systems intermingle with the root system of the barberry undoubtedly will be somewhat damaged by salt applied to the barberry.

The Japanese barberry does not spread stem rust and should not be destroyed.

Number of Times Alfalfa Should Be Cut for Hay

The number of times alfalfa should be cut for hay in northern latitudes has not been settled. Professor L. F. Graber of the Wisconsin College of Agriculture is a firm believer in cutting alfalfa twice. He holds that the two-cutting plan saves labor, that the alfalfa is less likely to winterkill, and that more favorable weather for haying can be depended upon. Further, when the two-cutting system is employed, hay making comes when there is no interference with corn cultivation or harvest.

Mr. Graber found that alfalfa which was cut in the bud stage three times a season yielded 1.9 tons per acre, that cut in the tenth-bloom stage three times a season yielded 2.7 tons per acre, and that cut only twice per year in the full bloom stage yielded 3.4 tons per acre.

When only two cuttings of alfalfa are made, the hay, while the yield is larger, is also much coarser. So far as we know, experiments have not been conducted to determine the relative feeding value of alfalfa hay cut two and three times during the season. It would be well if such experiments were made to determine the relative feeding value of hay cut by these two plans and the amount of waste. It is quite possible that by grinding alfalfa the coarser hay would serve nearly as well and that, owing to the larger yield, it would produce as much or more milk.

Motor Transport Brings Changes in Road Plans

Evidences are constantly growing more numerous of the rapid development of highway transportation and some expert observers are predicting the construction, in the near future, of broad trunk line highways for the exclusive use of trains of motor trucks, running on regular schedule time. The amount of freight carried over the Lincoln highway between New York and Philadelphia is so large in volume that on many days in the year passenger traffic is rendered actually uncomfortable.

This condition exists in other localities and it is interesting to note that Massachusetts is working on a plan to give information to motorists of secondary routes that may be used with greater ease and comfort than the more congested main thoroughfares. One of the heavily traveled routes in that state, which carries a large amount of merchandise between Boston and Providence, is the Providence turnpike and an alternative route has just been suggested, with good road surface and insuring passenger car tourists greater comfort. Another important factor in the problems of road transportation is the increasing use of the motor bus, which shows every indication of rapid development within the next few years.

Control of Melon Aphis by Spraying

Soft-Bodied, Greenish Lice Suck Juices From Plant.

The leaves of melon vines are occasionally found curled and knotted. A close examination will show the presence of a large number of soft-bodied, greenish lice. These lice feed by sucking the juices from the plant.

The young are born alive. A mature female usually gives birth to several young a day. In case of this aphid no true sexual forms or eggs are known. Reproduction from unfertilized females seems to take place throughout the year.

Control: Usually this aphid is kept under control to a large extent by parasites and predators. However, under favorable conditions the aphids may become sufficiently abundant to require an artificial remedy. The most satisfactory remedy known is a thorough spraying of the vines with nicotine sulphate, two tablespoonfuls to four gallons of water, with about one-half bar of good laundry soap added. The soap should be shaved and dissolved in a small portion of the water before being added. Nicotine sulphate dust is also an effective remedy. The dust may be prepared by thoroughly mixing 8 ounces of nicotine sulphate (40 per cent nicotine), with 12 pounds of air-slacked lime. If no duster is available for applying a cheese cloth may be used with fair results.—George S. Langford, Deputy State Entomologist, Colorado Agricultural College.

Soothing Cranky Binder Before Harvesting Time

When acres of dead ripe grain are waiting to be cut, is a poor time for the binder to develop a fussy streak. Some of the more common difficulties and their relief have been studied by the Nebraska Agricultural college.

1. If the machine travels with a jerky motion, main drive chain is too loose or it may be dry; try a little oil on it.

2. If the slats rip off the canvas, the elevators are not square.

3. If the knotter hook is rusty and rough, it will not work properly. Polish it with fine emery paper.

4. If the binder attachment is not timed properly, it certainly will not work. Some binders are timed in as many as five places.

5. If the knotter hook does not turn far enough to close the fingers on the twine, no knot will be tied. Look at the knotter pinion. It should not be worn.

6. If the twine slips through the cord holder the twine will be pulled out before the knot is tied. Adjust the cord holder spring. It should take 40 pounds to pull the twine from the disk.

7. If the disk does not move far enough, the knotter hook grasps only one cord, hence a loose end band.

8. If the needle is bent or out of shape, there will be a loose end band. The needle is malleable iron and may be hammered back to shape.

9. If the twine is pulled from the hook before the knot is tied, try the knife, it may be dull.

Soft-Shelled Eggs Are Caused by Two Defects

Soft-shelled eggs are either due to the absence of shell-forming material in the feed or to disease in the lower part of the oviduct which results in an insufficient secretion of lime salts. In rare cases, however, they may be caused by the fowls not eating enough of shell-forming material even when an abundant supply is available. Keep oyster shell before fowls at all times. Sometimes the bird is too fat and this results in an absence of muscular tonicity, the eggs being passed down the oviduct so rapidly that the secretions are not supplied in sufficient amounts. If hens are too fat, give them more exercise. Cut down the amount of corn, buckwheat and barley and add meat scraps or tankage.

FARM NOTES

To help fatten the pocketbook, thin the apples.

Good summer pastures help to produce dairy products cheaply.

In co-operation the "co" and the "operation" are equally important.

Lime scattered on the fields makes a good foundation for the whole farm.

Ten acres in alfalfa will produce as much protein as is contained in 27 tons of wheat bran.

New shoots on blackberries and blackcap raspberries should be pinched back when they are 18 to 24 inches high.

• • •

While busy with farm work do not neglect the young calves. For best results, calves should not be turned out on grass until three months of age.

• • •

One of the greatest discoveries in recent years is, perhaps, that lettuce and other leafy vegetables help to devise sickness of its place in the sun.

• • •

Colts should have a little grain to supplement their rations when pastures get short during the summer. If there is no natural shade they should be brought in during the day time and let out at night.

A. P. Will Serve Thorsby-Jemison

The Alabama public service commission has given the Alabama Power Company permission to extend its line from Clanton to serve the two progressive towns in north Chilton county—Thorsby and Jemison.

The following news item from Montgomery, July 16, explains the order:

"Granting petition of the Alabama Power Company for authority to construct an electric transmission line from the comany's system, at Clanton, to Thorsby and on to Jemison and to establish distribution systems at Thorsby and Jemison, the Alabama public service commission in order issued Wednesday also approved schedule for service rates for Thorsby and Jemison. The rate schedule is not to go into effect until the construction and improvement work contemplated by the company is completed.

Municipalities of Thorsby and Jemison, at hearing of the petition, filed written request by their mayors that the authority asked by the power company be granted. There was no opposition to the proposal to build the new transmission line.

New Singing Convention

We are inviting all of the old time singers, and all that are interested in the old sacred songs to meet at the court house in Clanton on August 1 and 2, which means two days' session, at 10 a. m.

On Saturday we purpose to organize a Chilton County Christian Harmony Association, and we don't want any of the old singers to think that this means we want to interfere with the old Harp and Harmony convention. Not that, but we want to make it stronger by having more conventions. We are expecting the state president to be with us on these days. Be sure and not forget these days and bring your lunch and books and let us meet and sing praise to God in the most humble way.

I am yours for a big crowd and a glorious singing.

Champion Wrestler Tells What to Eat

Johnny Meyers.

Johnny Meyers, middleweight wrestling champion of the world, is strongly in favor of the use of scientifically prepared foods. He prefers to know that the food he is eating is pure and wholesome rather than to take a chance with any kind of food consuming by eating food from an unknown source. In a recent interview on the eve of his match with Lou Talaber, from whom he won his crown, he said: "I expect to win the crown from Talaber. He is a fine wrestler and uses more science than any man of the mat today. However, I feel sure that my superior physical condition will prevail and that I will emerge victorious and the champion of my division. Diet is a very important part of my program in training for a match. The system that I use is really very simple, involving only good judgment and caution in the selection of food. I prefer to eat scientifically prepared foods whenever possible and I never eat anything to which is attached the slightest doubt of its purity. I eat a great deal of canned foods because I am sure that they are pure and will have no ill effects on my digestive system. Take, just as an example of what food can do for the body—milk. It is the greatest of body builders and a very important part of any man's diet. But is sometimes impure or contaminated and may be the source of illness if used. Because of this fact, I use evaporated milk entirely and find it very satisfactory. I know that it is pure and that I will not suffer from its use. I know that it is a great body builder because the concentration of it gives it such food value. I know that it is easily digested, more so than market milk. In fact, because I drink it before going to bed and feel no effects of it in the morning. This is usually hard to do with ordinary market milk. This plan, in substance, is the same one that I use regarding other foods. If there is any chance or suspicion of impurity or low food value, I use something else.

"And if a man is so situated that it is impossible for him to get the proper amount of exercise, he must be doubly cautious not to partake of any but the purest food. On the whole, if a man eats with wisdom and observes the fundamental rules for good health, there is no reason why he should ever have a sick or uncomfortable day."

PROTRACTED MEETING CLOSES AT CONCORD

The protracted meeting at Concord Baptist church, which had been in progress for a week, came to a close last Sunday. The services were conducted by Rev. R. L. Bonner, the pastor; 23 additions to the church were the result. Rev. Bonner is one of the inspiring preachers of this section, and his sermons daily were listened to with interest and benefit.

At the conclusion of the meeting Rev. Bonner was remembered in substantial way with an offering, and possibly what was more appreciative, was a nice coop of friers sent to his home address.

This is one of the progressive communities of Chilton county, and this church is one of the leading country churches, with regular services first Sunday and Sunday night.

W. M. U. at Mulberry Baptist Church Today

Latest Triumph in Railroading

THE completion of the new Chicago Union Station marks a noteworthy accomplishment in the history of important engineering undertakings from which travelers from all parts of the United States will derive pleasure and benefit.

The station is without doubt one of the finest and most efficiently designed railroad terminals in the world. It forms a vital link in the realization of the "Chicago City Beautiful Plan." Simplicity, accessibility and convenience for the traveling public are the essential virtues of the new terminal. Rest and recreation rooms, ticket offices, barber shop, dining rooms, stores of various kinds, and almost every convenience known to travelers, are to be found on the one level, no steps to climb.

The main station is a low monumental type of building with a row of massive columns of classic design along the entire east front. Once inside, the traveler finds himself in a gigantic waiting room more than 100 feet high and brilliantly lighted through skylights in the great arch ceiling. Colonnades inclose the room, the walls of which are patterned after the architecture of ancient Rome. Bordering this room are the multi-complete passenger terminal facilities. An innovation in railway terminal design is a conference room accommodating 125 people, which is available, without charge, to patrons of the Union Station lines for conferences and other meetings.

To give some idea of the immensity of the new station, it may be stated that the main building covers an area of about three acres with a concourse covering 60,000 square feet. The entire terminal facilities cover more than 85 acres and will expedite the prompt and satisfactory handling of 50,000 passengers, 400 tons of baggage and 800 trains daily with room for future expansion. Fifteen acres of glass were used in the various coverings over the train sheds, which extend more than 1,200 feet beyond the main structure. A total of 17,000 tons of structural steel, 175,000 cubic feet of Indiana limestone and 10,000 cubic feet of granite were used in the station building and concourse. The foundation consists of 449 cylindrical concrete piers from four to ten feet in diameter, reaching to a depth of more than 80 feet below the level of the Chicago river.

Those who have had the privilege of inspecting the new station pronounce it a marvel in terminal construction and are urging their friends to see it on their next visit to Chicago.

The station is used jointly by the Pennsylvania Railroad; Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry.; Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. R., and the Chicago & Alton R. R.

Cotton Production And Prices for the Year 1925

Early in the season it was estimated that there would be a 5 to 8 per cent increase in the cotton acreage in 1925, over that in 1824. Many thought this too high an estimate and did not fail to let it be known. They gave the usual reasons why so large an acreage "could not be planted." These of course, were lower prices than the previous year, lack of finances, scarcity of labor, drought in Texas, and all the other plausible, but insufficient reasons.

The United States Crop Reporting Board estimates the increase in acreage planted this year at 8.9 per cent, or 3,807,000 acres. In other words, while we planted 42,641,000 acres in 1924, which was the largest acreage ever planted up to that time, we increased it to 46,448,000 acres in 1925.

Why this increase when prices were 7 to 10 cents a pound below those for the 1923 crop? There are just two outstanding reasons for this big increase in the acreage for 1925. First, the price for the 1924 crop was good and made it the best crop for most farmers to grow. The price was lower than the year before, but farmers, no matter how much they complained about the reduced price, still felt that the price was good enough to make cotton their best cash crop.

Second, the slight damage in 1924 gave confidence to many that the weevils would not be bad again, or at least that they could again make cotton profitably.

As to how cotton will be gathered from this tremendous acreage is a useless guess. It may be anywhere between twelve and fifteen million bales. Yet an output of even over 13,500,000 bales will probably greatly reduce the price out of all proportion to the excess produced. We will use 13,000,000 to 13,500,000 bales this year and probably ought to produce that much for next year but any amount over 13,500,000 bales will probably reduce the total amount received for the crop. A crop of 13,500,000 bales brought less than one of 10,000,000, and, if past experiences hold, 13,500,000 bales in 1925 will bring more than 15,000,000. It is absurd that we must wish for a poorer crop to bring us more money but this is the ridiculous position in which our fondness for cotton growing has placed us.

If the large acreage in 1925 does not bring unprofitable prices, we will continue to increase the acreage year after year until we bring the disaster of prices below cost of production up on us.

First Group Policy Paid L. & N. Man

Newark, N. J.—Officials of the Prudential Insurance Company, at the Home Offices here, have been notified of the first death of an employee of the Louisville and Nashville railroad since the institution on July 1 of the insurance policy adopted for the workers of that system.

J. Price Williams, of 1762 Frankfort avenue, Louisville, who was a clerk in the freight offices of the L. & N. in that city, was enrolled in the group insurance plan late in June. He died at three o'clock on the morning of July 11, the advices stated, and on the afternoon of the same day his widow, Mrs. Kae Williams, received a check for $2,000 from W. C. Scott, the Prudential's superintendent in Louisville.

Mr. Williams was 64 years old, but was enabled to procure protection in spite of his advanced years because of the fact that he was one of a large group covered. He had been in the employ of the railroad more than twenty years and had paid premiums when he was called by death.

Clanton Wins And Loses to Mignon

In one of the most interesting games of the local season, "Pat" Moulton [illegible] to 5 victory [illegible] from Sylacauga last Thursday. Sheridan, also from Auburn, pitched for Mignon but the Clanton batters hit his delivery for 14 safe hits. The game went ten innings.

The game was won in the tenth frame after Mignon had failed to score, when Starling, first man up, hit a long fly to left field which Remsen misjudged and it was good for two bags. Wright laid one down neatly and put Starling on third. Wright got at first. Sewell hit a fast one a little too hot for Stewart at short, Starling galloped across with the winning tally.

Every Clanton batter hit safely at least once, except Pitts. Many errors were made in the game, some of them accounting for scores.

It was a nip and tuck affair from the start, neither being more than one run in the lead at any time, and the count was knotted most of the time.

Clanton batters hit Sheridan regularly, while Moulton was more effective in the pinches.

Clanton	010 201 100 1—6
Mignon	100 101 101 0—5

Batteries: Moulton and Wright; Sheridan and Bancroft.

The Clanton team journeyed up to Mignon Mills Saturday and were trimed by a score of 7 to 0. Starling pitched the game for the locals and was touched up rather heavy be the mill team.

The strong Gantts Quarry team will be here for a game Thursday.

Obie Smith Raising Purple Prolific Cotton

Obie Smith, who lives several miles west of Clanton on the Pletcher-Billingsley road, has a field of purple prolific cotton, which creates interest of all who pass that way.

This cotton looks as good as any we have seen. The stalk, leaves and bolls are of a deep dark purple color, and [illegible] in contrast to the other crops about it.

Mr. Smith states that he has grown this cotton several years, and finds it to be very good.

Paving Progresses on County Roads

The paving work started five miles below Canton in June, has been completed to South Clanton. The machinery has been moved to Lomax this week and paving has already commenced there.

The paving on the north half of Chilton county will likely reach Lomax this week or next, and signifies the completion of that project with the exception of a few short stretches above Jemison where some of the fills were not settled sufficiently.

Work of laying soil and water pipes on the streets of Clanton preparatory to paving the streets is being rushed. Also curbs are being placed.

Gore's Pond Has Changed Hands

The property known as Gore's pond was sold last week by Mr. Henry Gore to Mr. Hugh Mims, the consideration not having been announced.

This is really Clanton's only playground for the summer, and many hie themselves out each afternoon to take a cool dip in the limpid waters of this natural spring.

It is presumed that Mr. Mims will still use this property as a public bathing place.

It is reported that Mr. Gore has purchased Cordury's old mill-pond on the highway south of Clanton, but it is not known as to whether he will develop this property for bathing purposes or not.

Mrs. Jesse Greer left on Wednesday for Tuscaloosa, for the purpose of pursuing a normal course of study in the University of Alabama.

A Mother's Duty

A mother that fails to use her time and thought for the very best interest of her children is not worthy of being a mother.

Ask your husband, the man that you have selected for the father of your children; what provision he has made for their welfare in event of his unexpected death.

You owe to yourself and to your children, "Especially to your children" the duty of exerting every precaution against being left without sufficient living and educational funds.

There are a few husbands and fathers who are too selfish to make this provision. See if you have selected one of this type for the father of your children.

"Here in the zoo," said Mr. Red Fox, "they think we must all sleep at night and be awake in the daytime. They like to have us all do the same thing, that is, they don't want us to eat the same food, but they like us to have certain hours for doing this and that, and those hours aren't always the ones we would choose if we could.

"Now, when I was free, and if I were free now, I would go out every night. I would hunt and get a good breakfast and dinner and supper. But I would eat all of these during the night.

"Now I'm supposed to be asleep, but oh, how many nights I dream of the days when I rested and of the nights when I used to hunt and roam, roam and hunt.

"I hardly ever used to come home before the morning so I was really up in time for breakfast. Yes, I was in lots of time for breakfast, anyone might say.

"Now that the weather is not quite so hot and before so very, very long, the snow will be here, I keep thinking of the nights I used to go over the snow in the winter, trying to make my tracks puzzle those who would follow.

"Here I don't make tracks. That is, I don't get a chance to hunt and run and play and get the meals. It doesn't matter how I run along and whether my back feet go in the marks of my front feet, so as to make my tracks look single, or not.

"Who cares in the zoo whether I am two footed or four footed and so who cares about tracks? One doesn't have to be smart in a zoo. One doesn't have to fool people and always be on the lookout for oneself.

"No, in the zoo, one can be as stupid as stupid can be, and one will get along just as well. But out in the great world one has to be smart and clever and think up tricks to fool the enemy.

"Yes, it's good to think of those wonderful nights I had when I was free, and though I'm safer here, I'm glad the first part of my life was spent where I had to show what I knew in order to get along.

"But I am going to tell now of a narrow escape I once had. Of course you know I'm supposed to be a crafty fellow, sly and able to fool and trick people.

"Well, in those days my hair was red as it is now, or perhaps I should say my fur. Well, anyway they thought they were going to catch me, for they could see me quite plainly. By 'they' I mean the enemy, the people.

"I had been having a fine time catching chickens. Oh, what chicken dinners and suppers and breakfasts I had had!"

"They sound good," the others said, who were listening to Mr. Red Fox.

"They sound good," they repeated, and smacked their lips.

"They were good," said Mr. Fox, "and I know how to pick out the farms where the chickens were of the best kind and quality.

"Oh, a smart old fellow was I."

"Yes, yes," agreed the others.

"Now one day when I was in my hole, taking a rest, I heard some steps outside. They were human steps, the steps of people.

"'They have found me,' I thought, and I thought correctly.

"They said that they knew I always built my home with three holes, or three rooms, so that I had different entrances to my home.

"They said that showed I was clever, for if one of my holes was closed up I could get out of another.

"That was the way they were talking among themselves.

"But they thought they were clever. They had planned to try to burn up my home, and start the fire so that all three rooms would go.

"They had seen chicken bones outside my home, you see. They knew, quit correctly, that I had stolen their chickens.

"But oh, friends, they couldn't get ahead of old Mr. Red Fox.

"What do you suppose I did?

"I escaped from my secret hole which I use in time of great danger, and so I fooled them, the old fox fooled them, he did.

"Ha, ha, ha."

No Argument

"What's the shape of the earth?" asked the teacher, calling suddenly upon Willie.

"Round."

"How do you know it's round?"

"All right," said Willie; "it's square then. I don't want to start any argument about it."

Pretty Things that are made at Home

IN THE matter of dress accessories, there is no doubt that costume flowers and neckwear hold the center of the stage in current styles and that the management of color is the most important factor in their success. In scarfs, midsummer has brought with it some new features—the ensemble idea is discernible everywhere, and is reflected in scarfs of chiffon with hand-painted borders that repeat the decorative design in the dress they accompany. Crepe de chine scarfs take their cue from felt or fabric sports hats to match, painted sometimes with little landscapes or water views. Hand painting in cubist or flowered patterns, in vivid or pastel colors, flourishes on gowns, hats and scarfs and invites the amateur artist to try her skill. The scarfs have picot edges.

Next to the scarf the jabot and collar and sleeve sets are important. These are made of lace or net and lace combinations and the jabot is attached to either round or high collar along the edge of a length of insertion or tucked net. A collar and sleeve set of tucked net and lace is shown in the picture. Narrow lace and a heavy binding are used—the binding carrying baby ribbon in black. With the vogue for long sleeves these new under sleeves prove very useful, worn under three-quarter length sleeves in the frock, because they can be easily kept clean.

Costume flowers employ both ribbons and millinery flowers—mostly the latter—and are used on the majority of afternoon dresses and practically all evening dresses. Nothing flourishes with equal exuberance except the boutonniere. Everybody wears a flower of some sort, pinned somewhere, about the neck or on the coat lapel. Gardenias, chrysanthemums, roses, pansies, and many other blossoms finish the summer costume.

Even palm leaf and other plain fans come in for a colorful finishing touch in the hands of beauty-loving women. A palm-leaf fan is shown in the picture with a floral pattern sketched on it with bright silk floss and a small heart-shaped bamboo fan is painted with flowers and a bright-winged bird.

But the small palm-leaf fan is at its prettiest when it is trimmed with narrow satin ribbon and finished with ribbon or millinery flowers. Ribbon about an inch and a half, or two inches wide, in any desired color is used for winding the handle and making a finishing bow at the top of the handle. Here a cluster of flowers or a little nosegay is posed. The binding is usually shirred on and the fans may be painted, but are pretty anyway.

To Americans journeys in vacation time are as much a matter of course as three meals a day. Means for getting somewhere else and back are more and more convenient and practical and nearly every one travels.

The most experienced travelers—the globe trotters—have learned to travel light; that is, they go unencumbered by any unnecessary luggage. Blithely now the up-to-date woman takes her suitcase in hand, throws her coat over her arm and starts to Europe or around the world and always manages to look well dressed.

The foundation of her wardrobe is found to be a plain tailored suit, a practical cloth dress, a smart, cozy and serviceable coat and a more or less simple street hat, chosen according to the length of her journey. Her suit is likely to be of tweed, her dress of jersey or twill or kasha and her coat of twill or a pile fabric. A black satin and a white crepe de chine skirt and several pretty blouses tell the story of her dressier clothes, and such is the light and flimsy character of these and her underlinings that they take up little room. "Luggage" and "tuckaway" hats that can be flattened out when not on duty and carried in a suitcase afford a change of headwear. They are made of silk or other fabrics and are shapely when adjusted to the head. Even the umbrella and small camera are stowed away with other belongings. As for accessories—the fewer the better unless they are "built in" the dress or blouse as in the frock shown at the left of the picture. This is a straight-line affair, with collar and cuffs of embroidered crepe de chine and a jabot and sleeve frills of plaited crepe like the frock in color. But there are any number of designs in frocks of this kind that are easy to get off and on with simple fastenings. These are points to be considered by the traveler. Once on and fastened they are complete in themselves—and good looking.

The coat at the right has the same commendable features—it is practical and attractive and roomy enough to be worn over a suit if needed for warmth

New Styles for Travel Wear.

Twill is very practical for traveling coats and so are the various soft suede-finished or pile fabrics.

A short journey may require less shaving down of one's belongings, but if it is to be a sight-seeing trip much luggage is a bother. Besides if the worst comes to the worst and no porter is at hand the lighter the baggage the better.

WHAT TO EAT

One may have a green salad dressing by adding a cupful of cooked, sifted peas to it. Put the cooked peas through a fine sieve. This not only improves the flavor and makes it more pleasing in appearance, but it is more nourishing and enjoyed by all.

Boiled Dressing.—Beat two eggs light, without separating; add one cupful of mild vinegar (dilute with water if the acid is very strong), add one teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper one-half teaspoonful of sugar, and one-fourth cupful of butter, melted. Mix well and put over hot water. Stir constantly until the dressing is thickened; cool and serve with an addition of whipped cream or olive oil.

Fish Dinner.—Take two pounds of haddock, cod or halibut, tie in a cheesecloth and boil in salted water until tender. Cook a cupful of rice in boiling salted water. Chop one quart of cooked spinach, season with butter, arrange with chopped beets in small mounds around the fish. Serve very hot.

Cucumber Sauce.—Pare two cucumbers and cut into quarters lengthwise, remove the seeds if large, chop fine, and squeeze dry. Season with salt, paprika and vinegar and stir in one-half cupful of thick cream whipped until stiff. A small grated onion may be added if liked.

Fried Green Tomatoes.—Cut off both ends of large green tomatoes, cut into slim slices, roll in seasoned flour and cook in hot butter in a frying pan. If onion flavor is liked a slice of onion may be added when frying.

Wilted Cucumbers.—For those who find the juice of the cucumber disagrees with them, cover with strong salt and water and let them soak for two hours. Toss in a salad bowl, dress with sour cream and serve.

Tongue Scramble.—Take one cupful of finely minced cooked tongue, add six well-beaten eggs, season to taste with grated onion and chopped green pepper. Cook in butter and serve very hot.

Household Hints.

In cutting raisins or candied peel, rub a bit of butter over the chopping knife or the scissors to keep them from becoming sticky. Marshmallows will cut into pieces quickly with the scissors dipped into cold water occasionally.

Fry spring chickens by putting (after cutting into serving-sized pieces) into a deep Scotch kettle with a tablespoonful or two of water; let steam tightly covered for a few minutes, adding a little fat if needed. Cook until tender, well covered, adding a teaspoonful of water when needed. Season and when partly cooked and cook until well-browned. Cooked this way chicken will be tender and juicy. Long, slow cooking brings out the flavor.

Pour hot coffee from the breakfast pot into the saucers of the geranium plants once or twice a week. The coffee cools before it reaches the roots and when the beautiful blossoms will reward the effort.

Coffee grounds worked into the soil around ferns and other plants will lighten the soil.

Rinse and save all pieces of parrafin taken from jelly glasses. Keep in an old coffee pot and when ready to use, melt and pour over the glasses.

When frying doughnuts on a granite or aluminum dish, dust a thick coating of soda over the bottom, cover with water and let stand for a few hours, then remove all deposit with steel wool. If this does not remove the spots add a little lye and let stand a few minutes; this will usually clean the most obstinate deposits.

A few drops of muriatic acid added to water to wash brasses will remove all stains. Rinse well and rub with oil; polish with a chamois skin.

Asparagus, peas, beans, if left from dinner, may be rinsed with cold water and added to the salad for luncheon the next day.

Make a practice of using a card index. Housekeeping is a business and should be carried on in a business-like way.

When aluminum pans and dishes become discolored, boil up a few apple peelings or leaves of rhubarb in them. The acid will dissolve the deposit.

To remove a cork that has been pushed into a bottle, tie a small button to a cord and drop into the bottle, pull up the string and the cork and button will come out.

If mayonnaise curdles in the making, start all over again, beating a fresh egg and add the curdled mixture a few drops at a time until all is well-blended.

Having a list of boxes and their contents will save much rummaging for things. In case of illness in the family those unfamiliar will be able to locate needed things.

Lesson for July 26

THE COUNCIL AT JERUSALEM

LESSON TEXT—Acts 15:1-35.

GOLDEN TEXT—"We believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved, even as they."—Acts 15:11.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus the Friend of Little Children.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Great Gathering at Jerusalem.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Council at Jerusalem.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What is Christian Liberty?

I. The Controversy in the Church at Antioch (vv. 1-5).

This difficulty was a most serious one for it threatened the disruption of the church into a Jewish and a Gentile division. It was not a question of the admission of the Gentiles into the church. That had been settled some years before when Peter received Cornelius and his household. The question now was, on what ground could they be received? Should Gentile converts be required to keep the Mosaic law as a condition of salvation? This issue was brought on by the coming of certain men from Jerusalem, who declared, "Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved (v. 1)." The question was so difficult that Paul and Barnabas were unable to put the men to silence. These Jewish legalists had the letter of the Scripture on their side. They could point to the command in which this was enjoined upon believers (Gen. 17:14). Paul could not point to any Scripture where it had been abrogated. If Paul could plead that Abraham was justified before he was circumcised, his antagonists could answer, "Yes, but after justification the rite was divinely imposed." The brethren at Antioch decided to refer the matter to the mother church at Jerusalem. Accordingly, Paul and Barnabas and others were sent as a deputation to Jerusalem. At an informal reception by the church at Jerusalem they rehearsed the things which God had done for them.

II. The Deliberations of the Council (vv. 6-21).

1. Peter's Speech (vv. 6-11).

He argued that God had borne witness to His acceptance of the Gentiles by giving the Holy Spirit to them as unto the Jews (Acts 10:34-47). Since, therefore, God had not made a difference it would be folly for them to do so.

2. Paul and Barnabas Rehearsed Their Experience (v. 12).

They told how God had set his seal of approval on their preaching of salvation by grace through faith, apart from works, by the working of signs and wonders through them.

3. The Argument of James (vv 14-21).

He took the declaration of Peter and showed how it harmonized with the prophecy of Amos (Amos 9:11-15). He showed that the reception of the Gentiles was not in conflict with God's plan, but in strict harmony therewith. As set forth by James, God's plan is as follows:

(1) To take out from among the Gentiles a people for His name (v 14). This is what is now going on—the preaching of the gospel to the ends of the earth, and the calling out of the church.

(2) After the church is completed and removed, the Hebrew nation will be converted and restored to its own land and privileges by the Lord Himself at His return (vv. 16-17).

(3) Following this will be the conversion of the world through the agency of converted Israel (v. 17, cf Rom. 11:15). He showed that there is no conflict when the Scriptures are rightly divided.

His judgment was that the Gentiles should not be troubled with things that are Jewish, but should be warned against the perils of heathenism, such as meat offered to idols, fornication and blood.

III. The Decision (vv. 22-29).

The Mother church came to unanimous agreement and accepted the resolution offered by James. The apostles and elders not only sent a letter stating the decision of the conference, but took the wise precaution to send influential men along with Paul and Barnabas to bear the same testimony by word of mouth. The letter denied the authority of the Judaising teachers (v. 24), and stated the method by which this decision had been reached (vv. 25-27). They put the Holy Spirit first.

IV. The Decision Delivered to the Church (vv. 30-35).

The church was called together to hear the report. Its reading brought rejoicing. They were now free to prosecute the great missionary work.

Rat Discloses Theft Cleverly Carried On

Jewelry, silverware, cameras and various other articles disappeared in rapid succession from the home of James Malone in Greenwich, Conn. For four months Mr. Malone and members of his family had been playing the part of sleuths, but they had not found a single clue that seemed to promise anything. One day when Mrs. Malone went to the cellar of her home she picked up from the floor a pawn ticket bearing the name of Alice Munson, a maid in her employ. The police were summoned and the girl confessed. She had been stealing for months and sending the purloined articles by parcel post to New York pawnbrokers, who in turn mailed to her the loans thereon. It seems she had hidden the tickets in the joists above the cellar and a passing rat had dislodged one which, failing to the floor, was found by Mrs. Malone.—Pathfinder Magazine.

St. Paul, Minn.—"I have a little girl three years old and ever since her birth I have suffered with my back as if it were breaking in two and I have felt as if something were falling out all the time. I also had dizzy spells and was sick at my stomach every month. I had read several letters of women in the newspapers and the druggist recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to my husband for me. As a result of taking it my back has stopped aching and the awful bearing-down feeling is gone. I feel stronger and do all of my housework and tend to my little girl. I have also taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills for constipation. I have recommended these medicines to some of my friends and you may use this letter as a testimonial if you wish. Cultures No Good for Nonlegumes

Farmer Should Not Waste His Time or Money on Doubtful Cultures.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Worthless preparations calculated to stimulate nitrogen fixation in such nonleguuues as corn, cotton, and tobacco are being offered the farmer at the rate of a dollar a pound, says the United States Department of Agriculture.

The farmer should not waste his time or money on such doubtful preparations, cautions the department. Even the most alluring advertisements and claims should fall on deaf ears. All efforts to inoculate the seeds of nonlegumes with nitrogen-fixing bacteria have failed, says the department. Corn, wheat, oats, rye, cotton, tobacco, and other nonleguminous plants do not harbor such nitrogen-fixing bacteria in their stems and leaves, although such is the assertion of some commercial concerns engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling commercial cultures for inoculating the seed of these nonlegumes.

Cultures for Legumes.

On the other hand, the use of commercial cultures for inoculating the legumes—such as alfalfa, clover, vetch, peas, soy beans, and cowpeas—is often to be recommended. These and other legumes attain their best development if their roots have many well-developed nodules in which the nitrogen-fixing bacteria are present in large numbers. Not all soils contain these desirable bacteria in the right quantity or quality to assure a normal natural inoculation, but fortunately this lack can be supplied by the use of properly prepared commercial cultures.

Many investigators have tried to select and cultivate useful bacteria in the laboratory for the artificial inoculation of the soil or seeds of nonleguminous plants, hoping that results would be similar to those secured when the legumes are inoculated artificially. However, all efforts made in this direction have failed thus far and all such commercial cultures have been found to be without value to the farmer.

Composition of Cultures.

Usually these cultures prepared for the nonlegumes have been found to contain such substances as dried animal manure, compost, guano, phosphates, lime, and prepared humus. All of these substances are in the nature of a fertilizer and may, if relatively large amounts of them are applied in pot or small plot tests, stimulate noticeable growth. This apparently beneficial effect from the substance will be as a fertilizer and not as a nitrogen-fixing agent.

Deep Cultivation Cuts Yield of the Corn Crop

"Stir as shallow as possible when cultivating corn," is the advice of soils men at the New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca. Within recent years it has been found that deep cultivation of corn injures the roots and reduces the yield of the crop.

In wet seasons, when the weeds get a big start, deep cultivation may be the only way to kill them, but it nips the corn roots, too, and holds back the growth of the crop.

Another reason for deep cultivation has been the theory that a soil mulch was a great moisture-saver. This is only partly true, and it is only in dry seasons that this mulch conserves much moisture with New York's normal rainfall.

Cultivation before planting the crop is the most effective, say the soils men, and it can be done more cheaply and easily then than later. Proper preparation of the seed bed is necessary for later cultivation to be effective. If the seed bed has been properly worked, shallow cultivation should do the business later on when the crop gets up above the ground. Wet weather may interfere, of course, but the same rule holds: The best cultivation is that which injures the crop roots least and still kills the weeds.

These principles of cultivation apply to all weed crops, such as corn, beans, potatoes and cabbage.

Good Feed for Stallion During Breeding Season

A few combinations of rations which are suitable for a stallion during the breeding season are as follows:

1. Oats, timothy or prairie hay.
2. Oats, four parts; corn, six parts, and bran, three parts by weight; timothy or prairie hay.
3. Oats, four parts; corn, six parts; linseed meal, one part; timothy or prairie hay.
4. Corn, seven parts; bran, three parts; linseed meal, one part; timothy or prairie hay.
5. Corn; alfalfa hay one-third and prairie hay two-thirds.

No specific directions can be given as to the total amount of feed required, since this depends on the exercise the animal gets and whether he is a "hard" or "easy" keeper. A safe rule is to keep the stallion in good flesh, but not "hog fat," for this will injure his breeding powers. Most horsemen advise that in the breeding season he be kept gaining just a bit, rather than allowed to run down in flesh. While some recommend feeding three times a day, four is preferred by others. In either case no more should be fed than will be promptly cleaned up. Plenty of exercise is very essential.

Cultivate to Kill Weeds in Cornfield

Moisture Conservation Is Not Chief Object.

Producing corn at the lowest possible cost requires that it be cultivated only enough to keep down weeds, according to D. C. Wimer, University of Illinois. It is now well established that weed control and not moisture conservation is the chief object of corn cultivation and consequently cultivating weed-free corn with the idea of conserving moisture by creating a mulch only swells the cost of producing the crop.

Experimental results show that weedy corn probably suffers more from lack of nutrients than from lack of moisture. Consequently it would seem that moisture conservation is not a reason for cultivating corn, except possibly in the case of heavy soils that check badly. Cultivation may be necessary on such soils to fill large cracks and thus stop the direct loss of moisture from the subsurface or even the subsoil. On soils that do not check badly the loss of moisture from the immediate surface is of little significance.

Since cultivation is the only practical method of controlling weeds, the depth and frequency of cultivation should be determined by their growth. In so far as possible the growth of weeds should be prevented by shallow rather than deep cultivation, since the latter generally injures the corn roots and thereby cuts the yield.

On soils that are reasonably free from weeds and where the seed bed has been well prepared, corn needs little or no cultivation. Unless cultivation kills weeds, closes large openings in soils that are subject to excessive cracking or puts soils in condition to absorb more water, it can hardly be justified in the face of experimental evidence.

Several Crop Varieties Are Tested at Illinois

Several new varieties of crops have been introduced in the experimental tests which are being conducted at the University of Illinois. The alfalfa tests which were started in 1923 include six varieties which are now in their second crop season. These are Grimm, Cossack, South Dakota No. 12, Common Kansas grown, Common Idaho grown under irrigation, and Argentine grown seed. These varieties present some interesting comparisons.

In the oat tests a new variety, Kanota, is making an interesting showing. This is an early oat introduced from the Kansas experimental station. It appears that it may prove to be a better variety than Iowa 103. Nova, a variety introduced from Denmark, promises to be a good late variety.

The most interesting varieties of wheat are two hybrids, Michikoff, a Purdue variety, and Minturki. Both are hard wheats. The Michikoff is smooth and the Minturki is bearded. Twenty-six other varieties of winter and spring wheat are being tested. These tests are helpful in determining the best varieties for farmers of the corb belt to use in their crop rotations.

Ridding Farm Lands of Different Rodent Pests

The tremendous scope of rodent-control work can be seen from a report to the biological survey, United States Department of Agriculture, of what was accomplished in Arizona in a single month. Rodent-control campaigns in this state in April were directed against prairie dogs, pocket gophers and rabbits. About 12,000 rodents a day were killed, or 360,000, approximately, for the month. Nearly 80,000 acres of infested lands were treated with about 8,000 quarts of poisoned bait by 375 co-operating farmers and stockmen. No matter how conservative the estimate of the value per acre of ridding lands of rodent pests, it must be evident that the results are worth thousands of dollars to the landowners.

FARM NOTES

Now we'll wait to see who tested their seed corn.

Eat, can, or sell the slacker hens.

• • •

More April chicks are likely to live than those hatched in any other month.

• • •

Waste oil from the tractor, car, or truck engine crank case works fine as a hog oiler.

• • •

A little sweet clover for pasture may become a "lifesaver" in seasons of drought or in other emergencies.

• • •

Golden Bantam sweet corn is adapted to the home garden, as it will produce well in small, closely planted plots.

• • •

Frequent and thorough cultivation is the only economic method of weed control in cultivated crops. Once started, it is very difficult to get rid of weeds without injuring the crop.

• • •

Use a good fly spray, particularly on dairy cows, but don't soak their hides so as to blister. If you spray before milking allow time for the spray to settle so as to avoid tainting the milk.

"REDS" OF THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR ENTERTAIN "BLUES" IN THE MASONIC LODGE BUILDING.

An entertainment had been voted upon. New members were to be acquired for the Christian Endeavor Society. The organization was divided into two divisions; the "Reds" and the "Blues". The winning team in the acquirement of new members was to be given an entertainment by the other team.

Therefore, as a reward for faithful endeavor, the "Reds" gave their fellow-members an entertainment in the Masonic building on last Thursday evening.

A number of indoor games were indulged in, one of the most interesting of which was a contest, answers to the questions being the names of various poets.

An ice course was served to the following Endeavors:

Misses Myra Johnson, Gertie M. Fiquette, Sallie Johnson, Margaret Ayres, Edith Sims, Messrs: John Van Derveer, Jr., Julian Evans, Paul Cox, Ralph Johnson and Vincent Sims.

MRS. GRADY REYNOLDS ENTERTAINS AT BRIDGE.

On Wednesday afternoon Mrs. Grady Reynolds entertained the Clanton Card Club at bridge.

The beautiful home of the hostess had been made ready for the reception of the afternoon's entertainment by the artistic arrangement of many handsomely grown pot plants, and a number of vari-colored flowers.

Upon conclusion of the games, Mrs. J. Hance Alred was found to be winner of the Club prize andMrs. Eric Hart was found to be winner of the guest prize. Appropriate prizes were awarded to each.

The hostess served a prettily arranged salad plate to the Club members and the club's guests, who were:

Mesdames Hughes Kennedy of Birmingham, "Bill" Lanier, Eric Hart, J. Watts Moore, T. C. McSwain, Grady Broadhead and Hosea Downs.

GEORGE CALLOWAY'S BIRTHDAY PARTY.

On last Thursday afternoon the friends of George Calloway happily assembled in the home of their host to assist in his thirteenth birthday celebration.

The usual juvenile games were enjoyed. Then the unique and ever interesting contest-game "advertisements," was played. The first prize, a toilet set and the booby, a baby's pacifier, were awarded to Charles Pyron and J. C. Jones, respectively.

Guests were invited into the prettily decorated dining-room for refreshments. Suspended from the chandelier to the dining table's edge were streamers in pink and white.

The large angel-food cake was iced in pink; and placed upon it were thirteen blazing candles.

The guests found delight in the lighted contest of "blowing out" the candle. For the maximum number blown out in one breath, Mildred Danforth was awarded a baby rattler.

Upon cutting the cake, Mildred Danforth was again favored by chance: she found herself the possessor of the dime.

A delightful ice-course was served to the following guests:

Virginia Alred, Mary Goodwin Jones, Myrtice Vines, John Ponder Lawrence, Joe Earle Gowan, J. C. Jones, Mary Foshee, Elizabeth Johnson, Mildred Danforth and Janice Danforth.

The guests made merry with a number of indoor games and light conversation.

A Mother's Duty

A mother that fails to use her time and thought for the very best interest of her children is not worthy of being a mother.

Ask your husband, the man that you have selected for the father of your children; what provision he has made for their welfare in event of his unexpected death.

You owe to yourself and to your children. "Especially to your children" the duty of exerting every precaution against being left without sufficient living and educational funds.

There are a few husbands and fathers who are too selfish to make this provision. See if you have selected one of this type for the father of your children.

GOOD ROADS

A great deal of discussion over our road problems has to do with the permanency of same. We speak of the paved road as a permanent road. This is not a fact.

We have a paved road and we also have an improved gravel or hard surface road. The concrete or paved road (also bitulithic) lasts a long time, and upkeep is small compared to the graveled road, but it will have to be rebuilt at some time or other. So in talking about our good roads let us not lose sight of the fact that they will not last forever.

The Anniston Star gives some good sound argument along this line. It says:

People refer to paved highways as "permanent highways." Some may think that Calhoun has secured a "permanent" highway in the paved road that is to extend from the Talladega to the Cherokee county line, through Anniston. It is to be, in all probability, a durable highway, but nothing that automobiles, trucks or wagons go over is permanent. Calhoun's paved highways will last a long time but ultimately it will have to be repaired and, [illegible] necessary with greater frequency.

Despite the fact that no highway no matter how well constructed or of what material built, is permanent, the paved road stands out conspicuously as the only sensible kind to build where traffic is very heavy and decidedly the most economical that can be built. Other roads, well-built ones that have hard gravel or macadam surfices, are durable, but in a year or two holes are worn in them and repairs are necessary. After a time it is necessary to practically rebuild such roads. This has been the experience with all macadamized or graveled roads that must sustain heavy traffic in all kinds of weather.

On the other hand the paved road needs little repair work for the first five years and not a great deal for the next ten years. After a time it is necessary to replace worn spots with new surface and perhaps in the course of years the whole road may have to be recovered. This is what must be counted upon, but when the cost of repair is counted and is compared with the less durable type of roadways it will be found that the paved road has cost less by far for maintenance and has been a means of saving many thousands of dollars to those who use the road, in the wear and tear of vehicles and stock.

The United States Department of Agriculture correct the wrong impression about permanent highways and says the error should no longer be harbored. The Department says it also is an error to believe that all roads should be hardsurfaced. Only roads on which traffic is heavy need to be paved. The highway in Calhoun connects the four principal towns in the county and travel on it will be heavy all the time. This makes it necessary for the highway to be paved, but the county roads that connect with the highway need not be paved. Indeed, it would be a useless expense to pave them, for, as it is pointed out by the Department of Agriculture, repair of roads with good gravel surfaces can be made with small exense and if the roads are well looked after and repairs made as soon as worn places appear, the graveled or cherted road can be kept in good shape.

It is pointed out by the Savannah Press that improved roads are not luxuries. Some people appear to think they are. The Press says: "It costs more to repair vehicles than it does to fix roads. Logically, therefore, the only limit that should be placed on expenditure for road improvement is the amount that can be saved in vehicular operating costs. This depends, of course, upon the number of vehicles using the road. It is pointed out that the country loses more, in increased cost of operating vehicles, by not improving roads than it costs to improve them."

Another safeguard has been placed around life at sea by the recently enacted regulation of the British board of trade making it compulsory for all ships flying the British flag and engaged in passenger traffic to equip at least one in every 15 lifeboats with a 250-watt transmitter and a radio direction-finding apparatus to facilitate rescue work in time of disaster.

Health and Home

CAMPING AND PROBLEM OF FOOD

There is no healthier sport than camping. During the warm and balmy spring and summer days, it is real recreation. To get out in the fresh air and sunshine, free from worry and care, enhances the health of anyone, be he office man, salesman or what not.

But due to the entirely inadequate means of food preservation and refrigeration found in the majority of camps, there is the ever-present danger of sickness from infected foods. The utmost care must be taken in order that this may be avoided. Butter and eggs should be bought only as used. The milk is a problem in itself. Perhaps the solution lies in the use of a milk other than market milk, in order that purity and sterility may be assured. For such use, evaporated milk is ideal. Many people are wont to confuse evaporated and condensed milk but there is no similarity between the two. Condensed milk is a combination of sugar and milk and can be used only when both of these substances are desired. Evaporated milk is merely pure, fresh milk with about sixty per cent of the water removed and the nutrient content left intact. It is absolutely sterile and pure, having been sterilized before leaving the factory. The water, removed by evaporation, may be replaced very easily and the milk returned to its original volume. Evaporated milk may be obtained in small cans, containing six ounces or in larger ones containing sixteen and can be taken to the camp in quantities sufficient for the needs of the entire period, thus assuring a constant supply of pure, fresh milk without the worry or the danger attached to the use of the market product.

Following are recipes for a few dishes that are best adapted for camp consumption because of ease of preparation, purity and food value.

Tomato Soup.

1 pint tomato pulp or canned tomato soup.	1½ cups water Salt and pepper to taste
1½ cups evaporated milk	¼ tsp. soda

Bring tomato pulp or soup to the boil, add the seasonings and soda. Heat the milk and water and combine slowly with the tomato mixture.

Stirred Eggs.

¼ cup evaporated milk	¼ tsp. paprika 6 eggs
½ cup water	2 tbsp. fat
¾ tsp. pepper	Grated cheese

Beat the eggs, add the milk, water and seasonings. Melt the fat in a frying pan. Add the egg mixture and stir until the mixture is creamy. When almost done, sprinkle with grated cheese. Serve on slices of bread, toast or crackers.

PRE-WAR PULLMAN COST OF STREET CAR

One hundred new cars being built for the Chicago surface lines for delivery this winter are costing a little over $15.000 each, the company announces.

Cars brought by this company for use in Chicago ten years ago cost $6,200 each. This is an increse of over 100 per cent in cost of equipment.

A private Pullman railroad car could be bought in 1914 for approximately the cost of three present-day street cars.

In this connection the company states that this year it is expending $2.25 for operating expenses for every dollar it spent in 1914.

Alabam, North Carolina and Tennessee produced 65 per cent of all cast iron and pipe fittings manufactured in United States last year, while Alabama alone produced 53 per cent of that amount, according to recently compiled figures.

"I want to stay here, and work the farm, and make it pay. I can. I'm not going to grow just the common garden stuff any more—not much, anyway. I'm going to specialize in the fine things—the kind the South Water street commission men want. I want to drain the low land. Tile it. That land hasn't been used for years. It ought to be rich growing land by now, if once it's properly drained. And I want Dirk to go to school. Good schools. I never want my son to go to the Haymarket. Never. Never. . . .

"My life doesn't count, except as something for Dirk to use. I'm done with anything else. Oh, I don't mean that I'm discouraged, or disappointed in life, or anything like that. I mean I started out with the wrong idea. I know better now. I'm here to keep Dirk from making the mistakes I made."

Aug Hempel's tone was one of meditation, not of argument. "It don't work out that way, seems. About mistakes it's funny. You got to make your own; and not only that, if you try to keep people from making theirs they get mad." He whistled softly through his teeth following this utterance and tapped the chair seat with his finger.

"It's beauty!" Selina said then, almost passionately. Aug Hempel and Julie plainly could make nothing of this remark, so she went on, eager, explanatory. "I used to think that if you wanted beauty—if you wanted it hard enough and hopefully enough—it came to you. You just waited, and lived your life as best you could, knowing that beauty might be just around the corner. You just waited, and then it came."

"Beauty!" exclaimed Julie, weakly. She stared at Selina in the evident belief that this work-worn haggard woman was bemoaning her lack of personal pulchritude.

"Yes. All the worth-while things in life. Work that you love. And growth—growth and watching people grow. Feeling very strongly about things and then developing that feeling to—to make something fine come of it." She threw out her hands in a futile gesture. "That's what I mean by beauty. I want Dirk to have it."

"For pity's sake!" pleaded Julie, the literal, "let's stop talking and do something. Pa, you've probably got it all fixed in your mind long ago. It's time we heard it. Here Selina was one of the most popular girls in Miss Fister's school, and lots of people thought the prettiest. And now just look at her!"

A flicker of the old flame leaped up in Selina. "Flatterer!" she murmured.

Aug Hempel stood up. "If you think giving your whole life to making the boy happy is going to make him happy you ain't so smart as I took you for. You go trying to live somebody else's life for them."

"I'm not going to live his life for him. I want to show him how to live it so that he'll get full value out of it."

"Keeping him out of the Haymarket is the Haymarket's the natural place for him won't do that. How can you tell! Monkeying with what's to be. I'm out at the yards every day, in and out of the cattle pens, talking to the drovers and herders, mixing in with the buyers. I can tell the weight of a hog and what he's worth just by a look at him, and a steer, too. My son-in-law, Michael Arnold, sits up in the office all day in our plant, dictating letters. His clothes never stink of pigs like mine do. . . . Now I ain't saying anything against him, gen'lout I bet my grandson Eugene repeated it, stressing the it—"that you sensed his dislike of business at if he comes into the business within him he grows up, won't go His office distance of the yards. building c will be in a new office a view of Madison street, with hoggin' it &c. He ba ing in it with a pen that he ti his pocket—some sort of m pen that seemed already fille ink and that you unscrewed at and then screwed at the bottom squinted through his cigar smoke, the check book propped on his knee. He tore off the check with a clean rip. "For a starter," he said. He held it out to Selina.

"There now!" exclaimed Julie, in triumphant satisfaction. That was more like it. Doing something.

But Selina did not take the check. She sat very still in her chair, her hands folded. "That isn't the regular way," she said.

August Hempel was screwing the top on his fountain pen again. "Regular way? for what?"

"I'm borrowing this money, not taking it. Oh, yes, I am! I couldn't get along without it. I realize that now, after yesterday. Yesterday! But in five years—seven—I'll pay it back." Then, at a half-uttered protest from Julie, "That's the only way I'll take it. It's for Dirk. But I'm going to earn it—and pay it back. I want a—" she was being enormously businesslike, and unconsciously enjoying it—"a—an I. O. U. A promise to pay you back just as—as soon as I can. That's business, isn't it? And I'll sign it."

"Sure," said Aug Hempel, and unscrewed his fountain pen again. "Sure that's business."

Very serious, he scribbled again, busily, on a piece of paper. A year later, when Selina had learned many things, among them that simple and compound interest on money loaned are not mere problems devised to fill Duffy's arithmetic in her school-teaching days, she went to August Hempel between laughter and tears.

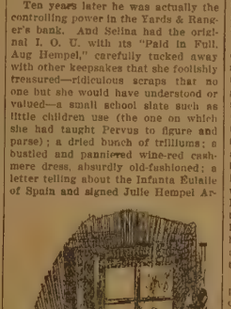
"You didn't say one word about interest, that day. Not a word. What a little fool you must have thought me."

"Between friends," protested August Hempel.

But—"No," Selina insisted. "Interest!"

"I guess I better start me a bank pretty soon if you keep on so business-like."

Ten years later he was actually the controlling power in the Yards & Ranger's bank. And Selina had the original I. O. U. with its "Paid in Full, Aug Hempel," carefully tucked away with other keepsakes that she foolishly treasured—ridiculous scraps that no one but she would have understood or valued—a small school slate such as little children use (the one on which she had taught Pervus to figure and parse); a dried bunch of trilliums; a bustled and panniered wine-red cashmere dress, absurdly old-fashioned; a letter telling about the Infanta Eulalie of Spain and signed Julie Hempel Ar-



"My Life Doesn't Count, Except as Something for Dirk to Use."

nold; a pair of men's old side-boots with mud caked on them; a crude sketch, almost obliterated now, done on a torn scrap of brown paper and showing the Haymarket with the wagons vegetable-laden and the men gathered beneath the street-flares, and the patient farm horses—Roelf's childish sketch.

Chapter X

If those vague characteristics called (variously) magnetism, manner, grace, distinction, attractiveness, fascination, go to make up that nebulous quality known as charm; and if the possessor of that quality is accounted fortunate in his equipment for that which the class-day orators style the battle of life; then Dirk DeJong was a lucky lad and life lay promisingly before him. Undoubtedly he had it; and undoubtedly it did. He was not one to talk a great deal. Perhaps that was one of his charming qualities. He listened as well. Older men especially said he was a smart young feller and would make his mark. This, surprisingly enough, after a conversation to which he had contributed not a word other than "Yes," or "No," or, "Perhaps you're right, sir," in the proper places.

It was during those careless years of Dirk's boyhood between nine and fifteen that Selina changed the DeJong acres from a worn-out and down-at-heel truck farm whose scant products brought a second-rate price in a second-rate market to a prosperous and blooming vegetable garden whose output was sought a year in advance by the South Water street commission merchants.

These six or seven years of relentless labor had been no showy success with Selina posing grandly as the New Woman in Business. No, it had been a painful, grubbing, heart-breaking process as is any project that depends on the actual soil for its realization. She drove herself pitilessly. She literally tore a living out of the earth with her two bare hands. Yet there was nothing pitiable about this small energetic woman of thirty-five or forty with her fine soft dark eyes, her clean-cut jaw-line, her shabby decent clothes that were so likely to be spattered with the mud of the road or fields, her exquisite nose with the funny little wrinkle across the bridge when she laughed. Rather, there was something splendid, about her! something rich, prophetic. It was the splendor and richness that achievement imparts.

It is doubtful that she ever could have succeeded without the money borrowed from August Hempel; without his shrewd counsel. She told him this, sometimes. He denied it. "Easier, yes. But you would have found a way, Selina. Some way. Julie, no. But you, yes. You are like that. Me, too. Say, plenty fellers that was butchers with me twenty years ago over on North Clark street are butchers yet, cutting off a steak or a chop."

Dirk had his tasks on the farm. Selina saw to that. But they were not heavy. By the time he returned from school the rough work of the day was over. His food was always hot, appetizing, plentiful. The house was neat, comfortable. Selina had installed a bathroom—one of the two bathrooms in High Prairie. The neighborhood was still rocking with the shock of this when it was informed by Jan that Selina and Dirk ate with candles lighted on the supper table. High Prairie snapped its thigh and howled with mirth.

"Cabbages is beautiful," said old Klaas Pool when he heard this. "Cabbages is beautiful I betcha."

Selina, during the years of the boy's adolescence, had never urged him to a decision about his future. That, she decided, would come. As the farm prospered and the pressure of necessity lifted she tried, in various ingenious ways, to extract from him some unconscious sign of definite preference for this calling, that profession.

Until Dirk was sixteen she had been content to let him develop as naturally as possible, and to absorb impressions unconsciously from the traps she so guilefully left about him. There was a shed which he was free to use as a workshop, fitted up with all sorts of tools. He did not use it much, after the first few weeks. He was pleasantly and mildly interested in all things; held by none. Selina had thought of Roelf when they were fitting up the workshop. The Pools had heard from Roelf just once since his flight from the farm. A letter had come from France. Selina had never heard from him. But one day years later she had come running to Dirk with an illustrated magazine in her hand.

"Look!" she cried, and pointed to a picture. He had rarely seen her so excited, so stirred. The illustration showed a photographic reproduction of a piece of sculpture—a woman's figure. It was called The Seine. A figure sinuous, snake-like, graceful, revolting, beautiful, terrible. The face alluring, insatiable, generous, treacherous, all at once. It was the Seine that fed the fertile valley land; the Seine that claimed a thousand blonted lifeless floating Things; the red-eyed ling of 1793; the dimpling coquette of 1650. Beneath the illustration a line or two—Roelf Pool. . . . Salon. . . . American. . . . future. . . .

"It's Roelf!" Selina had cried. "Roelf. Little Roelf Pool!" Tears in her eyes. Dirk had been politely interested. But then he had never known him, really. He had heard his mother speak of him, but—

At seventeen Dirk and Selina talked of the year to come. He was going to a university. But to what university? And what did he want to study? We-e-ll, hard to say. Kind of a general course, wasn't there?

"Oh," Selina had said. "Yes. General. Of course, if a person wanted to be an architect, why, I suppose Cornell would be the place. Or Harvard for law. Or Boston Tech for engineering or—"

Oh, yeh, if a fellow wanted any of those things. Good idea, though, to take a kind of general course until you found out exactly what you wanted to do. Languages and literature and that kind of thing.

At eighteen, it had been Midwest university for Dirk. High Prairie heard that Dirk DeJong was going away to college. A neighbor's son said, "Going to Wisconsin? Agricultural course there."

"My gosh, no!" Dirk had answered. He told this to Selina, laughing. But she had not laughed.

"I'd like to take that course myself, if you must know. They say it's wonderful." She looked at him, suddenly. "Dirk, you wouldn't like to take it, would you? To go to Madison, I mean. Is that what you'd like?"

He stared. "No! No! . . . Unless you want me to, mother. Then I would, gladly. I hate) .r working like this, on the farm, while I go off to school. It makes me feel kind of rotten, having my mother working for me. The other fellows—"

"I'm doing the work I'm interested in, for the person I love best in the world. I'd be lost—unhappy—without the farm. If the city creeps up on me here, as they predict it will, I don't know what I shall do."

"Just you wait till I'm successful. Then there'll be no more working for you."

"What do you mean by 'successful,' Sobig?" She had not called him that in years. But now the old nickname came to her tongue perhaps because they were speaking of his future, his success. "What do you mean by 'successful,' Sobig?"

"Rich. Lots of money."

"No, no, Dirk! No! That's not success. Roelf—the thing Roelf does—that's success."

"Oh, well, if you have money enough you can buy the things he makes, and have 'em. That's almost as good isn't it?"

At Eighteen It Had Been Midwest University for Dirk.

Dirk commenced his studies at Midwest university in the autumn of 1909. His first year was none too agreeable, as is usually the case in first years. He got on well, though. Before the end of the first semester he was popular. He had great natural charm of manner. The men liked him, and the girls, too. He rarely "cut" a class. He would have felt that this was unfair and disloyal to his mother. Some of his fellow students joked about this faithfulness to his classes. "Person would think you were an Unclassified," they said.

The Unclassifieds were made up, for the most part, of earnest and rather middle-aged students whose education was a delayed blooming. They usually were not enrolled for a full course, or were taking double work feverishly.

The professors found them a shade too eager, perhaps; too inquiring; demanding too much. They stayed after class and asked innumerable questions. They bristled with interrogation. They were prone to hold forth in the classroom. "Well, I have found it to be the case in my experience that—"

But the professor preferred to do the lecturing himself. If there was to be any experience related it should come from the teacher's platform, not the student's chair.

In his first year Dirk made the almost fatal mistake of being rather friendly with one of these Unclassifieds—a female Unclassified, a large, good-humored, plump girl, about thirty-eight, with a shiny skin which she never powdered and thick hair that exuded a disagreeable odor of oil. She was sympathetic and jolly, but her clothes were a fright, the Classifieds would have told you, and no matter how cold the day there was always a half-moon of stain showing under her armpits. She had a really fine mind, quick, eager, balanced, almost judicial. She knew just which references were valuable, which useless. Her name was Schwenguer—Mattie Schwenguer. Terrible!

She and Dirk got in the way of walking out of the classroom together, across the campus. She told him something of herself.

"Your people farmers!" Surprised, she looked at his well-cut clothes, his slim, strong, unmarked hands, his smart shoes and cap. "Why, so are mine. Iowa." She pronounced it Ioway. "I lived on the farm all my life till I was twenty-seven. I always wanted to go away to school, but we never had the money and I couldn't come to town to earn because I was the oldest, and Ma was sickly after Emma—that's the youngest—there are nine of us—was born. Ma was anxious if should go and Pa was willing, but it couldn't be. No fault of theirs. One year the summer would be so hot, with no rain hardly from spring till fall, and the corn would just dry up on the stalks, like paper. The next year it would be so wet the seed would rot in the ground. Ma died when I was twenty-six. The kids were all pretty well grown up by that time. Pa married again in a year. I came to Chicago about five years ago. . . . I've done all kinds of work, I guess, except digging in a coal mine. I'd have done that if I'd had to."

POULTRY

HIGH QUALITY EGGS IN SUMMER MONTHS

One of the biggest problems that faces the poultry producer is the production of high quality eggs through the summer months. The reason for this is the heat of the summer will start fertile eggs to incubate and these by spoil the quality unless special effort is taken.

The biggest loss can be stopped by the production of infertile instead of fertile eggs. Supplementing and correlated with this effort to produce infertile eggs is the need for careful methods of collecting, storing and marketing.

It is a customary practice for the people who are in charge of enforcing the egg-candling laws to lift the requirements for candling during March and April, for the reason that during the heavy production season the eggs are marketed with good quality. The cool weather, plus the large supply helps to maintain the good condition of the eggs marketed during this period.

Investigations show that at least two-thirds of the egg losses occur on the farm. The remainder is on the huckster wagons, in the country store on hot freight and express cars and in improper storage. This loss has been estimated at $20 per farm in Missouri, and it is doubtless as high in the other heavy poultry-producing states.

No doubt the rooster is responsible for more of this loss than any other one contributing element. He eats high-priced feed during the summer without producing any benefit and does a great deal of harm in lowering the quality of the eggs. The movement to cull the rooster out of the flock is on as soon as the breeding season is over. The young cockerels can be best developed by keeping them separate from the flock, and feed and marked them as soon as possible. The cockerels that are to be kept for breeding purposes can be developed better if kept separate from the main flock.

In addition to the loss resulting from the sale of fertile eggs, there is a further preventable loss from cracked eggs, dirty eggs, shrunken and badflavored eggs. These different losses may be lowered by feeding oyster shell, by having plenty of nests, by gathering the eggs daily, by packing them so they will not break and eating all oddsized eggs at home. Bad flavors are usually caused by feeding unusual feeds or by keeping the eggs in a place where they absorb unpleasant odors.

Scurvy-Preventing Feed Manufactured by Fowls

It looks as if the chicken makes its own vitamin C or the vitamin which prevents scurvy in guinea pigs and humans, according to an investigation carried on at the Purdue university agricultural experiment station.

It appears that chickens do not have scurvy and can thrive for long periods on feeds that do not have the scurvy-preventing vitamin. Mature cockerels were given a ration containing none of this vitamin for over three months. Their livers and kidneys were then fed in small amounts to guinea pigs suffering from scurvy brought on by a lack of a vitamin-preventing scurvy. In about two weeks' time the guinea pigs were cured of scurvy by the livers and kidneys of these cockerels which had received none of the scurvy-preventing vitamin, thus indicating that the vitamin was manufactured by some means in the body of the chicken.

This suggests that the chicken can make this vitamin from sources not available to the guinea pig or to a person and that the lack of this vitamin in the diet of the chicken apparently does no damage. In practical poultry feeding, therefore, little attention need be paid to supplying the vitamin which prevents scurvy, although other vitamins are absolutely necessary and must be provided by the feeds given.

Poultry Notes

Fresh, clean water is necessary to the poultry flock.

Losses from tuberculosis in chickens is usually greater in winter than in summer.

Chick specialists now recommend feeding egg yolk or cod liver oil to prevent leg weakness.

• • •

Experience shows that hens must have animal protein in order to lay profitably. Milk, meatscraps and tankage are the animal proteins most available for feeding poultry.

Cracked barley can be included in the feed ration for chicks after they reach the age of five or six weeks.

• • •

It never pays to overcrowd hens—they need a comfortable house, dry and roomy, with plenty of fresh air and sunshine.

• • •

Grain feed such as sprouted oats, cabbage, turnips, beets and rape are necessary for the health of the pullets. A disease similar in symptoms to roup is sometimes caused by lack of green feed.

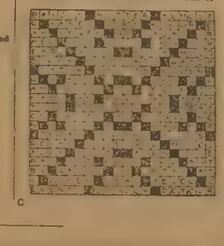
Solution of Last Week's Puzzle.



HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

Hellenist

Hellenes was one of the names of the inhabitants of ancient Greece, and the word Hellenist meant one who affiliated or imitated Greek manners, especially a person of Jewish extraction who used the Greek language as his mother tongue, as did the Jews of Asia Minor, Greece, Syria and elsewhere. Many of the Jews scattered through the provinces of Asia Minor during the first century of the Christian era were Hellenists.

Can't Soar Up

Birds cannot fly to a higher altitude without moving their wings, Maurice Boel, Belgian army expert, says after a study of South American birds. Some students of bird flight had asserted this was possible. The condor holds his wings rigid and flies along at a gradually decreasing altitude by working his tail feathers with a movement similar to that of a sculling oar, but he cannot gain altitude in this manner, Boel says.

EXPERTS SPEAK TO THE FARMERS

STATE-WIDE CAMPAIGN BEING MADE THIS WEEK BY LEADERS IN AGRICULTURAL WORK

Montgomery.—Beginning Monday, July 20, a state-wide five-day speaking campaign will be inaugurated in the rural counties of Alabama, during which the state leaders in agricultural work are being heard by farmers in 45 of the 67 counties.

Final plans for the speaking campaign were announced by Edward A. O'Neal, president of the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation, which organization is sponsoring the speaking campaign with the co-operation of the county demonstration agents, supervisors and specialists in the extension service, Auburn.

The week is known as "Farm Bureau Week" and Mr. O'Neal thinks that the number of farmers that attend these meetings will total well into the thousands. The objects are to tell the farm people and business men what has been done in their own state by organization and co-operation, and appeal to them for a continuation of their co-operation for still greater results in the future.

The marketing of cotton [illegible] which Alabama is now in the front ranks among the southern states, will be emphasized. Special attention will also be given to the efficient plan inaugurated and operated by the farm bureau in the purchase of fertilizer, this business alone having reached $2,600,000 during the season just closed.

The county agents and county farm bureau leaders will have charge of the meetings in their respective counties. In each county a local speaker will tell of the work in his county, while the state office tells of the work of the state as a whole.

President O'Neal himself is taking a leading part in the [illegible] which will be handled the week prior to the annual meeting of the [illegible] Bureau in Montgomery, July 27 to 29.

Other speakers will be John S. Kernagan, Allen Northington, S. A. Burns, T. H. Giles and C. E. Massey of the farm bureau; Dr. Tait Butler and W. C. Lassiter, editors of The Progressive Farmer; Prof. L. N. Duncan, J. T. High, E. E. Binford, W. O. Winston, M. H. Pearson, K. G. Baker, L. T. Wells and P. O. Davis, of Auburn; and L. F. McKay, of the American Cotton Growers' Exchange.

MARBLE BUREAU TOPS FOR PASTRY BOARDS

Virginia Woman Put Marble Slab on the Work Table by the Sink and Kept Her Rolling Pin Handy.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

There's nothing like a marble slab to make pastry on. If you have an old washstand or bureau up in the attic with a good polished marble top—white or mottled, or any color—bring the top down into the kitchen and experience the satisfaction of having a perfect pastry board. Chilling is essential for crisp, flaky pastry, and a marble slab is always cold.

Marble Tops Made Useful.

In almost every county in Virginia where kitchen improvement contests have been conducted under the direction of the home demonstration agents, who are co-operatively employed by the United States Department of Agriculture and the Virginia Polytechnic Institute, housewives have made clever use of their old marble bureau tops. One woman put hers on a strong shelf and built a supply cupboard immediately over it, where she keeps her flour, baking powder, and other materials. There is room for a high stool underneath the shelf, so she can sit at her work. Another made a similar shelf, but fitted two drawers under it for flour and meal. The rolling pin was hung on two hooks just above the marble slab. Measuring spoons, mixing spoons, egg-beater, egg whisk, and flour sifter were also hung up within reach. Two narrow shelves provided a place for keeping the baking powder, soda, salt, fat, oil, and other ingredients of pastry, biscuits or cookies.

Slab on Kitchen Cabinet.

A third housewife set her marble slab right on her kitchen cabinet, as all her supplies were kept inside of it. The cabinet itself was a reclaimed desk brought down from the attic and painted white. The marble pastry board in the kitchen shown in the picture is used on the counter to the left of the homemade sink. It is easy to clean it here without lifting it—for marble bureau tops are heavy—and it does not interfere with the usual work that is done at the sink. The rolling pin is kept nearby, and supplies are in the kitchen cabinet on the right. This cabinet was an old sideboard, long out of use—the kind with an upper and a lower cupboard and one large drawer. The upper cupboard was fitted with compartments for storing groceries, and the whole piece proved unexpectedly valuable in the kitchen.

SIMPLE PLUMBING SYSTEMS ON FARM

Many Solids Not Easily Soluble Thrown in Closets.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Good, well-cared-for plumbing causes little trouble or expense, says the United States Department of Agriculture in a new farmers' bulletin, No. 1426, "Farm Plumbing," which tells how simple plumbing systems can be installed on farms, and how plumbing should be cared for.

Garbage, rags, newspapers, matches and many other solids not readily soluble in water are frequently thrown into water closets and other plumbing fixtures. This should never be done.

If the inconvenience and damage caused by the stoppage of pipes is carefully explained to servants and children, who are frequently the ones responsible for clogging in this way, they will understand why they must take the trouble to dispose of trash elsewhere. Grease and fats should not be wasted through sink outlets. Solid substances clog traps and pipes; greases adhere to the bore and gradually close it. Even the washstand trap may gather soap grease, hair and lint sufficient to stop it completely. After using a plumbing fixture, especially a kitchen sink, it is well to flush the trap and waste with clean hot water. If trap and the pipe leading from it have become solidly packed with grease, the trap should be disconnected at the slip and union joints and the grease should be dug out or be forced out with a stick. If a trap is not fully closed the greasy matter may be burned out with a strong caustic solvent, of which numerous brands are on the market. The best costs respectively 50 cents in one-pound and 80 cents in two-pound cans, and the maker's directions for safely using are printed on the container. Caustic potash (lye) and caustic soda are widely used. Caustic soda is less effective than caustic potash because it unites with grease to form hard soap, whereas potash forms soft soap. Caustic soda costs less—about 12 cents per pound in ten-pound pails—and constitutes most of the ordinary lyes.

The best use of drain-pipe solvents is as an occasional aid in keeping traps and pipes free and clean. Several time a year, or whenever the waste water begins to run slowly, the pipe should be well flushed with boiling hot water to soften the grease. This should be followed with a strong solution of the chemical, and a half-hour later the pipe should be flushed thoroughly with clear boiling water. In this way little or no injury is done to the pipes and much of the grease will have been destroyed or washed away. If not successful at first, the process should be repeated. A quantity of the chemical should be dissolved in two quarts of cold water in a large pail, the solution being well stirred and poured through a funnel directly into the pipe. The face, hands, clothing, or an open flame (in confined space) should not come in contact with the chemical or its fumes.

Frozen water pipes are a prolific source of trouble with plumbing. Chemicals of the character described generate much heat, making them useful to thaw frozen pipes.

HOW MUCH MILK IS NEEDED FOR CHILD

Quart Has Food Value of at Least 600 Calories.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The slogan "a quart of milk a day" has done much good, because it has made many a parent hustle to find that amount of milk somehow for a child that needed it and was in danger of handicap for life without it. But there are some important facts that these six short words do not convey, says the United States department of Agriculture. One is the fact that a quart of milk has a food value of at least 600 calories. It is one thing to try to make a child of twelve with a food requirement of 2,500 calories take that amount every day, and another to get a child of two, with a food requirement of about 1,000 calories to do so.

Another thing that this slogan does not do is to list the other foods needed by a child. Think of trying to get the following into a short, pithy statement: "A healthy child of two should have daily at least a pint of milk and an egg; one serving of vegetables other than potatoes; fresh fruit or cooked tomatoes at one meal; fruit which may be dried or fresh at another meal; whole-grain breakfast food or a slice of graham bread (the remaining cereal may be refined); or a baked potato once a day; and a little butter and cream at every meal." And yet, this is a far safer prescription than "A quart of milk a day," and there is nothing in it to prevent the child from getting the quart of milk if he wants it. There are calories to spare even when all these foods are given to the child of two, and there are many to spare in the case of a child of six.

These foods which make provision for all three vitamins, and all needed minerals and for roughage in a form suitable for children, can all be increased as the child grows.

CHILTON COUNTY NEWS

VOLUME 4. CLANTON ALABAMA, THURSDAY, JULY 30, 1925 NO. 47

William Jennings Bryan Died In Dayton, Tennessee, Sunday

William Jenning, Bryan, the great commoner, three times democratic presidential nominee, and erstwhile leader of the Christian forces of the United States, was found dead in bed at Dayton, Tennessee, Sunday afternoon about 4:30 o'clock. Apoplexy was the probable cause of death.

Mr. Bryan had delivered two addresses Saturday, one at Jasper, Tenn., and the other at Winchester. He spent the night in Chattanooga, then caught a train for Dayton where he took part in Sunday school and led in prayer at the Methodist church. After the noon lunch he laid down to take a nap and when Mrs. Bryan sent to his room to awake him he was found to be dead.

Mr. Bryan had come to Tennessee to help he prosecution in the famous Scopes evolution trial, and had remained for a stay in the Tennessee mountains, where he was preparing for the press the speech he was to have delivered to the jury in the Scopes trial, but which was not delivered on account of agreement among council not to argue the case.

The world at large Monday was discussing the life of Bryan as they have no other man. In death he is greater even than in life. His political enemies, his enemes from other causes all pay him the tribute of sincerity in his business and true to his God.

Clarence Darrow, the confirmed agnostic and atheist, who defended Scopes, paid the commoner the tribute which all thinking men and women seem to concur in in the following words:

"I have known Mr. Bryan since 1890 and suported him twice for the presidency. He was a man of strong convictions and always espoused his cause with ability and courage.

"I differed with him on many questions, but always respected his sincerity and devotion. I am very sorry for his family and for his friends who loved him."

Mr. Bryan is survived by his invalid wife, who was with him, and by one son and one daughter.

DUPRIEST

On June 8, 1925, our home was saddened when the death angels visited and claimed our loving wife and mother.

Fransis Adeline Philyaw was born on March 4, 1875, in Alabama, reared in Miss. She was married to S. J. Dupriest in May, 1899 at Norketer, Miss. To this union nine children were born, all living except one, Mary Almer, who passed to the great beyond Oct. 16, 1911.

We can't thank our friends and neighbors enough for their kindness through the illness of our dear wife and mother.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Davis, Chandler and Lowery. Her remains were laid to rest in Collins Chapel cemetery.

She leaves a husband, eight children, five step-children, two brothers, two sisters and a host of friends to mourn her loss.

She obeyed the gospel early in life, and devoted the remainder of life to him who died for her. During the last few months of her life her body was frail and she suffered much with a disease beyond the control of earthly physicians. All was done that loving hands could do, but all in vain. But we understand that she is not dead in reality, but has just passed over to that sweet land to await our coming, where there is no more parting, nor sad farewells.

Her parting words show that she was faithful to the end. She said, "I am willing and prepared to go and I am going to a better place, don't shed any tears for me."

Oh, how sad it is for us to have to give her up, but if it was the Lord's will, we are willing for her to go and we only say farewell for a while. May the Lord help us to so live, that we can finally meet and be with her forevermore in Heaven.

There is one sweet face vanished, one sweet voice we hear no more, for the hand of death has banished; the family chain is again broken; the golden link now waits above; hard, so hard to leave a tender token of a father's keeping love; let us all through faith in Jesus, and the life through Him that's given, join the blessed links up yonder and make that chain complete in Heaven.

Blessed or the dead which lie in the Lord from hence forth yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works, do follow them. (Rev. 14:13.)

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his Saints." (Ps. 116:15)

May the Lord help us to so live that we can be with her where troubles never enter, and partings are no more.

THE SILVER KINGS

"I am Silver King," the great polar bear, and I don't care who knows it," said the polar bear, waving his enormous head about and moving it up and down.

"And I am Mrs. Silver King," said his mate in the next den.

"I came from the cold north country, where I used to swim through the ice and break it away as I swam," said Silver King.

"During the past summer the keeper had to give me ice to keep me cool.

"I am never cold but I am often too warm.

"I can't understand creatures who complain of the cold. I can only understand those who complain of the heat."

"I agree with you," said Mrs. Silver King, "but many people complained of the heat this summer."

"That's so," said Silver King, "but in winter they complain of the cold, too, and I never do that."

"Neither do I," said Mrs. Silver King.

"When you talk of your days up North, breaking the ice and swimming through the coldest of cold water, you must remember that I have a better story to tell.

"I go through the icy water too.

"I Agree With You," Said Mrs. Silver King.

and I break the ice, but more than that—the little cubs do the same.

"Right through the cold water they swim, breaking the ice as they go along.

"They're regular little polar bears, they are."

"We're the only two of our kind here, aren't we?" asked Silver King.

"I believe so," said Mrs. Silver King.

"I fancy the keeper is glad there are no more of our kind here because we are so cross.

"We will not be made pets of, as some of the other bears will.

"No, we are cross and wild.

"We are used to breaking the ice and living where it is cold, and we don't like soft words, and petting.

"Creatures who follow the ice wherever it goes aren't going to be friendly with ordinary people.

"No indeed," and Mrs. Silver King swung her head as she growled.

Just then the keeper gave them some bread and also some more ice, for they loved it so much.

"He's good to us," said Silver King. "He used to do that so much when it was so terribly hot in the summer.

"He did all he could to help us.

"But just the same I wouldn't be any too nice to him. I don't believe in spoiling anyone, I don't.

"Neither do I," said the savage Mrs. Silver King.

"I wouldn't let the ice get the better of me and I'm going to show I'm a hard, stern, wild bear wherever I may be."

"The right spirit," agreed Silver King.

"The right polar bear spirit," he added as he swung his head from side to side, swaying it a little, too.

The keeper spoke to someone who was watching them.

"They're a cross pair but I feel sorry for them, away from their beloved north and the ice and the cold.

"Sometimes a pair of polar bears are a little more friendly than these two.

"These two are very wild.

"But think what the heat of a summer must be to them, accustomed to the coldest north, when even we feel the heat as we do!

"I feel sorry for them and understand that it's none too easy for them."

Practicing New Yells

Dick's baby brother was a cry-baby, but Dick thought he was great and wouldn't let anyone say a thing against him.

One day Tommy, his playmate, said: "That baby brother of yours cries all the time."

"He's not crying," retorted Dick; "he's just practicing a few yells, 'cause he's going to be a baseball fan."

All There Was Left

For easy acceptance of things a trifle unusual it is hard to beat the small boy looking at the bust of his late grandfather—the bust mounted on a little circular stand. Having asked his mother if his grandpa was very wise and good, he added: "And was that all there was of grandpapa?"—New York Evening Post.

BOTH PRETTY AND PRACTICAL; FINE KID SHOES IN STYLE

A LITTLE journey in quest of new lingerie is a delight—it is a little journey in quest of new finery and discloses how far underthings and negligees have come in the direction of colorfulness and daintiness. They have reached the end of the trail; for the sheerest of materials and the daintiest of adornments are used in many of these intimate garments. In all of them style and color have become as important as materials and durability and—whatever materials may be—two styles are shown, either tailored or lace-trimmed garments.

One of the New Models.

In silk fabrics crepe de chine maintains its lead, followed by radium, crepe-back satin, silk muslin, fancy weaves and georgette or chiffon—in which the pinnacle of daintiness is reached. The list of cottons is long, beginning with soft, fine batiste and including nainsook, mercerized and fancy weaves, broadcloth, pajama cloth, cotton crepe and fine voile, which last is a worthy rival of chiffon or georgette. As for colors, all pastel shades are represented, but peach, pink, maize and orchid are the favorites. In voile undergarments, two-color combinations are popular and these colors are used with blue or green in light shades. Recently, for sports wear, women have been calling for cotton athletic suits in white, but that is another story.

The main demand is for garments that are both practical and pretty and a candidate for consideration among pajama suits is shown here. It is made of cotton crepe, finished with frills of net, has a slip-on jacket and much pretty style. It is recommended to the traveler or tourist, as crepe is the easiest of fabrics to launder and does not have to be ironed. Cotton broadcloth is another good choice for the pajama suit. Some of the attractive new models are in plain color bordered with a striped pattern, or are made with striped slip-on jackets and plain trousers finished with striped cuffs.

"In silk attire my lady goes"—if she can get it—all around the world. At any rate she will have the sheen of silk, and she can get that in many beautiful fabrics that owe small thanks to the silkworm. This industrious little artisan might work overtime and build himself a cocoon of twice the usual size without keeping up with the demand for his product—for women everywhere have made up their minds to wear silken things—and are wearing them from top to toe and from inside out.

Once upon a time, they say, women were expected to acquire a pair of silk stockings for their wedding and to treasure these ever after—for their funerals. But every one has forgotten that time and now there is none so poor as to go silk stockingless. Shoes must answer the requirements of a taste grown most fastidious and they have done more than keep apace with the trend of styles—they have helped set the pace and are as carefully selected and as important as headwear. Current styles in them are endlessly varied, sufficiently conservative and above all, they are also flattering to the feet.

Clad in a satin-striped crepe or perhaps a rayon material that outrivals the silk fabric, the pretty model pictured here regards her foot covering with deep satisfaction. She is wearing black kid shoes piped in white kid and designed with a new diagonal instep strap. She might have chosen with equal success, the handsome one-strap slippers of black kid, trimmed with white kid, as pictured in the inset, or a plain white kid slipper. But for sheer becomingness, fine style and ease, she has made a good selection which may be worn with any afternoon frock.

There never were more attractive styles within the memory of the oldest fashion reporter than those that will go on record as popular in 1925. This is particularly true of footwear which may be selected to play up to any sort of toilette for any sort of wear. Special shoes are made for sports wear, for street, afternoon and evening, but it is nevertheless not necessary to be extravagant in buying. Styles are not freakish, but conservative, and women of limited incomes are safe in buying graceful, soft-kid pumps in plain designs for general wear.

SEASONABLE GOOD THINGS

Just a plain apple pie is hard to beat for deliciousness, and if served with a bit of whipped cream stirred with grated cheese, is a delectable dessert. Apple pie a la mode is so well-liked and common that it need not be mentioned, yet any pie of fruit is especially good with a spoonful of ice cream. Try it on blueberry, it is superlatively good.

Tomato Cocktails.—Prepare six peppers by cutting off the stem end; remove the seeds and the white fiber. Peel four tomatoes, cut into halves and squeeze out the seeds; chop one onion fine, put in a small cloth, tie and wash, wringing out dry. Cut the tomatoes into cubes, add the onion and seasoning, fill the peppers and add French dressing. Dust the top with chopped parsley and serve.

Fish Pudding.—Free the fish from skin and bones and flake with a fork; there should be enough to fill a quart dish lightly pressed down. Make a soft custard with a pint of milk and the yolks of six eggs; while warm stir in one-fourth cupful of butter, salt, pepper and a tablespoonful of worcestershire sauce or anchovy paste softened with a little hot water, and two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice. Pour into a baking dish after mixing well with the fish and bake in a slow oven. Any cooked fish can be used for this dish, but a steamed or boiled fish is especially good.

Creamed Eggs With Onion.—Fry two sliced onions in butter, but do not brown. Stir in one cupful of milk or cream and two tablespoonfuls of flour rubbed to a paste with a little of the cream. Season with salt, pepper, a bit of nutmeg, and when thick add eight hard-cooked eggs sliced. Heat thoroughly and serve at once.

Mexican Eggs.—Split three green peppers lengthwise and take out the seeds. Fry two minutes in very hot butter. Cook six thin slices of ham, place on buttered toast, lay the peppers over the ham and put a poached egg on each slice.

Good Things to Eat.

The early apples are in the market, delicious, juicy and healthful. For a dinner dish to serve with steak try the first green apples from the Duchess tree. Cut them after washing into thin slices, leaving the peeling unremoved. Add a few slices of onion and place in a frying pan with a little sugar, salt and pepper to give additional flavor.

Before the Duchess apple is ripe is the time to can a few for winter use. The flavor is much more delicious for sauce or pie. Canned without sugar, the fruit may be reheated with sugar and a bit of butter added and you have a dish of apple sauce which tastes like the fresh apple.

Roll Jelly Cake.—This is a cake, when well made, everybody asks for again. Take three eggs, beat very light, add one cupful of sugar, a pinch of salt and two tablespoonfuls of baking powder sifted with one cupful of flour. Bake in a dripping pan in a moderate oven. Grease the pan and when the cake is done turn out on a towel wrung out of cold water. If the edges are crisp trim them before rolling.

Mark Where German Invasion Was Halted

Two hundred and forty granite landmarks stretching from the Swiss frontier to the sea-coast of Belgium indicate the limit of the German advance in the World war.

Seven of these are in the Ypres salient, and the Ypres league, at the invitation of the Belgian government, provided the stones. They are four feet high, and each is surmounted by a carved representation of the "tin hat." On each is inscribed in English, French and Flemish the phrase: "Here the invader was brought to a standstill."

The league has also erected 40 landmarks on sites which became famous during the fighting in Flanders. Each is an iron post bearing the name by which the place was known to the troops engaged. Some of the names which have become immortal, like "Sanctuary Wood" and "Kitchener Wood," have a curious origin. The latter has no connection with the name of the great field marshal, but is a soldier's translation of its real name, Bois de Cuisinier.

The former owes its strange title to the fact that when, in October, 1914, General Bulfin had collected there a number of small parties and stragglers, he issued an order that they "were in sanctuary and not to be employed, except by his instructions." The soldiers came to the natural conclusion that they were in Sanctuary wood.

THE EPISTLE OF JAMES

LESSON TEXT—Jas. 1:19-27

GOLDEN TEXT—Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only.—Jas. 1:22.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Loving and obeying.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Be Ye Doers of the Word.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Doers of the Word.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Religion According to James.

The book of James was written to Jewish Christians scattered abroad who were passing through sore trials and persecutions. The pre-eminent aim was to show these humble believers how to live in such trying times. James recognized the difficulties of Christian living resulting from the attitude of the unbelieving Jews, and knew also the added difficulties of pride, jealousy and cowardly compromises which might spring up within. He showed that all these must be met with the realities which inhere in the religion of Jesus Christ.

I. Receiving the Engrafted Word (vv. 19-21).

1. What Is the Engrafted Word?

"Engrafted" means implanted. In verse 18 he speaks of having been begotten by the Word. The figure is that of a planting of the seeds of truth. The Christian doctrines as contained in the Word, when quickened by the Holy Spirit result in regeneration. The divine method of regeneration is the preaching of God's word made living and active by the Holy Spirit.

2. How the Word Is Received (v. 19).

(1) "Be swift to hear." This means to be ready and eager to use every opportunity to get acquainted with God's word.

Obedience to this injunction will make one diligent in the reading of the Bible, and in attendance at the church services where the Word of God is being taught.

(2) "Slow to speak." From what follows we infer that this refers to religious controversies. It means that whether in the places of worship or in whatever circumstances, we should give respect and thoughtful attention to what our Christian brethren are saying.

(3) "Slow to wrath." Heated discussions sometimes develop in our conferences, even when we gather to consider the doctrines of God's word. Sometimes one may even fancy that anger is justifiable. In such cases we should remember the injunction, be slow to wrath.

3. The Reason for Receiving the Word (vv. 20-21).

"The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God." Angry debating among Christians never helped to make known God's righteousness. Man's anger springs out of the fountain of his depravity. Therefore its expression can only have a blighting effect upon those who listen, and even upon the speaker in its reaction upon him.

II. Coming Into Self-Knowledge (vv. 22-25).

Receiving the engrafted Word through swiftness to hear and obeying its holy precepts will result in that experimental knowledge of one's self which brings true blessing. By "doers of the Word," is meant those who make obedience their habitual attitude.

The truths of God's word will permeate their very life and be expressed in everything they do and say. Those who hear and do not obey are self-deceived. Those who go through the form of religion without coming under its power are likened to men who gaze into the mirror beholding the natural face, and then go away and forget how they look.

III. Pure Religion (vv. 26-27).

This means that those who have become doers of the Word will in their outer lives manifest the following traits:

1. Bridling the Tongue (v. 26).

This means that they will speak with discretion. God gave man two ears and but one tongue. The ears are exposed, but the tongue is walled in by the teeth. Just as the tongue reveals the condition of the physical system, so the use of the tongue reveals the religious condition.

2. Sympathizing With and Helping Those in Need (v. 27).

The widow and orphan are the symbols of helplessness and need. Those who have true piety will visit such and render the necessary aid.

3. Keeping Himself Unspotted From the World (v. 27).

The one who has the true life will separate himself from the world.

"'I—I don't want Featherstonhaugh but——'

"'Dear Featherstonhaugh,' groaned the girl, 'I wish you'd make up your mind. Other queens have sometimes had to wait years before they got their kings, but I've been here only a week and I've had offers after offers.'"—Detroit Free Press.

WOMAN SO ILL WASHED DISHES SITTING DOWN

Mrs. Ashcroft's Remarkable Recovery After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Covington, Ky.—"I was so weak and nervous I could hardly do my housework so I could not stand because of the bearing-down pains in my back and abdomen. I sat down most of the time and did what I could do in that way—as washing dishes, etc. One day a book describing Lydia E. Pinkham's medicines was put in my mail-box. I saw how the Vegetable Compound had helped others so I gave it a trial. I had to take about a dozen bottles before I gained my strength but I certainly praise this medicine. Then I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood medicine for poor blood. I was cold all the time. I would be so cold I could hardly sit still and in the palms of my hands there would be drops of sweat. I also used the Sanative Wash and I recommend it also. You may publish this letter and I will gladly answer letters from women and advise my neighbors about these medicines."—Mrs. HARRY ASHCROFT, 632 Beech Avenue, Covington, Kentucky.

German Dairies

A good market in Germany for American Holstein dairy sires of good milk-production ancestry is reported by the United States Department of Agriculture. There were 18,400,000 cows in Germany before the war, but only 17,200,000 in 1924. This reduction, coincident with an increased demand for dairy products, resulted in imports of 118,000,000 pounds of butter and 95,000,000 pounds of cheese in 1924, as compared with pre-war imports of 111,000,000 pounds of butter and 47,000,000 pounds of cheese.

Use of Power on Farms, Big Item

Agricultural Worker Able to Till Three Times as Many Acres.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

As a result of the increased use of power and labor-saving machinery in farming operations and the opening of new lands well suited to the use of machinery the average agricultural worker in the United States is now able to care for almost three times as many acres of crops as an individual could handle 75 years ago, according to a study recently made by the division of agricultural engineering of the United States Department of Agriculture. At the same time the hours of labor on the farm have been reduced and farmers have been relieved of much of the monotony and drudgery which formerly characterized their work.

Power and labor together account for approximately 60 per cent of the total cost of farming and a better knowledge of the power requirements of farm operations and the adoption of more efficient types of power units will do much to cut down production costs.

Second Only to Railroads.

The primary horse power available for use on farms is greater than that used in mining and manufacturing, and is second only to that required for railroads. The total power used annually on farms amounts to nearly 16,000,000,000 horse-power hours and the annual cost amounts to a total of nearly $3,000,000,000.

Up to the present little scientific study has been made of the basic power requirements of various farm operations. Although the plow is one of the oldest agricultural tools for which power is required, the fundamental requirements of plow design are still unknown and no satisfactory method of measuring the actual work done by a plow has yet been discovered. The University of Wisconsin has conducted experiments which show that it is possible to run an ensilage cutter with one-half the power ordinarily used by this machine simply by employing proper speeds and an improved blower.

Farm power is derived from animals, gas engines, (including tractors, trucks and automobiles) steam engines and electric, wind and water motors. Up to about sixty years ago little power other than that furnished by animals was available to farmers. The small gas tractor, the truck, the automobile and electric power have only become important as sources of farm power within the last ten or twelve years.

The estimated total numbers of power units now on farms in the United States is as follows:

Horses	15,918,000
Mules	4,654,000
Oxen	200,000
Tractors	450,000
Trucks	350,000
Stationary engines	2,500,000
Electric installations	500,000
Windmills	1,000,000
Automobiles	4,500,000

Great opportunities exist for the cutting down of the cost of farm operations through the reduction in the labor requirements of each operation and by a better application of the power used. Before such savings can be effected, however, it is necessary to make a thorough study of the basic power requirements, and of the factors which affect these requirements. Among these are: Climate, character of the soil, depth of plowing, cultivating, etc.; condition of the crop, size of fields, size and type of power units needed and mechanical efficiency of the tools or machines employed by the farmer.

Topography a Factor.

Topography is a factor to be reckoned with in considering the power requirements of farms in any particular locality. In the Central West the land generally is smooth and is not cut by many streams or ravines. This condition encourages the laying out of large fields and makes possible the use of large machines and power units. In Eastern and Southern states, however, the land is frequently hilly and cut by ravines and streams making small and irregular-shaped fields necessary. This, of course, discourages the use of large machines and results in a predominance of small farms.

Probably the most serious drawback to the efficient use of power in agriculture is the extreme seasonal demand. In each type of farming followed there is usually some single operation which requires a large amount of power for a limited time and it is usually this operation which determines the minimum amount of primary power that must be available. In the corn or cotton belt the operation requiring the maximum power is that of planting or cultivating—in hay or small grain it is harvesting. Such conditions result in what is termed a low-power load factor and a high cost per unit of power utilized. The peak load could frequently be reduced by reducing the acreage of the crop which requires this power, but as a rule the farmer is justified in retaining such a high acreage of the crop in question because of the relatively high net returns which may more than offset the higher cost of power used in this operation.

Other factors which have an important effect on the efficiency of farm power are the diversity of operations and the small power unit commonly employed under the control of one worker.

Soy-Bean Dealer Is in Jail for Fraud

He Delivered Tarheel Black Instead of Otootan.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Because he thought that farmers "don't know beans," a certain exploiter of soy-bean seed is now revising his opinion while serving a term in the penitentiary for violation of the postal fraud law. Some farmers "do know beans," and when some of these better-posted soy-bean growers recently received shipments of Tarheel Black instead of the Otootan which they had ordered, the matter was called to the attention of the Post Office department and the United States Department of Agriculture.

Investigation by the post office officials disclosed the fact that this lone operator was advertising the higher-priced variety, Otootan, for sale at about one-half the regular market value and doing a tremendous business. His plan called for no shipment of beans of any variety until the customer became insistent, and then he substituted the cheaper Tarheel Black. He was brought to trial and convicted of fraudulent use of the mails. Because of the high prices of the Otootan and Laredo varieties there has been considerable substitution of the cheaper black varieties, such as Wilson, Ebony or Black Beauty, Peking and Tarheel Black.

The moral in this little story is not only to know soy-bean varieties, but to buy soy-bean seed from reliable and established seedsmen or growers, and beware of "cheap seed." There are others still at large ready to exploit the farmer's inability to identify the numerous varieties of soy beans. The prospective purchaser of seed should obtain samples before buying, and if not sure of the identity of the seed should consult the county agent or the state agricultural college. Be sure you are getting the variety desired and not some cheap substitute.

Orchard Fertility Is Discussed in Bulletin

"Fertility in the Apple Orchard" is the title of a new bulletin just issued by the agricultural experiment station at the Pennsylvania State college. It is prepared by Profs. R. D. Anthony and J. H. Waring, and is the result of many years' experimenting with apple trees in both the cultivated and sod type of orchard. Copies of the bulletin may be secured free by writing to the Agricultural Publications Offices at State College, Pa.

On most Pennsylvania farms the apple orchard is of the sod type, that is, grass or clover is allowed to grow about the trees. It is pointed out in the bulletin that general rules seem to have more exceptions in fruit growing than in most branches of agriculture. With this in mind, the State college pomologists summarize fertility practices in the sod orchard as follows:

"In the mature sod orchard from five to ten pounds of nitrate of soda or its equivalent should be broadcast over the square in which the tree stands, two or three weeks before the blossom buds break. If a leguminous sod is used, cut this application in half. If the sod shows any response to acid phosphate, use it regularly, one or two pounds with each pound of nitrate. Build up thin spots by the use of manure.

"Cut the grass a little earlier than it would be cut for hay, before seeds have matured, and let it lie in the swath. Do not pasture the grass. In dry seasons advance the time of cutting to decrease the water loss. If mice are present throw the dirt away from the trunks and fill the holes and mound up around the trunks with coal ashes. Also, poison the mice. Keep the leaves healthy by spraying and the trees properly opened by pruning."

Railroad Securities
play an important part in University Endowments

Nearly one hundred and fifty million dollars' worth of steam railroad stocks and bonds are held by American educational institutions, seventy-five of our leading colleges and technical schools have been endowed with these securities. Statistics also show that these investments represent practically thirty percent of the productive holdings of these colleges. Thus it will be seen that the education of the youth of this country, to a very large part, depends upon the continued success of railroad operations.

Louisville & Nashville Railroad Securities are held by many thousands of owners—in all walks of life and in all parts of the territory it serves.

The railroads must operate at a profit in order to meet those bonds and pay dividends on this stock. Think of this when you can say a good word for the railroads of the United States—when you can give them your patronage. Judged from the standpoints of efficiency of operation and moderation of charges—there is no transportation system in all the world to equal the modern American railroad.

Showers of blessings have been falling of late.

It's all over and they didn't make a monkey out of William J. Bryan.

The government report on the cotton crop last Thursday made the fleecy staple take a jump in price.

The recent showers came too late for summer gardens, but my how rutabagas and other turnips will come now.

Watermelons are plentiful and the price is reasonable. The variety is all right and we are living up to our reputation of a watermelon today calls for one tomorrow.

Our neighbor to the north, Calera, is still hoping for great things in the near future, and she has progressive men who will put them over if they get a chance.

Our correspondents are urged to send in any news from their community, and if they want postage and paper just holler? The more the merrier. Let's make the News the best paper ever. It's up to you.

If you take a notion that you want to pay your subscription with produce, trot it in. We firmly believe in reciprocity. Anything from okra to green corn on the cob, and we're not hoggish either.

Senatorial candidates are beginning to put their feelers out to the dear people, and ere long they will be on the stump. It has so far overshadowed the talk of candidates for governor. It is early anyhow, and the people need the rest.

Congressman Oliver of Tuscaloosa, is fishing around very close to the political senatorial river, and prospects are now that he will be splashing Messrs. Kilby, Bankhead, Black, Mayfield and others. The more the merrier, for if a voter don't like one he has several to pick from.

A crowd of Montgomery business men the other day were reminiscent on a fine dinner at an Odd Fellow gathering in Cooper several years ago. The writer didn't live here at that time, but we want to say again that it pays to advertise, and a good deed lives long after the doer has vanished.

Clanton churches hold open door to evbryone who may be in Clanton at any time. They make their services pleasant and entertaining, and during the hot season the churches are well situated for ventilation, and one can keep very comfortable at either. Attend service next Sunday.

We bought a suit of summer clothes for $4.98 about a month ago. We saw the same next day in another store for $4.95. The season being further advanced last week we saw them labelled $3.50 in another window. Next day the store we bought from had them marked down to $2.50. Now, who's the fish, the merchant or me. We pass the buck.

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN

With the death of William Jennings Bryan last Sunday comes the sad realization to all that in his passing the United States has lost its first citizen, the world has lost a true friend, and Christianity has lost an apostle that has never been daunted by the obstacles thrown in his way.

He has been abused by unbelievers more severely than any man of modern time. The opposition has thrown coals of fire upon his head, literally, and the crown of thorns has been wished upon him, but through it all he has stood like the Apostle Paul, undaunted by those who opposed him, but preaching the true gospel of the lowly Nazarene.

Mr. Bryan in his active political life was as fearless as in his spiritual life; in fact he linked them both together. As the standard bearer of the democratic party in 1896, 1900 and 1908, he stood out as the one man with the respect of the country, in one of which races he polled more than a million votes over the winner.

At each succeeding convention of his party Mr. Bryan has always been found with the common people. He was never found with big business and he was never found with any element in his own party who always were ready to use the party for selfish interests. To him Woodrow Wilson owed his elevation to the presidency of the United States, more than to any other, and but for Bryan's efforts, he doubtless would never have been nominated. To him possibly more than to any other we owe the present temperance laws, and to him more than to any other the Protestant religion has been kept purged from the enemies from within to where they have been unable to make headway to disintegrate it, or shake the faith.

In his death, not the democrats, not the Protestants, have lost, but those who have seen fit to ridicule and bemean him. We don't believe there is a man who deep down in his heart, believed Mr. Bryan ever had any desire but to do the right thing. Those who have fought our Christianity, those who have sought to control, shall we say, Bryan's party, for ulterior motives, and those organizations who continue to fasten their tenacles about the throat of his party, are the ones who have lost.

Washington gave us freedom, Lincoln gave us our union; and who can but say that the brotherly love and right teaching of Bryan will not be the guiding star that will moor our ship into the peaceful harbor, where the weary find rest. Let us hope.

We have just got to boast a little, and now's a good time to do it. We have not been here long and do not know, but we believe that for June and July, there has been a greater percentage of the business men of Clanton advertising in the News that in any other town in Alabama. And we want our readers to do this: tell them you saw their ad, and that when they have anything special to offer, tell them you'll be looking for it each week. They have got the goods, too, and priced right. Even Miles Benjamin Arant, our watchmaker and telegraph operator says he can fix your watch so you can tell the time, regardless of whether the sun or earth turns, and although he doesn't believe in evolution, if you want your match monkeyed with he's ready.

He decided to have it out. "Listen, mother. There are a lot of different crowds at the U, see? And Mattie doesn't belong to any of 'em. You wouldn't understand, but it's like this. She—she's smart and jolly and everything, but she just doesn't belong. Being friends with a girl like that doesn't get you anywhere. Besides, she isn't a girl. She's a middle-aged woman, when you come to think of it."

"Doesn't get you anywhere!" Selina's tone was cool and even. Then as the boy's gaze did not meet hers: "Why, Dirk DeJong, Mattie Schwengauer is one of my reasons for sending you to a university. She's what I call part of a university education. Just talking to her is learning something valuable. I don't mean that you wouldn't naturally prefer pretty young girls of your own age to go around with, and all. It would be queer if you didn't. But this Mattie—why, she's life. Do you remember that story of when she washed dishes in the kosher restaurant over on Twelfth street and the proprietor used to rent out dishes and cutlery for Irish and Italian neighborhood weddings where they had pork and goodness knows what all, and then use them next day in the restaurant, again for the kosher customers?"

Selina wrote Mattie, inviting her to the farm for Thanksgiving, and Mattie answered gratefully, declining. "I shall always remember you," she wrote in that letter, "with love."

Chapter XI

Throughout Dirk's Freshman year there were, for him, no heartening, informal, mellow talks before the wood-fire in the book-lined study of some professor whose wisdom was such a mixture of classic lore and modernism as to be an inspiration to his listeners. Midwest professors delivered their lectures in the classroom as they had been delivering them in the past ten or twenty years and as they would deliver them until death or a trustees' meeting should remove them. The younger professors and instructors in natty gray suits and brightly colored ties made a point of being unpedantic in the classroom and rather overdid it. They posed as being one of the fellows; would dashingly use a bit of slang to create a laugh from the boys and an adoring titter from the girls. Dirk somehow preferred the pedants to these. When these had to give an informal talk to the men before some university event they would start by saying, "Now listen, fellahs—" At the dances they were not above "rushing" the pretty coeds.

Two of Dirk's classes were conducted by women professors. They were well on toward middle age, or past it; desiccated women. Only their eyes were alive. Their clothes were of some indefinite dark stuff, brown or drab-gray; their hair lifeless; their hands long, bony, unvital. They had seen classes and classes and classes. A roomful of fresh young faces that appeared briefly only to be replaced by another roomful of fresh young faces like round white pencil marks manipulated momentarily on a slate, only to be sponged off to give way to other round white marks. Of the two women one—the elder—was occasionally likely to flare into sudden life; a flame in the ashes of a burned-out grate. She had humor and a certain caustic wit, qualities that had managed miraculously to survive even the deadly and numbing effects of thirty years in the classroom. A fine mind, and inoclastic, hampered by the restrictions of a conventional community and the soul of a congenital spinster.

Under the guidance of these Dirk chafed and grew restless. Miss Euphemia Hollingswood had a way of emphasizing every third or fifth syllable, bringing her voice down hard on it.

He found himself waiting for that emphasis and shrinking from it as from a sledge-hammer blow. It hurt his head.

Miss Lodge droned. She approached a word with a maddening uh-uh-uh-uh. In the uh-uh-uh-uh face of the uh-uh-uh-uh geometrical situation of the uh-uh-uh-uh—

He shifted restlessly in his chair, found his hands clenched into fists, and took refuge in watching the shadow cast by an oak branch outside the window on a patch of sunlight against the blackboard behind her.

During the early spring Dirk and Selina talked things over again, seated before their own fireplace in the High Prairie farmhouse. Selina had had that fireplace built five years before and her love of it amounted to worship. She had it lighted always on winter evenings and in the spring when the nights were sharp. In Dirk's absence she would sit before it at night long after the rest of the weary household had gone to bed. High Prairie never knew how many guests Selina entertained there before her fire those winter evenings—old friends and new. So big was there, the plump earth-grimed baby who rolled and tumbled in the fields while his young mother wiped the sweat from her face to look at him with fond eyes. Dirk DeJong of ten years hence was there. Simeon Peake, dapper, soft-spoken, ironic, in his shiny boots and his hat always a little on one side. Pervus DeJong, a blue-shirted giant with strong tender hands and little fine golden hairs on the backs of them. In strange contrast to these was the patient, tireless figure of Maartje Pool standing in the doorway of Roelf's little shed, her arms tucked in her apron for warmth. "You make fun, huh?" she said, wistfully, "you and Roelf. You make fun." And Roelf, the dark vivid boy, misunderstood. Roelf, the genius. He was always one of the company.

Oh, Selina DeJong never was lonely on these winter evenings before her fire.

She and Dirk sat there one fine sharp evening in early April. It was Saturday. Of late Dirk had not always come to the farm for the week-end. Eugene and Paula Arnold had been home for the Easter holidays. Julie Arnold had invited Dirk to the gay parties at the Prairie avenue house. He had even spent two entire week-ends there. After the bronzed luxury of the Prairie avenue house his farm bedroom seemed almost startlingly stark and bare.

Selina frankly enjoyed Dirk's somewhat fragmentary accounts of these visits; extracted from them as much vicarious pleasure as he had had in the reality—more, probably.

"Now, tell me what you had to eat," she would say, sociably, like a child. "What did you have for dinner, for example? Was it grand? Julie tells me they have a butler now. Well I can't wait til I hear Aug Hempel on the subject."

He would tell her of the grandeurs of the Arnold menage. She would interrupt and exclaim: "Mayonnaise! On fruit! Oh, I don't believe I'd like that. You did! Well, I'll have it for you next week when you come home. I'll get the recipe from Julie."

He didn't think he'd be home next week. One of the fellows he'd met at the Arnolds' had invited him to their place out north, on the lake. He had a boat.

"That'll be lovely!" Selina exclaimed, after an almost unnoticeable moment of silence—silence with panic in it. "I'll try not to fuss and be worried like an old hen every minute of the time I think you're on the water. . . . Now, do go on, Sobig. First fruit with mayonnaise, h'm? What kind of soup?"

He was not a naturally talkative person. There was nothing surly about his silence. It was a taciturn streak inherited from his Dutch ancestry. This time, though, he was more voluble than usual. "Paula . . ." came again and again into his conversation. "Paula . . . Paula . . ." and again ". . . Paula." He did not seem conscious of the repetition, but Selina's quick ear caught it.

"I haven't seen her," Selina said, "since she went away to school the first year. She must be—let's see—she's a year older than you are. She's nineteen going on twenty. Last time I saw her I thought she was a dark scrawny little thing. Too bad she didn't inherit Julie's lovely gold coloring and good looks, instead of Eugene, who doesn't need 'em."

"She isn't!" said Dirk, hotly. "She's dark and slim and sort of—uh—sensuous"—Selina started visibly, and raised her hand quickly to her mouth to hide a smile—"like Cleopatra. Her eyes are big and kind of slanting—not squinty I don't mean, but slanting up a little at the corners. Cut out, kind of, so that they look bigger than most people's."

"My eyes used to be considered rather fine," said Selina, mischievously; but he did not hear.

"She makes all the other girls look sort of blowzy." He was silent a moment. Selina was silent, too, and it was not a happy silence. Dirk spoke again, suddenly, as though continuing aloud a train of thought, "—all but her hands."

Selina made her voice sound natural, not sharply inquisitive. "What's the matter with her hands, Dirk?"

He pondered a moment, his brows knitted. At last, slowly, "Well, I don't know. They're brown, and awfully thin and sort of—grabby. I mean it makes me nervous to watch them. And when the rest of her is cool they're hot when you touch them."

He looked at his mother's hands that were busy with some sewing. The stuff on which she was working was a bit of satin ribbon; part of a hood intended to grace the head of Geertje Pool Vander Slide's second baby. She had difficulty in keeping her rough fingers from catching on the soft surface of the satin. Manual work, water, sun, and wind had tanned those hands, hardened them, enlarged the knuckles, spread them, roughened them. Yet how sure they were, and strong, and cool and reliable—and tender. Suddenly, looking at them, Dirk said, "Now your hands. I love your hands, Mother."

She put down her work hastily, yet quietly, so that the sudden rush of happy grateful tears in her eyes should not sully the pink satin ribbon. She was flushed, like a girl. "Do you, Sobig?" she said.

After a moment she took up her sewing again. Her face looked young, eager, fresh, like the face of the girl who had found cabbages so beautiful that night when she bounced along the rutty Halsted road with Klaas Pool, many years ago. It came into her face, that look, when she was happy, exhilarated, excited. That was why those who loved her and brought that look into her face thought her beautiful, while those who did not love her never saw the look and consequently considered her a plain woman.

There was another silence between the two. Then: "Mother, what would you think of my going east next fall, to take a course in architecture?"

"Would you like that, Dirk?"

"Yes, I think so—yes."

"Then I'd like it better than anything in the world. I—it makes me happy just to think of it."

"It would—cost an awful lot."

"I'll manage. I'll manage. . . . What made you decide on architecture?"

"I don't know, exactly. The new buildings at the university—Gothic, you know—are such a contrast to the old. Then Paula and I were talking the other day. She hates their house on Prairie—terrible old lumpy gray stone pile, with the black of the L. C. trains all over it. She wants her father to build north—an Italian villa or French chateau. Something of that sort. So many of her friends are moving to the North shore, away from these hideous South-side and North-side Chicago houses with their stoops, and their bay windows, and their terrible turrets. Ugh!"

"Well, now, do you know," Selina remonstrated mildly, "I like 'em. I suppose I'm wrong, but to me they seem sort of natural and solid and unpretentious, like the clothes that old August Hempel wears, so squarecut and baggy. Those houses look dignified to me, and fitting. They may be ugly—probably are—but, anyway, they're not ridiculous. They have a certain rugged grandeur. They're Chicago. Those French and Italian gimcracky things they—they're incongruous. It's as if Abraham Lincoln were to appear suddenly in pink satin knee breeches and buckled shoes, and lace ruffles at his wrists."

Dirk could laugh at that picture. But he protested, too. "But there's no native architecture, so what's to be done! You wouldn't call those smoke-blackened old stone and brick piles with their iron fences and their conservatories and cupolas and gingerbread exactly native, would you?"

Arabian Dancing Girls

"The Arabian dancing girls," a traveler explains, "are born to their profession. Many of them had dancing mothers. Others are dedicated to the profession by their mothers when they are but babies. While there are no dancing schools, these children practice continually, imitating from earliest childhood the artistic movements of the dancers, until they are highly skilled in it themselves.

"Unlike the other Arab women, these dancing girls appear with their faces uncovered. They wear heavy and voluminous skirts, like old-fashioned European dresses. They are frequently very plain, decorated only by the bangles and chains. While the girls are no more beautiful than other girls, they have exceeding charm, which makes them very delightful."

Greeks and Paint

The Greeks recognized the value of paint as a preservative and made use of something akin to it on their ships. Pliny writes of the mode of boiling wax and painting ships with it, after which, he continues, "neither the sea nor the wind, nor the sun can destroy the wood thus protected."

The Romans, being essentially a warlike people, never brought the decoration of buildings to the high point it had reached with the Greeks. For all that the ruins of Pompeii show many structures whose mural decorations are in fair shape today. The colors used were glaring; a black background was the usual one, and the combinations worked thereon were red, yellow and blue.

POULTRY FACTS

CURE BROODINESS IN OPEN YARD IS BEST

As the hatching season is ended the problem of broody hens will be confronting most poultry raisers for the following months.

Numerous methods have been advocated from time to time for handling broody hens. Almost every one in any neighborhood has a pet plan for breaking the hens of this condition, which is guaranteed to work. Many of these are founded on sense and will give results, while a good many are founded on abuse of the hens, which should not be practiced.

One favorite methods we used to have on the farm was to dip the hens in a tub filled with water, says a writer in the Michigan Farmer. We kept them under the water just as long as we dared without drowning them. This was supposed to scare the hen so badly that she forgot about wanting to set. Sometimes it worked and sometimes it didn't. When it didn't, something else had to be tried. The broody trait of hens is not a "notion" but a natural condition in response to natural laws. The longer the hens are tolerated in this condition, the longer it will be before they return to laying and the less the profit realized from the investment.

It is foolish to think that mistreatment and abuse which breaks up the tendency is a wise one. One idea sometimes used was to starve the hens when they became broody in order to break them up and get them back to laying. We now know that this was the exact opposite to what we should have done in order to encourage early laying. What is advisable is to feed the hens liberally on a good egg ration which would within a few days have induced the hens to lay. Once laying is resumed the broody trait will disappear.

The open-yard method of breaking up broody hens is one of the most humane treatments we can give the fowls and is also most productive of results. The method is simple. A small area is fenced off in a grassy and shady corner in which a box is placed for protection in bad weather. The hens are turned loose in this yard and plenty of fresh water and feed is given, and as a rule the broodiness ceases in a short time.

Slatted and wire mesh coops indoors or out work fairly well when the bird is caught in time, but in warm weather do not give satisfaction. According to my judgment, the best method for curing broodiness is the open yard. There is less expense, work and trouble involved in this plan than in any other tried. It breaks up the birds more quickly and thus gets them back into the laying class with a minimum loss of time.

Prevent Limberneck by Removal of Carcasses

If poultrymen would spend a little time in looking over their range during the summer months to keep it free from dead carcasses they would undoubtedly prevent a great many outbreaks of so-called "limberneck," or botulism, in poultry.

This is the advice of Dr. F. R. Beaudette, poultry pathologist of the New Jersey agricultural experiment station, who says:

"At this time of the year decomposition takes place quite rapidly. Flies are attracted to carcasses and there lay the eggs which later hatch forth maggots. If these maggots are eaten by a fowl an outbreak of botulism is very apt to occur. The outstanding symptom is the limberneck, and generally the affected bird shows a bright red comb. The temperature of such a bird is usually always subnormal. This is of considerable importance in making a diagnosis. The disease is not spread from one fowl to another, and therefore can easily be controlled by eliminating the source of poisoning. It is still a question whether the maggots themselves are responsible or whether the poisoning is due to the botulinus toxin which the maggot mechanically carries.

"Ranges which are overrun with weeds or with anything that would obscure a dead carcass are more dangerous than a range relatively free from tall vegetation; hence, it is a good practice to keep weeds mowed during the summer months. Of course there is no donger of botulism in flocks that are confined to runs.

"The disease cannot be cured after marked symptoms have made their appearance, though mild cases will often make a spontaneous recovery. Epsom salts in the usual dose aids in early cases. Confinement in a cool dark place seems to give good results."

Green Feed for Fowls

If possible, rest the poultry yards for a month and grow a green crop to purify the soil. A certain amount of green food is essential to the health of the poultry. When in addition to the food value, we can have the service of purifying the soil, it is thrifty to sow oats, or wheat, or rye in the poultry yard. Even when the yards cannot be spared, and the chickens must have their usual run, by heavy seeding there will be growth enough to benefit the soil.

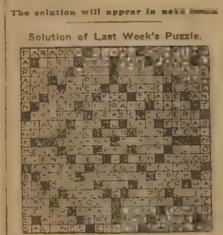
Solution of Last Week's Puzzle.



HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

Put Naturalist Down as "Poor Innocent"

The patient devotion of the naturalist to observations that seem to the ignorant onlooker trifling and meaningless often creates in the minds of those onlookers a reasonable doubt of the scientific man's sanity. In the "Human Side of Fabre," by Mr. P. F. Bicknell, there is an amusing incident in point that the great French naturalist was himself fond of relating.

Ever since daybreak, he says, I had been sitting in watchful waiting on a stone at the bottom of a ravine. The digger wasp of Languedoc was the subject of my morning's study. Three women, grape-pickers, passed me on their way to the vineyards. Glancing at the man sitting there apparently lost in thought, they gave him a polite good morning, which he as politely returned. At sunset the same three grape-pickers passed again on their homeward way with their heaped-up baskets on their heads. The man was still there, sitting on the same stone; his eyes were turned upon the same spot.

My immobile attitude and my long-continued station on the one spot all alone must have struck them as something extraordinary. As they passed me I saw one of them touch her forehead with her finger, and I heard her whisper to the others in their patois: "A poor innocent. Oh, poor man!"

Then they all three crossed themselves.

An innocent she had called me, an innocent—that is, an idiot, a poor devil harmless but bereft of his reason—and they had all three made the sign of the cross, for in their eyes an idiot was marked with the seal of God.—Youth's Companion.

"Console"

Console is a French architecture term applied to an upright corbel in architecture which forms a stone bracket. In the case of the console table, the name is derived from the shape of the legs, which resemble scroll-shaped brackets. They are usually richly ornamented.

Sympathy

Let us cherish sympathy. By attention and exercise it may be improved in every man. It prepares the mind for receiving the impressions of virtue; and without it there can be no true politeness. Nothing is more odious than that insensibility which wraps a man up in himself and his own concerns and prevents his being moved with either the joys or sorrows of another.—Beattie

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN DIES SUDDENLY AT DAYTON

Had Attended Services at The Methodist Church and Eaten Hearty Meal and Retired For Rest When End Came—Apoplexy Is Thought To Be Cause.

SUCCUMBS AT SCENE OF EVOLUTION TRIAL

Chauffeur Goes to Awake "Silver Tongue" Orator and Finds Him Dead—Town of Dayton Is Amazed—Mrs. Bryan Present In House When Husband Dies.

Dayton, Tenn., July 26.—William Jennings Bryan, three times presidential nominee of the Democratic party and known the world over for his eloquence, died here this afternoon.

The end came while the great Commoner was asleep and was attributed by physicians to apoplexy. He had retired to his room shortly after eating a large dinner to take a short rest. Mrs. Bryan sent the family chauffeur, Jim McCartney, to wake him about 4:30 and it was learned then that he was dead.

Dr. W. F. Thomason and Dr. A. C. Broyles, who examined the body, expressed the opinion Mr. Bryan had been dead between 30 and 45 minutes before they arrived.

Mr. Bryan's death came on the eve of another crusade he had planned to carry before the American people—a battle against modernism. He returned to Dayton this morning after having made addresses yesterday at Jasper and Winchester, Tenn., and after having completed arrangements for the early publication of the speech he was to have made in closing the trial of John T. Scopes, who recently was found guilty of violating Tennessee's anti-evolution law.

Despite the strenuous program Mr. Bryan had been following as a member of the prosecution staff in the Scopes case and as leader of the fundamentalists, he appeared in excellent health.

Shortly before Mr. Bryan entered his room to rest he told his wife he had never felt better in his life and was ready to go before the country to wage his fight in behalf of fundamentalism.

Chauffeur Finds Mr. Bryan

About 4:30 o'clock, Mrs. Bryan said she felt her husband had slept long enough, so she sent the chauffeur, who also was his personal attendant, to wake him. McCartney shook Mr. Bryan twice before he noticed the latter was not breathing. The physicians and A. B. Andrews, a neighbor, then were summoned hurriedly.

Mrs. Bryan accepted the shock bravely and remained calm.

"I am happy that my husband died without suffering and in peace," she said.

"You know he was a colonel in the Spanish-American war and since it was his wish to rest in Arlington, we probably will place him there," she continued.

Sue K. Hicks, who was associated with Mr. Bryan in the recent trial, and Mr. Andrews, remarked upon Mrs. Bryan's courage, as she took charge of arrangements.

Mrs. Bryan is Calm

"During all the excitement, Mrs. Bryan was the calmest person in the house," Mr. Andrews said. "She took complete charge of affairs and showed more nerve than I have ever seen in a woman—and she is an invalid, too."

George W. Rappleyea, who instituted charges against Scopes in order that the anti-evolution law might be tested, was among those who called to express sympathy to Mrs. Bryan. Hundreds of telegrams and long distance calls of love and sympathy were received at the home.

Dayton is Amazed

As for Dayton, it found it almost impossible to realize that the Commoner was dead. During the morning many of the citizens had seen him at the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church and had heard him lead in prayer. He appeared in excellent health and his friends expected him to place in his battle against modernism all the vigor and eloquence which marked all his campaigns since the famous "cross of gold" speech.

In his addresses at Jasper and Winchester yesterday, Mr. Bryan spoke with unusual vigor as he was encouraged by the applause of the hundreds who heard him. Last night he returned to Chattanooga and while there completed arrangements for the early publication of the speech which was to have been delivered during the Scopes trial.

Early today he joined A. W. Lessly, Vernon Keith and Miss Bettie Harms at breakfast before leaving for Dayton. Mr. Lessly accompanied him to Dayton and while en route Mr. Bryan talked on various topics of the day and of the appeal to be made by Scopes to the supreme court.

The Commoner expressed his determination then to "see the case through." Mr. Bryan showed no signs of illness but Mr. Lessly said he told him he was suffering from diabetes.

Although severely criticised by special writers and some modernists during the Scopes trial, Mr. Bryan has not appeared affected by this during the past several days.

Family Scattered

The death of Mr. Bryan found his family widely scattered. William Jennings Bryan, Jr., who came here to assist his father in the Scopes case has returned to Los Angeles, Calif.; Mrs. Francis M. Baird, his eldest sister, was at her home in Lincoln, Neb.; Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owens, a daughter, was in Mount Vernon, Ohio, to fill a Chautauqua engagement.

Charles W. Bryan, who was nominated as vice-presidential candidate by the democrats in the last general election, was in Colorado, and it was several hours before he could be reached. He was heartbroken at the news.

Mrs. Thomas H. Allen, a sister, was on an outing with her husband at Birch Plank Inn, on Vermillion lake near Tower, Minn., when she was informed of Mr. Bryan's death.

Even at the time Mr. Bryan died, his friends here were completing arrangements for him to deliver his famous sermon, "What Will I Do With Jesus?" tomorrow evening.

Before leaving Miami, Fla., for Dayton, Mr. Bryan announced he would deliver this sermon on the first Sunday afternoon after his arrival. On the occasion, however, he delivered another sermon, explaining that it would have been unfair to the defense to speak on the original text.

Mr. Bryan also had planned to address the Dayton Progressive Club tomorrow night on plans for the fundamentalist university to be erected here in his honor. Tuesday he was to speak in Knoxville.

Inquest to Be Held

Chattanooga, Tenn., July 26.—Capt. Marion Perkins, in charge of a squad of Chattanooga police on duty at Dayton during the Scopes trial, said tonight that many threats had been made on the life of William Jennings Bryan. It was also reported here by the undertaker, who handled the body at Dayton, that an inquest is to be held.

Before leaving Chattanooga for Dayton this morning he ate a hearty breakfast and seemed to thoroughly enjoy it.

No Sunday Funerals

Nashville, Tenn.—After August 1 there will not be any more burials in Nashville cemeteries on Sunday. Notices have been sent by the cemetery officials to all the undertakers in the city notifying them of the new regulations.

Was Elder in Florida Church

Miami, Fla., July 26.—William Jennings Bryan was an elder in the First Presbyterian Church of this city, and teacher of its open air Bible class which was conducted in Royal Palm Park every Sunday morning. This class has the distinction of being the largest gathering of its kind in the world, and is frequently attended by thousands of persons.

Bryan was active and influential in the business, social and religious life of Miami. He frequently filled the pulpit of the First Methodist Church, and occassionally preached in the other churches here.

Mr. Bryan is credited with having prospered greatly in his ventures here in the real estate field, and is estimated to have made from $250,000 to $1,000,000 in the sale of real estate. His home, Villa Serena, south of Miami, was recently sold by him at a considerable profit, and he bought a less expensive one near Coconut Grove, near Miami, and the home of his daughter, Mrs. Reginald Owen.

Mr. L. T. Porter, representing the Alabama Power company, was here Friday and had on display in the Upchurch display window the Forbes loving cup recently won in competition with public service ... organizations throughout the country.

... jury as having rendered the most service to the general public in this country. This is an award that Alabama Power company should feel proud as well as the people of Alabama, and Chilton is appreciative of the fact that the company placed the cup here for a day's inspection, as our county is furnishing much of the power through lock 12 that is helping to make Alabama and the Alabama Power noted everywhere.

Chevrolet Production Still Continues High

"Fleet orders" for both passenger cars and trucks are being received with increasing frequency by the Chevrolet Motor Company from large organizations whose investigations have established the economy of providing their salesmen and other representatives with reliable motor transportation.

Hundreds of Chevrolet fleets have been delivered since the first of the year.

The group purchasers assign various reasons for their decision to standardize on Chevrolet.

Reliability and economy one of the factors in Chevrolet's popularity among the farm districts, is the reason most frequently given by the organizations whose men penetrate those districts. Others cite the universal availability of service at Chevrolet's 3,600 direct dealers, 2,900 associate dealers and 11,000 parts depots which dot the country. The purchasers of fleets for city use prefer the Chevrolet because of its attractive appearance and easy handling and its 18.5-foot turning radius.

Among the recent group purchasers is the United States Tobacco Company, which has furnished a fleet of 54 Chevrolet coaches to its salesmen in the eastern states. They find the coach tonneau convenient for bulky samples.

The Consolidated Gas Company since January 1 has bought 34 Chevrolet coupes, roadsters and trucks principally for the use of inspectors, "trouble shooters and foremen in New York City.

A fleet of 24 coupes has been purchased by the Universal Portland Cement Company for its salesmen throughout the country. Hundreds of other companies in a wide variety of business have established Chevrolet fleets ranging in number from six to 20 cars.

"Sales cost records are proving daily the economy of automotive transportation for salesmen," said R. H. Grant, general sales manager of the Chevrolet Motor Company.

"The average expense per call incurred by the salesmen driving an automobile is lower than by rail due to the fact that the salesmen using a machine makes three times the number of calls and spends more time with each customer. He will make calls which other wise he would skip were he limited by rail transportation.

"In addition a salesman who drives an attractive car up to the customer's establishment enjoys a peculiar psychological advantage over the salesman who arrives on foot. Unconsciously the buyer accords more rapid and courteous attention to the man with the car."

Clanton Loses Fast Ball Games

Clanton's baseball team lost a hard series of ball games on the local diamond last week when the strong Elrod team defeated them two games out of three on the local diamond.

In the first game Pat Moulton sat the visitors down with a defeat but ... the table were turned out not until after a scrappy contest. Starling pitched this game. Saturday Bill Whorton essayed to turn the tide and did it well until late in the game when with a little wobbly support victory was snatched away.

Sunday the local team went down to Montgomery and gave Bill Eubanks' West Point Route team a battle, losing in the eleventh inning, 1 to 0.

This game was a thriller, and the 1,000 fans who saw it got their full ... worth. McEachern for Montgomery and Moulton for Clanton gave up five hits each. Jack Hayes delivering a triple and Webb Parrish a double but neither ... score.

AGRICULTURAL OUTLOOK CONTINUES GOOD

The 1925 agricultural picture is painted in bright colors by the Department of Agriculture ... condition ... combination presents an optimistic national outlook, the department ...

Promise of recovery in all branches of the livestock industry is indicated. Heavy steers have been bringing higher prices than last year, hogs nearly double the price of a year ago, and lambs have been higher priced.

Hogs this fall are probably approaching the peak of a price cycle, the department believes. It points out for the guidance of producers that some farsighted hog raisers are already considering probable heavy production in 1926, and lower levels thereafter.

"Truck crops are coming in for a share of price recovery this season," the report says. "Early estimates suggest a potato production of only about 3.1 bushels per capita, which would be on a par with those well-remembered shortage years, 1911 and 1919. Onions, cabbage, melons and peaches have been selling at two or three times last year's prices and seemingly have a brisk fall market ahead.

"Rains last month added to hay and late oats. Corn is making cars now and looks good as a whole. A fairly good spring wheat crop seems assured, despite considerable hot weather damage and some rust in the Red River Valley. Winter wheat was a disappointment but has apparently threshed out about as much grain as was expected and is of good quality. Fruit is not so plentiful in eastern districts, but the Pacific Coast will make good much of the deficiency. Cotton has lost ground in the western belt by reason of drought, but indications still point to a goodsized total crop. Potatoes are ... decidedly smaller acreage than last year and promise a smaller yield but nevertheless may make more money for producers."

The department's general index of purchasing power of farm products in terms of non-agricultural comodities remains at a level of 90, compared with a five-year prewar level taken as 100.

BELL TELEPHONE WIRES EXTENDED

About a dozen workmen engaged by the Bell Telephone Co., of Montgomery are stretching wires over the entire city. All this speaks for the progress of Clanton. The Bell Telephone subscribers of our city would probably now run to more than one hundred. The rates are reasonable and service splendid.

There are many residents of the county, however, who will continue to patronize the Peoples Phone Co., not only on account of its long list of subscribers, (considerably more than 1000) who reside in the remote corners of the county, but its rates for service are reduced to a minimum, and the service is satisfactory.

HARMONY SINGERS HAVE FORMED NEW SINGING SOCIETY

Old time singers met at the court house Saturday and Sunday and formed the Chilton County Christian Harmony Singing Association and elected officers and selected the first Sunday in August and Saturday before as the next annual singing date.

At the Saturday meeting J. N. Scott of Jemison acted as temporary chairman, and J. W. Ayres temporary secretary. Good music was rendered before noon, and then election of officers resulted in the selection of Mr. Scott as president and Miss Ruth Williams as secretary.

Rules ... constitution were ... after which singing was enjoyed until four o'clock.

Sunday morning the singers were ... a large audience, continued throughout the day. Some fine music was rendered, and especially by several Chilton county young ladies.

This organization was perfected to join with the other singing societies of Chilton county in perpetuating the old ... and to ... the young people ... these songs.

COURT HOUSE SINGING

The Chilton county Christian Harmony singers met at the court house on last Sunday to mingle their voices in singing the good old songs of Zion that will go down in history as the greatest songs in the world. There was a very large crowd in attendance, which seemed to be held spell bound.

The old books which have been looked upon as being a thing of the past is fast coming back into its own once more and will soon take the day as the most sacred songs on earth among our coming younger generation.

We wish especially to thank the young ladies, Misses Ruth Williams, Willie Pearl Cooper, Oradell Wilkins and Essie and Daisy Langston for, the songs directed by them. May they continue and press onward to prize of the high calling.

Paved streets for Clanton is a reality in fact. Cement has been poured on two different blocks this week, and without ... handicaps, next week will find the town with two or three blocks all ready paved.

A great deal of work has been necessary to get ready for this on account of the fact that permanent water connections to all houses had to be made, because of the permanency of the improvements being made. POLK BROS. MOTOR CO., INC., INSTALLS NEW EQUIPMENT

Geo. C. Polk, with the firm of Polk Bros. Motor Co., Inc., local Chevrolet dealer, states that they have found it necessary to install new and modern shop equipment to take care of their increase in business.

As part of this equipment is a high pressure grease gun for greasing Alemite and Zero equipped cars. This gun has pressure of 2500 pounds per square inch.

They are now installing a 200 Ampere Hobart battery charging machine. This machine has capacity of 25 batteries and will charge them in eight hours.

Mr. Polk states that June and July were two banner months with them. They sold more new Chevrolet cars these two months than they have in any two months before. This shows what the public thinks of the New Chevrolet.

Mr. Polk prophesies good cotton crop with good prices and prosperity for everyone.

IN MEMORIAM

Mrs. Wyatt died last eve,
Why should loved ones weep
'Twas the promise sweet fulfilled:
"He giveth His beloved sleep."

And like the flush of dawn
Or the lovely twilight's quiet
Her soul winged its flight
The soul of dear Mrs. Wyatt.

Gently as she lived
Her tryst she went to keep
With the loving Lord Himself
Who gave to His beloved sleep.

Like the lingering touch of sweetness
Of candles flickering low
In the little hands of acolytes
With their kindly gentle glow

She lived and made life gladder
Her worthiness we reap
What sweeter thought can loved ones have:
"He giveth His beloved sleep."

worked to build up the name of Jesse French in his native state of Tennessee. From a life time spent in building pianos Mr. French knows best what to put in his pianos for the southern trade and climate.

From a small beginning in 1875 to the present year when this illustrous house celebrates its Golden Jubilee or the 50th year of its career is almost the history of the modern pianoforte. Mr. French has brought up his two sons. H. Edgar French and Jesse French, Jr., not only along the latest methods of manufacturers but has instilled into them all the old ideals and ideas he gathered along lifes pathway. Today the name of Jesse French on a piano needs no guarantee of quality, for there are "Thousands in use and the demand increasing daily" as they so aptly advertise. Another of the slogans used by Jesse French is "Quality First and First Quality" and Mr. Moore has told us how very carefully guarded this slogan is. He went through the factory and watched the many details of construction in the Jesse French made pianos and says that he knows "first handed" that no pianos are more honestly or carefully made.

In Montgomery and Mobile where Jesse French & Sons have operated stores for many years, their product has been well received and from the names of local customers that Mr. Moore mentioned to us it seems that Chilton county citizens have fallen in line. Prof. W. M. Bevaughn who is teaching a large school at Concord, as well as Prof. L. T. Grant who has a school at Coopers, are using Jesse French pianos in their work, and both speak highly of the fine tone quality of these pianos and how well adapted they are for the teaching of voice, as well as straight hand playing or solo work. We bespeak a splendid reception for this new firm from our citizens and Mr. Moore says that he has a useful souvenir for every one that calls to see his pianos.

MRS. R. F. WYATT DIED JULY 25

On the afternoon of July 25, about 3:30 o'clock, the death angels winged their flight to earth and quietly took away one whom we all loved, Mrs. R. F. Wyatt, causing a great mantle of sorrow over her many relatives and friends.

After many months of patient suffering, which she bore without a murmur, she bravely faced death and surrendered her life back to her maker, who had preserved it for fifty three years. She did not fear death as these words she spoke to several different times. "I am ready and willing to die just waiting until God shall call me home."

She had been a member of the church since early girlhood living a devoted christian life and at the time of her death was a consistent member of Walnut Creek Methodist church. She was in the Alabama Central hospital for two months. Everything was done for her that earthly physicians and friends could do but all was in vain. We loved her but God loved her more and called her to a world more beautiful than this, where there is no pain, no more partings, but where all is joy and peace.

Oh, how it breaks our hearts to give her up but we know she is now sweetly resting in the arms of Jesus. She [illegible] but we have one great consolation, we can meet her if we only live the life she did here on earth. She was loved by everyone and endeared herself in the hearts and lives of all who knew her. Her passing has left a vacancy that can never be filled.

She leaves a lonely husband, five sisters, five brothers, besides a circle of other relatives and friends to miss her smiles and presence through life.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Limbrick with Mr. Martin in charge.

She was laid to rest in Walnut Creek cemetery to await the coming of that great and glorious day.

The many beautiful floral offerings attested the great love and esteem in which she was held by her friends and neighbors.

Her Niece, MRS. Z. A. TIPPETT.

CLANTON DEFEATED TWICE LAST WEEK

The Clanton baseball team run into its worst streak of the season last week, being defeated on Thursday by Elrod three to one on the local diamon. and then journeying to Reform where they met the strong Elrod team from Gordo, where the locals were trounced 12 to 2. The only redeeming feature of the game being the hitting of Jack Hayes, who secured four hits Crit Jones also connecting for two.

Moulton started the game for Clanton, but didn't seem to be in form, the Elrod boys getting to him for 7 runs in the second and third inning. Starling was called in to finish the game, and pitched good ball until the late innings when the home team pounced onto his delivery for enough runs to make the score 12 to 2. Wright, the midget catcher for Clanton, had an off day behind the bat, and with a free hitting game ahead of him, he couldn't head the runners when they got on base.

Score by innings: R. H. E.
Clanton .000 000 110— 2 7 1
Elrod .043 100 04x—12 15 3

CARD OF THANKS

I wish to thank my many friends in and around Clanton for their assistance, sympathy and kindness shown me during the serious illness and death of my loving wife, Mrs. R. F. Wyatt.

Especially am I grateful to all the doctors and nurses of the Alabama Central hospital who were so faithful and kind during her entire illness.

I also wish to thank relatives and friends for the many beautiful floral offerings.

May God's richest blessings rest on you all is my prayer.

Her Husband, Mr. R. F. WYATT.

IN FILMY ENSEMBLE SUITS; COIN DOTS NOW THE RAGE

FASHION dictates delicate and filmy fabrics for tiny girls' dress-up frocks, and if the little fairies in our homes had gossamer wings, they would match up well with these fragile stuffs. But our wingless fairies have sturdy and active legs, and fabrics, however filmy, must be sturdy too, or soon perish. Fine cotton voile is filmy enough and sturdy enough, and stands at the head of the class as a medium for little tots' dresses.

Little Tot's Ensemble Suit.

It is shown in all the flower-like, pastel colors and in higher shades that are chosen for the youngest fashionables.

These important young people are adorable in miniature ensemble suits, like the one shown here. Voile in any pretty color—in this case tomato red—makes the dress and eyelet embroidery in white linen contributes the coat, but eyelet embroidery in thin batiste would be as good a choice. The sleeveless coat is bordered with voile like the dress and adorned with three fancy buttons on each side. Except for a pocket, this frock appears to be entirely plain, but usually a very small, floral embroidered motif is placed on the pocket or near the neck.

This ensemble idea for little tots is quite new, but we are seeing only the beginning of its career. New collars and cuffs of linen may be taken for granted on most of them Beside their neatness, they educate little ladies in the art of being tidy.

From morning until night, from parlor to kitchen, from ocean to ocean coin dots are in circulation. They are the outstanding success among the infinitely varied designs on printed silks and cottons used for summer frocks. Many curious patterns are discovered to be made of them, and although this currency is turned out as fast as the mills can print, fashion stands back of it, and it shows no sign of depreciating in value.

Just about the simplest arrangement of the coin dot designs now current, has been used for making the pretty day-frock pictured here. And the frock itself is as simple as the printed pattern. The picture tells the story of both, except for color, and two of ten—therefore we may take it for granted that the frock is either red and white or black and white. It is made with an inverted plait at each side, bordered with plain silk to match the dot in color and wears its color on the shoulder in loops of narrow ribbon fastened with a small ornament. In all the white and color combinations this will make a crisp looking gown. But the coin-dot prints are shown in two-color combinations and in two or three shades of one color and appear in both silk and chiffon afternoon frocks.

Simple Arrangement of Coin-Dot Design.

printed flannels and plain, pastel-colored flannels are sure to intrigue designers into ensemble suits and frocks that will make their small wearers highly decorative in the scenery. Coat frocks for girls of six or more are already shown in these prints with round collars and narrow turn-back cuffs, in white or colored linen, that are detachable and washable. Plain flannel in cheerful colors is in demand for girls of all ages and simple dresses made of it, for the smaller girls, are very effectively finished with yarn stitchery or a gayly colored flower done in yarn embroidery. Detachable

In these more intricate afternoon dresses plaits are introduced in many ways—oftenest in plaited skirts set onto long bodices. The coin dots play strange pranks when the fabric is plaited—forming curious figures and combination, thus taking on a new interest—the variations are exhaustless.

HORSERADISH FLAVOR IN SAUCE FOR BEETS

Most Delicious When They Are Boiled in Skins.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Tiny, tender, new beets are most delicious to many people when simply boiled in their skins, peeled, and served sliced or diced with plenty of butter, and salt and pepper for seasoning. Medium-sized beets may be cooked so that they are also very good, and served in the same way. The time of cooking may be shortened by paring and dicing them before boiling. An acid flavor is often liked with beets, and sometimes when vinegar is used as the acid, a little sugar is added also. Various condiments combine well with the flavor of beets, particularly horseradish and ginger. The United States Department of Agriculture has found the recipes below satisfactory when these flavors are liked.

Milk Improves Beets.

Beets With Sweet-and-Sour Sauce.

1 beets diced	4 tablespoonfuls butter (cream may be used instead)
1 cupful vinegar (dilute with water if very strong)	3 teaspoonfuls salt
½ cupful sugar (less if desired)	Few grains pepper
	1 tablespoonful flour

Boil the beets until tender. Mix all ingredients, cook until thick, stirring constantly. Let stand ten minutes over hot water to blend flavors. The sugar and vinegar must be properly balanced. If the amount of either is increased or decreased, the other must be changed accordingly.

For variety two tablespoonfuls of freshly grated horseradish may be added just before serving; or a few grains of nutmeg, ginger, or cinnamon may be cooked with the sauce. The addition of one-half cupful or more cream or rich milk imparts a delicious flavor and makes the sauce a beautiful pink color.

Apple Blossom Soup.

The addition of three cupfuls of rich milk, or half milk and half cream to the sweet-and-sour beets cooked as above will result in a delicately colored soup, resembling apple blossoms in color and of very good flavor. The mixture should stand for 15 or 20 minutes, and then poured through a coarse strainer to remove the beets, which are to be served separately at some other meal. The soup may be garnished with a teaspoonful of whipped cream or cooked beets cut in fancy shapes.

VEGETABLES SERVED RAW FOR CHILDREN

Everybody Needs All Three Kinds of Vitamins.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

"Have you had your vitamins today?" is one way of turning a popular form of slogan into a practical, thought-provoking question. Everybody needs all three kinds of vitamins in the daily diet, but in the family where there are growing children it is especially important to give constant attention to providing vitamin-rich foods regularly and in abundance. Liberal amounts of vegetables and fruits, particularly if eaten raw, are among the best sources of vitamins.

A salad once a day is a good medium for incorporating raw vegetables in a menu. Children can learn to like salads when they are very young—in fact, as soon as they are old enough to eat the various ingredients, which should be grated, shredded, or otherwise prepared suitably for them. If the dressing is not too sour they will usually eat a salad as a matter of course when they see the other members of the family eating it. Raw vegetable salads are quick and easy to prepare, and refreshing to eat. When there is only a little of this or that vegetable on hand, a salad disposes of all the odds and ends and enriches the diet.

To those of us who are accustomed to serving salads frequently, the idea of raw vegetables in salad does not suggest anything particularly novel. When we think of a vegetable salad, we usually have in mind such uncooked materials as chopped celery, sliced tomatoes and cucumbers, radishes, spring onions, water cress, lettuce, romaine, endive, escarole, chicory, Chinese or celery cabbage, or ordinary cabbage in cole slaw. Raw red and green peppers are often shredded or ground up and added to salads for their flavor and color.

Two vegetables which are more frequently served cooked than raw might well be added to the list of uncooked ingredients, the United States Department of Agriculture suggests, for it has been found that both are high in vitamins in their raw state. These are carrots and rutabagas or yellow turnips. White turnips may also be used raw, but the rutabaga variety is exceptionally valuable. Raw carrots, turnips and radishes are best when sliced very thin, diced or grated. When grated, radishes and turnips should be squeezed dry.

An infinite number of combinations may be made with these raw vegetable salad ingredients, according to the supplies available. Interesting color effects may be obtained by blending various vegetables. Some sort of leafy base or bed is generally liked in a salad, but is not indispensable. If there is a foundation of lettuce, cabbage, cress, or other green vegetable, however, it is intended to be eaten and not left on the plate. Cabbage is almost always available, even when lettuce is out of season.

All uncooked salad vegetables should be lightly sprinkled with salt, just as they are being served. The dressing used is a matter of individual preference. French, mayonnaise, or boiled dressing may be liked. Lettuce and other greens must always be cold, crisp and dry, otherwise the dressing will be diluted and will not adhere. Salad greens can be kept crisp and fresh, even without ice, by wrapping them in a damp cloth or paper, or by shutting them up in an air-tight jar and setting them in a cool place.

CHERRIES EASILY CANNED OR PRESERVED

Fill the Jelly Glasses Carefully.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The family, of course, should not be stinted on fresh cherries, but if one has a surplus they may be easily canned or made into a delicious jelly by adding commercial or homemade pectin extract. To can the cherries, pack them in hot jars, and cover with boiling sirup. Use a thick sirup for sour cherries (one part sugar to one part water), and a medium sirup for sweet cherries (one part sugar to two parts water). Or, remove the pits, add sugar as desired, bring to the boiling point, and pack. If the cherries are packed cold the jars should be processed 25 minutes in a hot water bath, counting the time from the moment the surrounding water is actively boiling. If they are packed hot, a five-minutes' process is recommended to insure keeping and to create a vacuum seal.

Miscellaneous Circular No. 24, "Timetables for Home Canning of Fruits and Vegetables" may be obtained while the supply lasts by writing to the United States Department of Agriculture, and will be found helpful throughout the canning season. If one plans to make cherry jelly, using pectin, it would be well to send for Department Circular 254, "Homemade Apple and Citrus Pectin Extracts and Their Use in Jelly Making," which is also free while the supply lasts.

SEASONABLE GOOD THINGS

Leftover fish may be used for an appetizing dish which is also economical.

Fish Pudding.—Free the fish from skin and bones and flake with a fork. To a one-quart bowlful, prepare the following custard: Cook one pint of milk with six eggs; while warm stir in one-fourth of a cupful of butter, season with salt, pepper, one tablespoonful of worcestershire sauce or anchovy paste, soften with a little hot water and two teaspoonfuls of lemon juice. Put the flaked fish in a baking dish and pour the custard over it. Bake until the custard is set.

Summer Soup.—Into one quart of water, add one quart of fresh ripe tomatoes, peeled and sliced thin, one cucumber also peeled and sliced and one clove of garlic. Add salt, pepper and one tablespoonful of sugar. Strain the soup and set aside to cool. When thoroughly cooled add a few pieces of ice and one and one-half cupfuls of thinly sliced cucumbers sprinkled with pepper, salt and vinegar. Let chill in the ice chest one hour. Just before serving, toss into the soup tureen, one cupful of croutons which have been sprinkled with tarragon vinegar.

Pineapple Punch.—To two cupfuls of water add four cupfuls of sugar, cook until the sirup forms a thread Remove from the heat and add two fresh grated pineapples. Let cool slightly, add the juice of six lemons and let stand over night. Strain and serve poured over a block of ice in a punch bowl. Add a pint of apollinaris water during the first serving and another when the punch bowl is partly empty.

Virginia Spiced Squash.—Take a sirloin of beef or a rump piece that has been in the pickle eight days. Put into a kettle with cold water over a slow fire. Skim well, add one or two lemons with the seeds removed, two bay leaves, a dozen peppercorns, and two tablespoonfuls of tarragon vinegar. Let the meat cook slowly until tender then allow it to remain in the liquor in which it was cooked, over night. Remove, drain and put under weight. From five to six pounds of beef will be required.

Savory Dishes That Satisfy.

Green corn which has been left from dinner makes a nice salad added to potato. Cut it from the cob and add with a bit of minced onion, a few slices of cucumber and half a dozen potatoes with a good dressing. Mix and let stand to season well before serving

Hot Potato Salad.—Cook potatoes in their jackets and peel and cut them as hot as possible. Mix with a good salad dressing, chopped onion, a little minced celery and a few leaves of fresh shredded mustard to give pungency. Serve at once.

Toast With Ham.—Prepare a white sauce, using thin cream one cupful of cream, two tablespoonfuls each of butter and flour cooked together before adding the cream. Season with salt, pepper and one-half cupful of minced ham. Pour over well-buttered toast.

Onion and Chicken Soup.—Peel and slice three green onions and cook in a tablespoonful of butter four minutes, then add four cupfuls of chicken stock with one cupful of fine dry bread crumbs. Bring to the boiling point and simmer 45 minutes, then rub through a sieve and add one cupful of milk. Melt with two tablespoonfuls of butter; add an equal amount of flour, and when well blended pour over the hot soup. Cook for five minutes; add one cupful of cream and season well.

Prune Ice Cream.—Soak one cupful of prunes in water to cover, overnight Cook in the same water until tender; put the pulp through a strainer; add one cupful of sugar, four tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, a pinch of salt and one and one-quarter cupfuls of heavy cream, whipped. Freeze and garnish with chopped nuts. This cream may be used with the juice of two oranges and the rind of one.

Aristocratic Johnny Cake.—Take two tablespoonfuls of shortening; add the beaten yolks of four eggs, a pint of milk, a cupful of corn meal and flour sifted with four teaspoonfuls of baking powder; a tablespoonful of sugar, a teaspoonful of salt, and lastly fold in the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs and bake 40 minutes in a hot oven. This recipe may be halved for a small family.

Pea Roast.—Take three cupfuls of dry bread crumbs that have been rolled and sifted. Take a pint of green peas, cooked, and put through a puree sieve while hot. Mix the crumbs with the pea puree. There should be about three-quarters of a cupful; add one-fourth cupful of walnut meats chopped, one egg slightly beaten, one teaspoonful of sugar, and one-fourth of a cupful of melted butter with three-fourths of a cupful of milk. Mix well and turn into a well-buttered pan. Bake 40 minutes in a slow oven. Serve with tomato sauce.

POULTRY

PLACING INCUBATOR EGGS ON THE MARKET

(By T. E. QUISENBERRY)

Some farmers and poultry raisers make a practice of putting eggs on the market which they have had in an incubator for a few days and found the eggs to be infertile. This is a bad practice and should never be done by any honest farmer or poultry raiser. You may make good use of such eggs by consuming them at home. They will do to fry, for baking and for certain kinds of cooking, but they are absolutely unfit for the market. Such eggs, while good for home consumption are absolutely unfit for shipping. The yolks will break, the eggs will rot before they can reach the consumer, and it is a dishonest practice to offer such eggs for sale as fresh-laid eggs, and you lower the price on all eggs by so doing. Consume such eggs at home.

We have seen severe market losses due to a habit of sending infertile incubator eggs into commerce. This has been especially noticeable in the large houses making a specialty of breaking out eggs where they found it absolutely necessary to candle even in March and early April because farmers and poultry raisers were marketing infertile incubator eggs with their fresh eggs, and the incubator eggs came in in such bad condition and were so numerous that they had to be culled out before it was safe for the breakers to handle the eggs. At that time of the year there is no other reason for candling. You can see what a loss this means to any dealer, and instead of reducing the army of candlers which are now required this practice makes a demand for even a greater number.

Another very serious evil due to the marketing of infertile eggs from an incubator or from underneath a hen is their admixture with storage stock. These incubator eggs usually go on the market at the season when eggs are being stored without being candled. We know it to be a fact that infertile incubator eggs break down during transportation and handling and easily become "white rots."

Infertile incubator eggs can be used for bakers' purposes in the home, but under no circumstances should they ever be offered for sale or for shipment.

Another important reason why such eggs should not be marketed as fresh eggs is the fact that they are liable to be seized by food inspectors as being misbranded. Such eggs play havoc with the storage stock, and we are in hopes that no farmer or poultry raiser will be guilty of such a dishonest practice.

Trap Nest Is Accurate Test of Hen's Ability

The trap nest is the most accurate test of a hen's ability to lay eggs, but it is not practicable for those who live on farms, with all the other work they must do. Therefore, poultry specialists have been studying the general characteristics of laying hens, so that we might have a set of almost exact rules for telling the layers from the loafers. It has been proven over and over that these rules work correctly and no farm woman need longer feed hens that will not pay for their feed bill and give a profit. We must also remember that these lazy hens, which have been loafing all summer, fall and winter, will be laying their few eggs next spring at hatching time, and if their eggs are set, we will have another flock of loafers.

The hens that begin to molt in July should be sent to market. There is one exception to this, the hen that has hatched and brooded a flock of chicks, for she will usually go through a partial molt before she begins laying again. August 15 and September 15 is the best time to cull, but it will pay to go over your flock from time to time through the summer and cull out. Sell those that have stopped laying. There are usually a number of hens in every flock whose general appearance indicates they have low vitality, little vigor and will never be profitable egg producers. A great percentage of these low vitality birds are late hatched pullets of the previous season.

Poultry Hints

Carrots, cabbage and sprouted oats help make strong chicks.

• • •

Good hatches are obtained only when the laying stock has been selected for vigor and made to exercise.

• • •

Fresh eggs are the best for hatching purposes. If it is regarded necessary to keep hatching eggs they should be stored in a temperature of 60 degrees or lower.

• • •

Cull all undeveloped pullets and old hens from the flock.

• • •

Early hatched pullets will molt early in the fall and be ready for laying next winter at a season when egg production is low and prices high.

It has been shown that young chicks are most susceptible to infestation of roundworms until about 12 weeks of age. With severe infestation death may occur in two weeks. In mild infestations chicks live, but growth is slower and resistance to disease less.

Sunday School Lesson

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D.D., Dean of the Evening School, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(©, 1926, Western Newspaper Union.)

Lesson for August 9

BEGINNING THE SECOND MISSIONARY TOUR.

LESSON TEXT—Acts 15:36—16:5.

GOLDEN TEXT—"He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth."—Ps. 72:8.

PRIMARY TOPIC—How the Boy Timothy Became a Missionary.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Silas and Timoth Become Missionaries.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Missionary Recruits.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Strengthening the Churches.

I. Contention Over John Mark (ch. 15:36-41).

1. Paul's Proposal (v. 36).

This was to revisit the scenes of their missionary endeavor, and see the state of the believers—what progress they were making in their Christian experience. This is a pattern for missionaries in all ages and countries.

2. Barnabas' Determination (v. 37).

It was to take with them John Mark. The human relation of these men was uncle and nephew, (Col. 4:10).

3. Paul's Opposition (v. 38).

He was suspicious of Mark because of his desertion on the former journey (Acts 13:13).

4. Their Separation (vv. 39-41).

Their contention was so sharp that they separated. It is impossible to absolutely determine which of these men was right. It is quite clear that both were sincere. That John had done wrong in turning back, could not be disputed. That one failure in a young Christian should condemn him for life is a wrong conclusion. It may be that nearness of relationship warped the judgment of Barnabas. On the other hand, this very fact may have given insight into Mark's nature which better qualified him to judge of his fitness than Paul. Then again, it is to be presumed that Paul, whom God was thrusting out to be the leader, had a clearer understanding of the matter.

Besides it may be that this sternness of Paul was the very thing that brought Mark to his senses. Frequently the demands of justice make the man. This painful incident resulted in these devoted missionaries parting company, but God over-ruled it to the wider extension of the work. Barnabas took Mark and sailed to Cyprus, and Paul chose Silas, and being recommended by the brethren unto the grace of God, went through Syria and Cilicia confirming the churches. The fact that Paul went forth with the recommendation of the brethren may be a vindication of the rightness of his action. It is comforting to know that the frailties of men cannot thwart the purposes of God, nor even delay them. One of the most serious difficulties in Christian work at home and abroad, is to get Christians to work harmoniously together.

II. Finding Timothy (ch. 16:1-5).

1. The Place (v. 1).

This was at the very place where Paul on his first journey had endured cruel stoning. The conversion of this young man may be regarded as the fruitage of his testimony at that time.

2. His Parentage, (v. 1).

His mother was a believing Jewess, and his father a Greek. The mother's name was Eunice (II Tim. 1:5). Timothy's unfeigned faith had passed from his grandmother Lois through Eunice to him.

3. His Character (v. 2).

He had a good reputation in the church at Lystra and Iconium. This shows that the young man from the very first had followed in the footsteps of his spiritual father as a witness for Christ.

4. Timothy Circumcized (v. 3).

Though Timothy had been carefully instructed in the Word of God by his mother and grandmother, the Mosaic rite of circumcision had not been complied with. Doubtless this was because his father was a Gentile. In order to avoid offense among the Jews, Paul circumcised Timothy. This may seem strange in the light of the decision of the Jerusalem Council which set them free from this rite, but it showed his willingness to conform to any reasonable demand for the sake of expedience. However, when this act involved principle he was unyielding, as in the case of Titus, when he refused to have this done at the behest of Judaistic teachers, (Gal. 2:3).

5. The Ministry of Paul and Timothy Through the Cities (vv. 4-5).

It is likely that at this time Timothy was ordained (I Tim. 4:14). They went through the cities and delivered the decrees which had been ordained at the Jerusalem council (Acts 15:19-24). This resulted in the establishment of the churches in the faith, and the daily increase in the number of believers.

BIRTHDAY OF MILDRED DANFORTH IS CELEBRATED.

The fifteenth birthday of Mildred Danforth was fittingly celebrated on last Friday evening when in response to special invitations, a number of her friends came to pay her homage.

Delightful fruit punch was served the guests by Miss Lurline Minor. The punch-bowl was placed in an improvised bower on the lawn, and was surrounded by crepe myrtle and festoons of pink ribbon.

A number of old time games interested the young pleasure seekers for some time; one of the most enjoyable of these was "fruit-basket." Then "rai-sin-on-a-string" was played; and a contest followed that proved a memory test. Prizes were awarded the lucky contesting ones. A box of correspondence cards and a baseball to Pauline Lawrence and Moses Simpson respectively.

Cutting the birthday cake excited the usual amount of interest. The beautiful white loaf cake with its pink icing and embellishments of pink ribbons and fern fronds, centered a table that was placed out on the lawn.

Julian Evans' slice contained the dime; Gladys Williams' slice contained the button.

A number of appropriate gifts attested the popularity of the evenings' honoree, and many good wishes for a happy life were expressey by her guests.

A delightful ice course was served to the following guests:

Misses Pauline Lawrence, Myra Johnson, Mary McSwain, Mary Lee Pyron, Ruth Sessions, Vivian Sanders, Wilhelmina Kittrell, Gertie Mae Fiquette, Lurline Minor, Clara Ellen Calloway, Gladys Williams, Nell Rocco. Messrs. Grover Harris, Jr., Archie Harris, Moses Simpson, William Simpson, Elwyn Gore, George Calloway, Arthur Burnett, Julian Evans, Robt. Alred, George Rasberry and Paul Cox.

WARES ARRIVED IN DETROIT ON SATURDAY.

It was early on Wednesday morning when the Wares with their essentials became packed snugly in their trusty flivver and started on their lengthy journey for Detroit.

REVIVAL MEETING AT SAMARIA CLOSED

The revival meeting at Samaria Baptist church came to a close Friday night, July 24th, after a six days session of successive services, the preaching being done mostly by Dr. Jerome D. Williams of Bessemer, Ala.

We consider the meeting a great success from most every point of view, and a great victory for God. There were twenty-three additions to the membership of the church, for which we are glad and thankful, besides a great spiritual awakening of the ones who were already members. We feel that it will take eternity to tell the whole story of the great good accomplished by the meeting.

We are very thankful to God for the assistance of Dr. Williams in the meeting. We feel that it was a "God send" to the church and community to get Brother Williams to come and be with us in the meeting.

It may seem to some like unnecessarily boasting of our own boy to [illegible] able of Brother Williams, but we are truly glad of him and his life, and we think justly so, and we do not see anything amiss in letting him know it while he is living. In his discourses he presented the word and the plan of salvation in such a plain, simple and forceful manner until it seems that no one who heard him need [illegible] the way.

We especially think the visiting brethen and sisters for their presence, prayers and assstance in every way and we pray God's choisest blessings upon all of you and invite you to come again to Samaria and help us. We have [illegible] preaching services on the third Sunday of each month, morning and [illegible]

[illegible] express our sincere thanks to the [illegible] as well as to our [illegible] for the order and attention [illegible] service. It is true that we think and feel that it is everybody's duty to keep in order and to give attention to the message of God, but to our sorrow we are compelled to admit that in this fast age in which we are living we sometimes forget. [illegible] disturbances caused by automobiles coming and going around [illegible] was, we may say, [illegible] We do not recall a single instance when this present day evil disturbed the services the least bit, and may we say this one fact is very commendable and the same could in most instances be avoided if we would only remember the duty we owe to God and our fellowman. It seemed that everybody made it a point to get [illegible] ed any the worse for wear.

He may be a kin to you, but

More people are at work in Clanton than ever before. Street crews, road crews, state highwaymen and other workers make of Clanton a beehive of industry, and the cotton ginning season just around the corner.

Singers of Chilton met and organized another singing society at the court house in Clanton Sunday. No county can have too many of these organizations and the News bespeaks much good from this society.

The fruit growers around Thorsby are a progressive set. Their crops are a little short this year, with the possible exception of peaches. Watermelons are off and strawberries were not so good, but they already are planning for next year. That's the spirit that wins.

One of our smart fellows called in the office t'other day, asked us if we knew the difference between a lottery and an old maid. Of course we didn't, and he told us the first was a humbug and the other a bum hug. We asked him how he knew, and he said he tried one and married the other.

Things We See and Hear Wise and Otherwise

The progressive citizens of Thorsby are rebuilding on the site of old Thorsby college a modern and more handsome building than the one burned a few months ago. And thus it is, a seeming irreparable loss in the end turns out to be a blessing in disguise.

A Clanton fisherman says he jerked a 10-pound fish out of the water and he fell back in the water. Chief Retherford wanted to know how he knew it was a ten-pounder, and was informed that it had scales on its back. $30 and 60 days was the fine.

Not many towns the size of Stanton can boast of a business enterprise of the magnitude of the Schurter planing mill. This establishment turns out a variety of novelty moldings, etc., that are not usually found in a place the size of Stanton. We congratulate this enterprising town on this business enterprise.

Our genial photographer from Verbena enlightened us on the subject of breeches, pants and trousers the other day, but the modern man has found it out already. When they cost $2. they're breeches; when they cost $4.50 and $5 they're pants, and from $8.50 up they're trousers. We've worn breeches and pants all our lives, what do you wear?

Goat Hill in Montgomery is a cool place when you get there, but my, those are long blocks when you have to walk up there. It is like plowing corn rows a quarter of a mile long, expecting each minute to hear the dinner horn, and you turning to start to the other end away from the house with a slow mule. Have you ever been caught in that fix? My it's an awful fix to be in. Take out is my policy. What's the use going to the other end and be late for dinner. Give the mule the benefit of the doubt, if there is any. If not, take out and go home.

GAS, NOT GASOLINE

One of the simple questions that Simple Simon didn't ask the pie man was, "How much gas does it take to bake a pie."

Based on an expert analysis of gas consumption, here is the answer:

Custard Pie—Ten cubic feet will bake one are more pies, according to oven size.

Bread—Twenty-five cubic feet will bake from one to eight loaves at once, depending on the size of oven used.

Roast Chicken—Thirty-five cubic feet will roast one three-pound chicken.

Bean Soup—Six cubic feet will book a quart.

Coffee—One and a third feet will prepare one quart.

Hot Water—Twenty cubic feet will heat 20 gallons to a boiling point, enough water for an average family wash.

Less than 100 cubic feet of gas a day is used to the cooking and heating for an average family of five persons.

IN MEMORY OF MRS. WYATT

In this day we are reminded of the uncertainty of life.

Death removed one of Clanton's most noble women in the passing away of Mrs. R. F. Wyatt Saturday afternoon.

Respected as a citizen, beloved as a friend, her death came as a shock to the entire community, although not unexpected, as the end came after a long and lingering illness.

In the character of Mrs. Wyatt there were blended many of the noblest elements of beautiful womanhood. Her piety and staunch integrity were recognized on all sides. She was a faithful wife, a good home maker and fine housekeeper. To know her was to love her, and to associate with her closely you could fully appreciate her many fine qualities.

She loved her friends, was devoted to her church and most charitable to all. We shall miss her. Her husband brothers and sisters will miss her, but we find consolation in the thought—Heaven has been made brighter by the transplanting of this beautiful flower.

She was endeared to her many friends by the tenderest chords of love and sympathy, and we deeply feel the shadow which falls upon us when one so great, so beloved, is called to the great beyond.

We tender our sympathy to the members of the family from whose circle a golden link has been broken, and we point them for solace and comfort to the Father, whom she served, and who has promised His own: "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end."

Let us think of her as just having taken the journey ahead of us; let us try somehow to rejoice with her, as she rejoices, where beyond these voices there is peace.

There is a brighter side. It is just through the thin veil where Christ is, and where she is too. Now she knows and sees what we can only apprehend by faith in the unbroken word of a loving saviour.

The funeral services were held Sunday morning, Rev. Limbrick (her former pastor) officiating.

Interment was made in Walnut Creek cemetery with Mr. Martin in charge.

Her grave was banked with flowers, tenderly placed by loving hands. It was all we could do, and yet, it seemed so little to testify in loving remembrance to the place she held in our hearts.

She peacefully sleeps now in the silent city of the dead awaiting the resurrection morning when all friends and loved ones shall again be reunited, to part no more.

A Mother's Duty

A mother that fails to use her time and thought for the very best interest of her children is not worthy of being a mother.

Ask your husband, the man that you have selected for the father of your children; what provision he has made for their welfare in event of his unexpected death.

You owe to yourself and to your children, "Especially to your children" the duty of exerting every precaution against being left without sufficient living and educational funds.

There are a few husbands and fathers who are too selfish to make this provision. See if you have selected one of this type for the father of your children.

—14—

"No," Selina admitted, "but those Italian villas and French chateaux in north Chicago suburbs are a good deal like a lace evening gown in the Arizona desert. It wouldn't keep you cool in the daytime, and it wouldn't be warm enough at night. I suppose a native architecture is evolved from building for the local climate and the needs of the community, keeping beauty in mind as you go. We don't need turrets and towers any more than we need draw-bridges and moats. It's all right to keep them, I suppose, where they grew up, in a country where the feudal system meant that any day your next-door neighbor might take it into his head to call his gang around him and sneak up to steal your wife and tapestries and gold drinking cups."

Dirk was interested and amused. Talks with his mother were likely to affect him thus. "What's your idea of a real Chicago house, mother?"

Selina answered quickly, as if she had thought often about it; as if she would have liked just such a dwelling on the site of the old DeJong farmhouse in which they now were seated so comfortably. "Well, it would need big porches for the hot days and nights so's to catch the prevailing southwest winds from the prairies in the summer—a porch that would be swung clear around to the east, too—or a terrace or another porch east so that if the precious old lake breeze should come up just when you think you're dying of the heat, as it sometimes does, you could catch that, too. It ought to be built—the house, I mean—rather squarish and tight and solid against our cold winters and northeasters. Then sleeping porches, of course. There's a grand American institution for you! England may have its afternoon tea on the terrace, and Spain may have its patio, and France its courtyard, and Italy its pergola, vine-covered; but America's got the sleeping porch—the screened-in open-air sleeping porch, and I shouldn't wonder if the man who first thought of that would get precedence, on Judgment day, over the men who invented the airplane, the talking machine, and the telephone. After all, he had more mind but the health of the human race." After which grand period Selina grinned at Dirk, and Dirk grinned at Selina and the two giggled together there by the fireplace, companionably.

"Mother, you're simply wonderful!—only your native Chicago dwelling seems to be mostly porch."

Selina waved such carping criticism away with a careless hand. "Oh, well, any house that has enough porches, and two or three bathrooms and at least eight closets can be lived in comfortably, no matter what else it has or hasn't got."

Next day they were more serious. The eastern college and the architectural career seemed to be settled things. Selina was content, happy. Dirk was troubled about the expense. He spoke of it at breakfast next morning (Dirk's breakfast; his mother had had hers hours before and now as he drank his coffee, was sitting with him a moment and glancing at the paper that had come in the rural mail delivery). She had been out in the fields overseeing the transplanting of young tomato seedlings from hotbed to field. She wore an old gray sweater buttoned up tight, for the air was still sharp. On her head was a battered black felt soft hat (an old one of Dirk's) much like the one she had worn to the Haymarket that day ten years ago.

"I've been thinking," he began, "the expense—"

"Pigs'll do it," Selina said, calmly. "I've been wanting to put them in for three or four years. It's August Hempel's idea. Hogs, I should have said."

He echoed, "Hogs!" rather faintly.

"High-bred hogs. They're worth their weight in silver this minute, and will be for years to come. I won't go in for them extensively. Just enough to make an architect out of Mr. Dirk DeJong." Then, at the expression in his face: "Don't look so pained, son. There's nothing revolting about a hog—he's a handsome, impressive-looking animal, the hog, when he isn't treated like one."

He looked dejected. "I'd rather not go to school on—hogs."

She took off the felt hat and tossed it over to the old couch by the window; smoothed her hair back with the flat of her palm. You saw that the soft dark hair was liberally sprinkled with gray now, but the eyes were bright and clear as ever.

"You know, Sobig, this is what they call a paying farm—as vegetable farms go. We're out of debt, the land's in good shape, the crop promises well if we don't have another rainy cold spring like last year's. I'm having a grand time. When I see the asparagus plantation actually yielding, that I planted ten years ago, I'm as happy as if I'd stumbled on a gold mine. I think, sometimes, of the way your father objected to my planting the first one. April, like this, in the country, with everything coming up green and new in the rich black loam—I can't tell you. And when I know that it goes to market as food—the best kind of food, that keeps people's bodies clean and clear and flexible and strong! I like to think of babies' mothers saying: 'Now eat your spinach, every scrap, or you can't have any dessert!' . . . Carrots make your eyes bright. . . . Finish your potato. Potatoes make you strong!'"

Selina laughed, flushed a little.

"Yes, but how about hogs? Do you feel that way about hogs?"

"Certainly," said Selina, briskly. She pushed toward him a little blue-and-white platter that lay on the white cloth near her elbow. "Have a bit more bacon, Dirk. One of these nice curly slivers that are so crisp."

"I've finished my breakfast, Mother." He rose.

The following autumn saw him a student of architecture at Cornell. He worked hard, studied even during his vacation.

He would come home to the heat and humidity of the Illinois summers and spend hours each day in his own room that he had fitted up with a long work-table and a drawing board. His T-square was at hand; two triangles—a 45 and a 60; his compass; a pair of dividers. Selina sometimes stood behind him watching him as he carefully worked on the tracing paper. His contempt for the local architecture was now complete. Especially did he hold forth on the subject of the apartment houses that were mushrooming on every street in Chicago from Hyde Park on the south to Evanston on the north. Chicago was very elegant in speaking of these; never called them "flats"; always apartments. In front of each of these (there were usually six to a building) was stuck a little glass-enclosed cubicle known as a sun-parlor. In these (sometimes you heard them spoken of grandly, as solariums) Chicago dwellers took refuge from the leaden skies, the heavy lake atmosphere, the gray mist and fog and smoke that so frequently swathed the city in gloom. They were done in yellow or rose cretonnes. Silk lampshades glowed therein, and flower-laden boxes. In these frank little boxes Chicago read its paper, sewed, played bridge, even ate its breakfast. It never pulled down the shades.

"Terrible!" Dirk fumed. "Not only are they hideous in themselves, stuck on the front of those houses like three pairs of spectacles, but the lack of decent privacy! They do everything but bathe in 'em. Have they never heard the advice given people who live in glass houses!"

By his junior year he was talking in a large way about the Beaux Arts. But Selina did not laugh at this. "Perhaps," she thought. "Who can tell! After a year or two in an office here, why not another year of study in Paris if he needs it."

Though it was her busiest time on the farm Selina went to Ithaca for his graduation in 1913. He was twenty-two and, she was calmly sure, the best-looking man in his class. Undeniably he was a figure to please the eye; tall, well-built, as his father had been, and blond, too, like his father, except for his eyes. These were brown—not so dark as Selina's, but with some of the soft liquid quality of her glance. They strengthened his face, somehow; gave him an ardent look of which he was not conscious. Women, feeling the ardor of that dark glance turned upon them, were likely to credit him with feelings toward themselves of which he was quite innocent. They did not know that the glance and its effect were mere matters of pigmentation and eye-conformation. Then, too, the gaze of a man who talks little is always more effective than that of one who is loquacious.

Selina, in her black silk dress, and her plain black hat, and her sensible shoes, was rather a quaint little figure among all those vivacious, bevolled, and beribboned mammas. But a distinctive little figure, too. Dirk need not be ashamed of her. She eyed the rather paunchy, prosperous, middle-aged fathers and thought, with a pang, how much handsomer Pervus would have been than any of these, if only he could have lived to see this day. Then, involuntarily, she wondered if this day would ever have occurred, had Pervus lived. Chided herself for thinking thus.

When he returned to Chicago, Dirk went into the office of Hollis & Sprague, architects. But his work there was little more than that of draughtsman, and his weekly stipend could hardly be dignified by the term of salary. But he had large ideas about architecture and he found expression for his suppressed feelings on his week-ends spent with Selina at the farm.

"Baroque" was the word with which he dismissed the new Beachside hotel, north. He said the new Lincoln park bandstand looked like an igloo. He said that the city council ought to order the Potter Palmer mansion destroyed as a blot on the landscape, and waxed profane on the subject of the east face of the Public Library building, downtown.

"Never mind," Selina assured him, happily. "It was all thrown up so hastily. Remember that just yesterday, or the day before, Chicago was an Indian fort, with tepees where towers are now, and mud wallows in place of asphalt. Beauty needs time to perfect it. Perhaps we've been waiting all these years for just such youngsters as you. And maybe some day I'll be driving down Michigan boulevard with a distinguished visitor—Roelf Pool, perhaps. Why not? Let's say Roelf Pool, the famous sculptor. And he'll say, 'Who designed that building—the one that is so strong and yet so light? So gay and graceful and yet so reticent.' And I'll say, 'Oh, that! That's one of the earlier efforts of my son, Dirk DeJong.'"

But Dirk pulled at his pipe moodily; shook his head. "Oh, you don't know, mother. It's so d—d slow. First thing you know I'll be thirty. And what am I! An office boy—or little more than that—at Hollis'."

During his university years Dirk had seen much of the Arnolds, Eugene and Paula, but it sometimes seemed to Selina that he avoided these meetings—these parties and week-ends. She was content that this should be so, for she guessed that the matter of money held him back. She thought it was well that he should realize the difference now. Eugene had his own car—one of five in the Arnold garage. Paula, too, had hers. Her fascination for Dirk was strong. Selina knew that, too. In the last year or two he had talked very little of Paula and that, Selina knew, meant that he was hard hit.

Sometimes Paula and Eugene drove out to the farm. Eugene would appear in rakish cap, loose London knickers, queer brogans with an English look about them, a carefully careless looseness about the hang and fit of his jacket. Paula did not affect sports clothes for herself. She was not the type, she said. Slim, dark, vivacious, she wore slinky clothes—crepes, chiffons. Her eyes were languorous, lovely. She worshiped luxury and said so.

"I'll have to marry money," she declared. "Now that they've finished culling poor grandpa a beef-baron and taken I don't know how many millions away from him, we're practically on the streets."

"You Like Me Better Than Any Man You Know."

"You look it!" from Dirk; and there was bitterness beneath his light tone.

"Well, it's true. All this silly muckraking in the past ten years or more. Poor father! Of course, granddad was pur-ty rough, let me tell you. I read some of the accounts of that last indictment—the 1910 one—and I must say I gathered that dear old Aug made Jesse James look like a philanthropist. I should think, at his age, he'd be a little scared. After all, when you're over seventy you're likely to have some doubts and fears about punishment in the next world. But not a grand old pirate like grandfather. He'll sack and burn and plunder until he goes down with the ship. And it looks to me as if the old boat had a pretty strong list to starboard right now. Father says himself that unless a war breaks, or something, which isn't at all likely, the packing industry is going to spring a leak."

"Elaborate figure of speech," murmured Eugene. The four of them—Paula, Dirk, Eugene and Selina—were sitting on the wide screened porch that Selina had had built at the southwest corner of the house. Paula was, of course, in the couch-swing. Occasionally she touched one slim languid foot to the floor and gave indolent impetus to the couch.

"It is, rather, isn't it? Might as well finish it, then. Darling Aug's been the grand old captain right through the stage. Dad's never been more than a pretty bum second mate. And as for you, Gene my love, cabin boy would be, y'understand me, big." Eugene had gone into the business a year before.

"What can you expect," retorted Eugene, "of a lad that hates salt pork? And every other kind of nice meat?"

He despised the yards and all that went with it.

Selina got up and walked to the end of the porch. "There's Adam coming in with the last load for the day. He'll be driving into town now. Cornelius started an hour ago." She went down the steps on her way to oversee the loading of Adam Bras' wagon. At the bottom of the steps she turned. "Why can't you two stay to supper? You can quarrel comfortably right through the meal and drive home in the cool of the evening."

"I'll stay," said Paula, "thanks. If you'll have all kinds of vegetables, cooked and uncooked. And let me go out into the fields and pick 'em myself like Maud Muller or Marie Antoinette or any of those make-believe rustic gals."

In her French-heeled slippers and her flimsy silk stockings she went out into the rich black furrows of the fields, Dirk carrying the basket.

"Asparagus," she ordered first. Then. "But where is it? Is that it!"

"You dig for it, idiot," said Dirk, stooping, and taking from his basket the queerly curved sharp knife or spud used for cutting the asparagus shoots. "Cut the shoots three or four inches below the surface."

"Oh, let me do it!" She was down on her silken knees in the dirt, ruined a goodly patch of the fine, tender shoots, gave it up and sat watching Dirk's expert manipulation of the knife. "Let's have radishes, and corn, and tomatoes and lettuce and peas and artichokes and—"

"Artichokes grow in California, not Illinois."

He was more than usually uncommunicative, and noticeably moody.

Paula remarked it. "Why the Othello brow?"

"You didn't mean that rot, did you? about marrying a rich man. You were joking, weren't you?"

"I wasn't. I'd hate being poor, or even just moderately rich. I'm used to money—lords of it. I'm twenty-four. And I'm looking around."

He kicked an innocent beet-top with his boot. "You like me better than any man you know."

"Of course I do. Just my luck."

"Well, then, let's take these vegetables in."

She made a pretense of lifting the heavy basket. Dirk snatched it roughly out of her hand so that she gave a little cry and looked ruefully down at the red mark on her palm. He caught her by the shoulder—even shook her a little. "Look here, Paula. Do you mean to tell me you'd marry a man simply because he happened to have a lot of money?"

"Perhaps not simply because he had a lot of money. But it certainly would be a factor, among other things."

Six months later Paula Arnold was married to Theodore A. Storm, a man of fifty, a friend of her father's, head of so many companies, stockholder in so many banks, director of so many corporations that even old Aug Heinpel seemed a recluse from business in comparison. She never called him Teddy. No one ever did. Theodore Storm was a large man—not exactly stout, perhaps, but flabby. His inches saved him from grossness. He had a large white serious face, fine thick dark hair, graying at the temples. Within three years Paula had two children, a boy and a girl. "There! That's done," she said. Her marriage was a great success and she knew it. For the war, coming in 1914, a few months after her wedding, sent the Hempel-Arnold interests sky-rocketing. Millions of pounds of American beef and pork were shipped to Europe. In two years the Heinpel fortune was greater than it ever had been. Paula was up to her eyes in relief work for Bleeding Belgium.

Dirk had not seen her in months. She telephoned him unexpectedly one Friday afternoon in his office at Hollis & Sprague's.

"Come out and spend Saturday and Sunday with us, won't you? We're running away to the country this afternoon. I'm so sick of Bleeding Belgium, you can't imagine. I'm sending the children out this morning. I can't get away so early. I'll call for you in the roadster this afternoon at four and drive you out myself."

"I don't think I—"

"I'll call for you at four. I'll be at the curb. Don't keep me waiting, will you?"

Charcoal

Charcoal is the form of amorphous carbon obtained by strongly heating wood. If required for fuel it can be obtained by the partial combustion of wood in heaps. The wood, cut into convenient and uniform lengths, is systematically piled in a mound-shaped heap with provision made for draft. The mound is covered with earth, except a small opening at the top. This is a charcoal kiln. When completed it is fired, and by means of slow combustion the wood is converted into charcoal, which is usually almost dead black in color and much lighter in weight than wood. That is the old way of producing charcoal.

Alaskan "Dog Car"

Almost every conceivable type of transportation is used to move the mails—railroads, steamboats, automobiles, airplanes, motor boats, wagons, horses, pneumatic tubes, belt conveyors, motorcycles, bicycles, the sled of the arctic and even the "dog car," the Detroit News says.

The "dog car" is an Alaskan invention. An abandoned railroad runs out of Nome to a mining camp. The enterprising arctic circle mail man hitches his dog team to a hand car and scoots up the mountain side with the mail.

WALTZING MICE

"They may talk of their balls, of their dances, of their afternoon teas, of their dancing classes, but when it comes to dancing we are as fine as any of them," said Willie Waltzing Mouse.

"We certainly are," said Wenna Waltzing Mouse.

And the little waltzing mice said they were fine dancers, too.

"We don't bother about learning different steps and we don't bother about going to dancing school," said Willie Waltzing Mouse.

"Of course we don't bother about such foolish things," said Wenna Waltzing Mouse.

"We don't bother about making a curtsy or a low bow.

"We just waltz and waltz and waltz until we are tired," said Willie Waltzing Mouse.

"That is the sensible way to do," said Wenna Waltzing Mouse.

"Well, why not have a waltz now?" suggested Willie.

"Fine," said Wenna. "I feel like waltzing and waltzing and waltzing."

"So do we," said the little mice.

"Let's have a fine dance now," said Willie Waltzing Mouse.

"We'll show the people who look at us in our cage," said Wenna Waltzing Mouse, "that they aren't the only creatures who can dance."

"We'll certainly show them," said the little mice.

"There is a sign outside our cage which lets the people know we're the waltzing mice," said Willie.

"They'll believe it when they see us," said Wenna.

All the mice started to waltz.

Around and around and around they went. Everyone who was visiting there that day went to look at them and people came from other parts of the animal house to see the waltzing mice.

"How Can They Keep It Up?"

"I should think they would get dizzy," one person would say, and another would add:

"How can they ever keep it up so long a time?"

And a third would remark:

"They certainly are the waltzing mice. They're well named.

But the waltzing mice, led by Willie and Wenna, didn't think how of what people were saying or thinking or doing.

They only cared about their waltzing and how they did waltz and how long a time they kept it up, for they are rightly named the waltzing mice.

They will always clear a space for their dancing wherever they are and whenever they want to dance—and that is most of the time, for the regular waltzing mice can dance and dance and dance and dance and not be tired of dancing.

In fact they made up a zoolet, too—to add to the zoolets being contributed to the Zoolet Society.

Zoolets are verses of zoo creatures The waltzing mice called their zoolet Dancing.

It went like this:

Waltzing, waltzing, waltzing,
Whirling, whirling, whirling,
Round, round, round,
Clear a space, clear a space,
Give us dancing ground.
Waltzing is our greatest joy,
Waltzing, waltzing, waltzing!

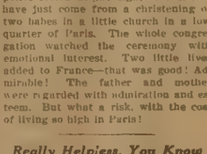
Solution of Last Week's Puzzle.



HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fit the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

"MOVIES" HAVE MADE FRECKLES VALUABLE

It is the movies that have capitalized freckles. Every freckle means a dollar to a boy if he has them in abundance. Such a boy can laugh at the triumphs of beauty on the screen. His capital is equally lucrative. His face is his fortune, and truly that golden largess in his countenance is a golden oalance in the bank.

The sun in its indelible tattooing has not been wholly unkind. The sun itself can show you the spots."

What a the charm of freckles on a boy's face? For unquestionably they have charm, though anything but charming to the boy.

They say that a face of many freckles means abundance of iron in the blood. Aren't all freckle-faced boys manly?—iron in the blood, iron in the soul. We don't believe you can iron out the fact.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Modern France Surely Paradise of Children

The single child in France is the normal standard. He is petted by the whole clan of uncles, aunts, and cousins. At six years of age his own little world seems to revolve about him, eager to satisfy his smallest wish, to keep him amused, to provide him with pleasure. In the Luxembourg gardens I have been watching the children of France, and listening to their laughter

Found Treasure Trove

John Stevens, mate of a lumber schooner at Laurel, Del., while removing a rotten board in the floor of the seal hole of the boat, was surprised to find several old coins under the old plank. A closer search disclosed a bag containing scores of pieces of money coined by at least a dozen eastern and South American countries. Some of the coins are more than a hundred years old, the latest ones about fifty. The boat is more than fifty years old.

before the guignol show—old Punch and Judy—in the Champs Elysees, and galloping pigs up in the great circus of the Boulevard de Clinchy. Sir Phillip Gibbs says in World's Work

France is the paradise of children Crowds gather round to watch them at play. The very eyes of the agents de police soften at the sight of them. I have just come from a christening of two babes in a little church in a low quarter of Paris. The whole congregation watched the ceremony with emotional interest. Two little tikes added to France—that was good! Admirable! The father and mother were regarded with admiration and esteem. But what a risk, with the cost of living so high in Paris!

Really Helpless, You Know

The prize excuse was introduced in an English court during the trial of a man charged with wife-beating.

A neighbor who was present during the assault was called as a witness for the prosecution. He described the blows in detail and the wife's helplessness.

In astonishment the judge turned to the witness and asked: "Do you mean the court to understand that you stood by and saw this man strike the poor woman again and again?"

"Yes, I saw it all."

"And you made no effort to interfere?"

"I couldn't."

"Why not?"

"I was filling my pipe."

Hardly Appropriate

One youngster with a weak theological background sang with all his heart and voice: "We can sing full though we be."

Big Seaplanes for Nonstop Flight to Hawaii

The United States navy has built two giant seaplanes with which a nonstop flight from San Diego to Honolulu will be made if 24 hours if expectations are realized. Birmingham.—The St. Louis-San Francisco Railroad has applied to the interstate commerce commission at Washington for authority to acquire control of the Muscle Shoals, Birmingham and Pensacola Railroad by the purchase of its capital stock, amounting to $2,500,000.

The Muscle Shoals company was organized under the Florida laws to construct or purchase and operate a line from Pensacola, Fla., to Muscle Shoals Ala. This line, when constructed, will connect with the Kansas City, Memphis and Birmingham, near Glen Allen, Ala. The Muscle Shoals company has contracted to acquire a line running from Pensacola to a connection with the Southern Railway at Kimbrough, Ala., and it is contemplated that the remainder of the line will be constructed as conditions warrant.

STATE NEWS

Additional teams and men are being added to the force at work on the construction of the dam across Shoal creek near Hartselle for the purpose of providing a fish pond. The contractors, Burleson and Dunaway, have every reason to believe that they will have it completed by September, when the water will be turned in. Arrangements will be complete for stocking the lake when completed, and it is expected that this lake will be one of the noted fishing places in this section.

The fact that more than half of the scales in Huntsville are incorrect, some being in favor of the store and others being in favor of their customers, was announced by H. L. Flurry, chief of the Alabama division of weights and measures. Mr. Flurry declared that exactly 52 per cent of the scales were inaccurate and he put tags on those that could not be immediately corrected by adjustment, condemning them to the discard.

The caving-in of portions of lots at Birmingham in the Southside section has caused a reign of terror and fear to residents of that section during the past week. It is believed a dead underground lake has been the cause of the cave-in which has occurred at three different places within a radius of 21 blocks, where a garage, shed and a tree have dropped into the ground, to a depth of 20 feet.

Attalla and the Alabama Water Company have practically agreed on the terms by which the city will sell its water plant to the corporation and it is expected that the contract will be signed at once. The only hitch in the negotiations lately has been the duration of the franchise to be granted. The company wanted a perpetual franchise, but the city has steadfastly held out for a 30-year limit.

Papers incorporating the Walworth Alabama Company have been filed at Gadsden and it is announced the new organization is ready to carry out plans for enlarging the Attalla plant of the National Pipe and Foundry Company which was recently taken over by the Walworth Company of Boston. The Alabama branch has an authorized capital of $725,000.

A verdict of not guilty was returned by the jury in the cases of Sergeant Ruffel Burden and Private Willie Carrick, Camp McClellan soldiers, tried on charges of manslaughter in connection with the death of Mrs. Dove Sanders, Anniston woman. It was alleged that while acting as military police they fired into an automobile in which Mrs. Sanders was one of the occupants.

It is understood at Albany-Decatur that the Alabama state highway department has recommended that the draw span of the Tennessee River bridge upon which work is to start soon will be located on this side of the river in line with the railroad bridge. Belief is general that the government will have to dredge the river if this report is found true.

As a result of a dispute over a land line, Claude Lawler, 40, a farmer of near Spruce Pine, is in a serious condition at a Florence hospital and A. J. Two "New Breeds" Are Investigated

Believed That "Turken" Is Nothing Else Than Transylvania Naked-Neck.

There is no lure like that of the cross of widely separated species of animals and birds. That nature frowns on such crosses is evidenced by the failure of repeated and persistent experiments under favorable conditions. Where progeny has followed violent crossings, it is sterile as a rule. The Department of Agriculture has issued a press release in this connection, which is as follows:

"The United States Department of Agriculture has received many requests from all parts of the country for information concerning two so-called new "breeds" of poultry, the 'Turken' and the 'Kiwi.' The department has been aware of advertisements concerning these new and novel 'breeds,' for which some rather remarkable claims have been made. The advertisements and literature describing the origin and qualities of these 'breeds' seem to have aroused much interest on the part of the public, since the department has received several urgent requests for an explanation regarding the reliability of the claims made.

How "Turken" Was Produced.

"The statements in the advertisements and literature claim that the 'turken' was originally produced by crossing a male turkey with a female chicken, and that the 'Kiwi' was produced by crossing a male ostrich with a female chicken.

"Successful crosses have been made between the pheasant and the chicken, and in practically every case the progeny has been of the male sex and sterile. Also, successful crosses have been made between the guinea and the chicken, and here again the sex of the progeny has almost invariably been male and the hybrids have been sterile Both of these crosses have been made with great difficulty and, so far as known, no cross giving any progeny has ever been reported between the turkey and the chicken. Furthermore, it is highly improbable that the progeny, if any have ever been secured, would breed at all, and certainly not readily. In such wide or violent crosses the progeny is always sterile, and the claim for the 'Turken,' which is reported to be the hybrid progeny of a cross between the turkey and the chicken, is in all probability not founded on fact.

Is Naked-Necked Chicken.

"One other point must be made concerning the so-called 'Turken.' The illustrations accompanying the advertisements and literature are in all probability photographs of the Transylvania Naked-neck chickens. According to the best information obtainable this odd-looking breed originated in West India, and the characteristic naked neck has bred true for many years. It is a distinct character of the breed. The department believes that the so-called 'Turken' is nothing else than the Transylvania Naked-neck chicken, which apparently possesses no qualities superior to the more important standard breeds and varieties, and has not been shown to be particularly well adapted to conditions in many parts of our country.

"As far as the reported cross giving rise to the 'Kiwi' is concerned, there is much less evidence to support such a cross than in the case of the 'Turken.' This is too violent a cross to produce any results whatever.

"The burden of proof that such crosses as those giving rise to the 'Turken' and the 'Kiwi' must remain with the sponsors of such novel productions. In the meantime, the interests of the public should be safeguarded."

Feed to Maintain Cows of Different Weights

Extensive detailed experiments have been made to determine the average amount of protein and other food nutriments needed to maintain cows of different weights. Also, the different feeds have been tested to determine the average amounts of digestible protein and other nutriments. This data has been arranged in table form and may be found in various books, experiment station bulletins, etc., but is too extensive to reproduce here. These experiments also show the amounts of food nutriments required to produce different amounts of milk. By taking the data from these tables, showing how much is required, the balanced ration is worked out by grouping together the necessary amounts of the different feeds to give the correct total and proportion of nutriments. Rations as worked out by this process can only serve as a guide because of the great variation in individual cows, but they are very valuable in actually obtaining the best rations.

Exercise Mare and Foal in Cool of the Evening

In the evening when it is cool and the flies are inactive, turn the mare and foal out on pasture. This will allow the colt to get plenty of exercise, grass, and fresh air with the least possible interference from flies. When the mare is not working, the pasture is the best place for both mare and foal, but they should be provided with shade of some sort. When natural shade is not available, a cheap structure should be built to meet the needs. Hang a few sacks under the trees or in the shed so that the mare and foal can use them to chase off flies.

Prepare Early for Filling the Silo

Arrange for Help, Power and Cutting Equipment.

Plan early for the important work of filling the silo. Arrange for your help, power and cutting equipment. Make measurements for placing cutter and power. Plan to have a clear road to the cutter and also one leaving, so that the louds of fodder can easily be brought to the machine and leave without requiring backing or difficulties in getting away. Select a good foundation for the cutter and set up blower pipe as nearly vertical as possible so as to avoid friction and unnecessary length of pipe. The machine should be set level and securely fastened by stakes and by sinking grooves for wheels. In putting up blower pipe or carrier, care should be taken to securely fasten top at entrance to roof. In building your silo it is well to construct a ladder reaching from top door to outside opening at roof so that it will be easy for a man to go to the top of an empty silo and open the roof door to lower rope or pulley for elevating pipe or carrier.

Corn should be fairly well matured, for at this time the plant contains its greatest amount of food material. This stage may be determined by observing the denting of the corn, the drying of the bottom leaves or some of the outside husks.

The early dent stage is that period when the corn is best matured for putting in shocks. If the corn be sowed thick in drills or broadcast, its maturity can be determined by tassel and silk. With cane, kaffir corn or milo maize the same rule will hold true as to maturity. If the corn is overmatured it will be necessary to add water which can best be done by using a hose and putting the water in at the blower, using from one-half to one barrel per load according to the dryness of the fodder. Where the silage is to be used for fattening, rather than milk production, it is important that the corn be mature, and for this purpose it is best to plant an early variety in those sections where a later one will not mature.

Renovating Strawberry Bed Soon After Harvest

The strawberry patch which has borne one crop should be renovated soon after harvest. This is done by plowing out the plants on either one or both sides of the row, leaving a strip only about four inches wide. The soil of the plowed land is thoroughly cultivated and if a spike-toothed harrow is used, cross-cultivation may be practiced so that a good bed is made for the new runner plants. Under good soil conditions these will start to row within a short time and will make a row of new plants 12 to 16 inches wide by early fall. The new plants are confined to the proper width by continuing cultivation until they cease to grow.

Usually it does not pay to renovate a commercial strawberry patch that has already produced two crops, although a home patch, under very favorable conditions, may be allowed to yield three and sometimes four crops.

"Hard Luck" With Pigs Result of Wrong Feeds

A great deal of so-called "hard luck" with young pigs soon after farrowing can be traced directly to improper feeding and in most cases to overfeeding of the sows. Just because a sow seems hungry just after farrowing is no index that she should receive feed.

A liberal supply of water should always be available. This will usually satisfy and quiet the sow. She should receive very little feed for at least 24 hours after farrowing. The first few feeds of grain should be light and fed in the form of thick slop. She should not be on full feed for from six to ten days after farrowing.

THE ONLY DEMOCRATIC PAPER IN CHILTON COUNTY—LINOTYPE EQUIPMENT MODERN — LARGEST WEEKLY IN CENTRAL ALABAMA

CHILTON COUNTY NEWS

VOLUME 4. CLANTON ALABAMA, THURSDAY, AUGUST 13, 1925. 49

Col. Hester Gives Interesting Figures on Cotton Crop

Home consumption and foreign demand has left little of the 1924-25 commercial cotton crop in the southern states, H. G. Hester, secretary of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, declares in his annual cotton report, details of which have been given out. The increase of 3,407,- 959 balesof the 1924-25 crop over the previous year has been practically cleaned up by the increased demand from spinners.

Mr. Hester's report puts the total of the commercial crop for this year at 14,078,350 bales, an increase over the previous year 3 867,959 bales and over that of 1922 23 of 3,415,550

He says the size of the crop was no impediment to its marking and by the end of the first six months more than 50 per cent or over eleven and three-quarter million bales, had come into sight, of which eight and one-half million bales had been exported and gone into consumption, that is the our home mills were not so rabid for supplies foreign consumers came into the taking on a liberal scale until the end

Colonel Hester says the result was a clean up of all that we had to dispose of between home consumption and foreign demand the excess of near three and a half millions had disappeared leaving little or none of the year's production in the cotton states.

Weather greatly assisted in suppressing the ravages of the boll weevil but no little credit is due to the individual efforts of farmers in fighting the pest and the campaign of education of the past several years has been fraught withresults that justify anticipations of future success in combatting the evil.

Of the 14,247,000 bales consumed during the past year 7,787,000 were used by foreign mills Not before, since 1915. to Colonel Hester says, has consumption of American cotton abroad passed the seven million mark and that when it is remembered that monthly consumption has been on an ascending scale, it may be figured out that if the present rate is continued it will require a larger crop than that of last year to supply the world's spindles.

Foreign mills are reported in good shape and, as stated by one authority, even in this country where mill operation has declined 15 or 20 per cent in the past few months, consumption today is about 33 per cent larger than a year ago.

New Store Will Open Soon in Clanton

Another new store will be added to Clanton business circles when the repairs on the Cooley building are completed. A cash and carry grocery business on the order of Piggly Wiggly will be operated, although it will not be a Piggly store. Due announcement will be made later as to the opening.

Street and Road Work Progressing

The street and road paving under way on the highway north of Clanton and on the streets of Clanton is being pushed forward this week, after some delas caused by rain and from lack of cement

All the paving will have been laid on Sixth street by the end of this week, and then the block on Main street will be commenced

After several days of rain, paving is being pushed on the highway south of Clanton, several fills being jumped at the present time in order to allow them to have more time to settle.

It is just a matter of two or three weeks now until paving of the state highway will be under way through the town of Clanton.

Miller Bros. have made the connection of the paving north of Lomax with that just below Thorsby. This completes the north half of Chilton county with the exception of a small fill and several places where it has been torn out north of Jemison after it had cracked open.

Grammar School to Open Sept. 7

Clanton grammar school will open for the fall and winter session on September 7, according to Prof. W. E. Martin, this week.

It is expected that the enrollment will be the largest in the history of the school, and it is feared that the seating capacity of the school building will not be sufficient to care for all who apply.

It was planned to build a new school building this year, but on account of a hitch in the plans the matter was deferred until next year.

The announcement for opening by Prof. Martin follows:

The Clanton Grammar School will open on Sept. 7. I would advise all pupils living in other districts who expect to attend this school to enroll on the first day, as we can take only a limited number of such pupils. The pupils who are in the first six grades will please be present at 8. The pupils who are in the Junior High Grades may be present at 10.

W. E. MARTIN, Principal.

Chilton County Citizen Killed at Cherokee Bluff

Mr. L. B. Patterson, a citizen of Chilton county, was instantly killed at Cherokee Bluffs Monday afternoon, when a rock fell on him from a cliff which was excavating for the dam to be built at that place.

The remains were brought back to Chilton county, and were buried at Poplar Springs church Wednesday morning at nine o'clock.

Mr. Patterson was the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Patterson of this county, and had lived here practically all his life. He was also a brother of Mrs. Munroe Wyatt of Clanton.

FIRE PREVENTION

Insurance companies, state insurance departments, city governments and large private industries all cooperate to prevent destruction of property by fire.

As the largest corporations employ legal talent to prevent litigation, so the insurance companies employ experts in fire prevention campaigns.

Active fire prevention work was not taken up systematically in our country until about 1915. At first, many property owners resisted having inspectors visit their homes, basements and office buildings to point out fire hazards and suggest changes.

The first idea was that, since insurance companies collected premiums on risks to pay the losses, let the buildings burn and put new money into circulation to employ more labor.

They overlooked the great fact that every dollar of fire loss had to be collected first from the public, and the more fires the higher insurance rates.

Cities that put on fire prevention campaigns cut fire losses that averaged from $2 to $11 per capita annually to about 90 cents per capita.

The fire loss in the United States last year was about $548,000,000, and about 16,000 lives. There is still room for fire prevention. Where it is not undertaken voluntarily, it should be made compulsory.

Health and Home

FEEDING BABY DURING SUMMER

Milk is recognized as the ideal food for young children. It should be carefully guarded during the warm summer months, to insure its freedom from germs or bacteria that might cause harm to the child. Because of its nature, it is, under certain conditions, a breeding and propagating ground for germ life and may soon become unfit for use unless it is handled with the utmost care and vigilance. Perhaps the ideal way to obviate this risk is through the use of evaporated milk. This milk is only pure milk with sixty per cent of the water removed from it, and is absolutely sterile. It is of double richness but may be modified by the addition of water, which will return it to its original volume with a greatly enhanced food value.

Evaporated milk is sterilized and has a high nutritive content. This causes it to be a very excellent food for the young child and the infant. In fact, many of the leading pediatricians of the country advocate its use after the child is deprived of its mother's milk. A formula, evolved by these pediatricians, through experimentation, is as follows:

From Sixth Week to Third Month.

Milk, evaporated ..... 6 ounces
Lime water ..... 3 ounces
Milk sugar ..... 2 ounces
Boiled water ..... 36 ounces

Seven feedings in twenty-four hours; 6 to 6 ounces at three-hour intervals during the day and four-hour intervals at night.

From Third Month to Fifth Month.

Milk, evaporated ..... 7½ ounces
Lime water ..... 3 ounces
Milk sugar ..... 3 ounces
Boiled water ..... 29 ounces

Six feedings in twenty-four hours; 6 to 6 ounces at three-hour intervals during the day and a feeding at 10 p. m.

From Fifth to Seventh Month.

Milk evaporated ..... 10 ounces
Lime water ..... 3 ounces
Milk sugar ..... 3 ounces
Boiled water ..... 28 ounces

Five feedings in twenty-four hours; 6 to 7 ounces at four-hour intervals, the last feeding to be given at 10 p. m.

From Seventh to Ninth Month.

Milk, evaporated ..... 11 ounces
Lime water ..... 3 ounces
Milk sugar ..... 2 ounces
Boiled water ..... 36 ounces

7 to 8 ounces at four-hour intervals during the day. Last feeding at ten at night.

From Ninth to Twelfth Month.

Milk, evaporated ..... 12 ounces
Lime water ..... 4 ounces
Milk sugar ..... 2 ounces
Barley water ..... 34 ounces

6 to 8 ounces at four-hour intervals during day. Last feeding at ten at night.

Drought Injures to Growing Trees

Montgomery, Aug. 11.—Drought can kill trees in the same way that it does other plants, states the Alabama Commission of Forestry. The effects in this connection are not as quick, however, as in the case of shortlived plants but are readily distinguishable during a long drought or succession of drought.

Many plants have protective devices to prevent too rapid evaporation of water from the foliage, such as hairy surface or the presence of wax over the leaves. These special adaptations often vary according to the season of the year and the locality in which the plants are growing. Desert plants in particular have such arrangements to a degree of perfection. Few southern forest trees, however, are well equipped to protect themselves in this manner since under normal conditions there is sufficient soil moisture to permit to practically total evaporation from the leaves without too great a loss upon the tree.

In Alabama the long dry period of last summer and fall was followed after a brief winter intermission by another severe drought during the recent spring and early summer. In many parts of the state, young pines have suffered severely, and a material percentage of mortality has ocurred that can be attributed to no other cause than a lack of soil moisture.

Had the drought of last year not been accompanied or followed by extensive forest fires, the surface mulch would have been preserved and the precipitation falling during thme winter would have remained in the soil instead of rapidly running off. If the soil could have absorbed and retaied the winter rains a great deal of ground moisture would have been available during the spring drought, and not only the forest growth but also theh agricultural crops would have fared much better.

Wood Buildings Stand Earthquake

Wooden buildings withstood the recent earthquake shocks in the West with practically no damage, points out the Alabama Commission of Forestry. Many structures of more rigid materials, however, suffered severely, some being entirely demolished.

Wood is one of the basic economic materials. Its growing scarcity has compelled people to seek for substitutes. However, for every substitute that is discovered there arises several new needs for wood. Of late years the trend of research in construction materials has not been so much toward finding substitutes as toward increasing the availability of the wood itself. The latter result is being sought both by increasing the amount of timber grown and by making it go farther in the industries through preserving and fireproofing processes and through close utilization.

While certain structures such as large industrial plants, skyscrapers and suspension bridges require special materials, yet for residences, ordinary business buildings and 75 per cent of the bridges no material excels wood. Engineers have lately determined that even in the case of fairly large bridges creosoted timbers and pilings give more service per dollar of investment than any other material.

To restore and perpetuate the forests so that there will always be an adequate supply of wood is one of the great problems of the present generation. It is being attacked on all sides, however, with reasonably good prospects of success. The first thing, of course, is the protection against fire. This fast is becoming quite generally realized, with the result that fewer fires are started and thousands of citizens turn out during bad fire seasons to help extinguish those that occur through accident or carelessness. With the fire protection problem solved, the remaining features of a general forestry program can be put into effect, and millions of acres of land now lying idle will be producing a valuable material which present and past experience has proved that mankind cannot do without.

5c and 10c Store Planned in Clanton

Clanton is soon to have a regular 5-cent and 10-cent store. Mr. V. J. Elmore, proprietor of the Chicago Sales Company, plans to open a store in the building formerly occupied by Conrad & Son, the store to be one of the most complete to be found in a town the size of Clanton.

He stated to a representative of the News yesterday that when the work is completed on remodeling the store it will compare favorably with the best anywhere with handsome plate windows and French beveled mirrors in background. A large red tile is being used around the front under the windows. A neat reception room has been fitted up at the back with a mezzanine office arrangement at the rear.

Mr. Elmore wishes the general public to understand that the merchandise carried in the stock and the prices on same will be in line with what is carried by the large stores like Kress and Woolworth in the larger cities.

No expense is being spared on the arrangement of this store, and Mr. Elmore stated before he left for the eastern market to buy stock for the Chicago Sales Co., and to complete the final purchases and arrangements for the new store that owing to the new arrangements, Chicago Sales Co would remain in its present location.

The store will be known as the V. J. Elmore 5c, 10c & $1 store, and is connected up with the Consolidated Merchants Syndicate, Inc., which serves over 800 stores, thereby giving him a buying connection that can't be surpassed. It is expected to be opened for business about October 1.

DELIGHTFUL TRIP TO FLORIDA.

Next best to taking a motor trip through Florida, is to listen to the aptly told tales of the traveler who has just returned from such trip.

Approach Mr. Renfroe Mullins when he can be found in proper mood, and he can talk at length concerning Florida's natural beauty and man's ingenuity in developing schemes that accrue fabulous fortunes to their projectors over night.

It is true that the natural beauty and advantages of the Flowerland, have made Florida the cynosure of the gaze of the world. Many true tales of the acquirement of vast fortunes in "get-rich-quick-- schemes, could be told by enterprising corporations and individuals.

Mr. Mullins' two weeks vacation was spent in touring Florida. Mr. Mullins was accompanied on the trip by his wife, daughter and son, Miss Marzell and Jno. Durwood.

Nearly three thousand miles were registered and there were no tire troubles, until practically within easy reach of home.

The trip was altogether a thoroughly refreshing one. Mr. Mullins returned home on Sunday afternon.

Assistant Treasury Secretary Tells Fable of Fate of Two Successful Men.

Men cannot be expected to continue to work, day after day, increasing the productiveness of this country and benefiting others, if they know that on death the major portion of their earnings will be dissipated in Federal estate and state inheritance taxes, declares Charles S. Dewey, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in the American Bankers Association Journal. He says:

"I am going to relate a fable in terms of modern business conditions. John Henry and Walter Brown were aggressive, hard-working men, and each had started business for himself.

"At the time this history opens, John Henry had just died, leaving his entire estate to his son, John Henry, Jr., and had appointed his old friend, Walter Brown, as executor. Prior to his death John Henry had moved to California, leaving his business in the hands of his son under whom it had continued to make excellent headway. The father had been doing a little speculating in oil. This venture had not proved successful and he was indebted in the sum of $500,000.

"Executor Walter Brown, on examination of the estate, found the following situation:

Capital stock of Henry & Co., Inc., a Michigan Corpn.	$5,000,000
Personal debts due banks	500,000

"Walter Brown soon made the unpleasant discovery that in addition to the personal indebtedness of $500,000, and administration expenses of $250,000, the following death duties must be paid:

Federal estate tax	$497,500
California inheritance tax	585,700
Michigan inheritance tax	122,000
Total	$1,205,200

"Added to the personal debt and administration expenses, this made a grand total liability of $1,955,200. The year was 1920. Money was tight. Other manufacturing companies in the same line which might have been interested in a purchase had no money for expansions nor were the banks in a position to handle a loan of this type. Here was a most successful business, built up from small beginnings by one man and carried on to further successes by his son, about to be placed under the hammer.

"Is there any justice in taxation that may force a man and his family to lose the fruits of his entire life's labor, and permit others to benefit? As a last resort, Henry, Jr., was forced into a bond issue. A loan, to settle the debts, administration expenses and death duties, of $2,250,000 was negotiated, upon the following basis:

"The capital stock of the company was left at $5,000,000 represented by 50,000 shares. First mortgage 8 per cent bonds were offered the public with a bonus of two shares of stock with each $1,000 bond. The banker, to protect his bond customers, kept 30,000 shares to assure control of management, and John Henry, Jr., received the balance of 15,500 shares. John now has a good job as general manager of his father's old company, but they do not pay him very much.

"Now we must return to Walter Brown, executor of John Henry, Sr. Walter had always kept close to his own manufacturing business. The more he considered his own situation, the more closely it seemed to him to resemble that of his old friend.

"He therefore called a lawyer and made a complete schedule of his assets, requesting that an estimate of administration expenses and death duties be made. The schedule of assets was as follows:

Capital stock, Walter Brown Co., Mich. Corp.	$4,000,000
California real estate	1,000,000
Tax-exempt bonds, Minn., Mont. and Colo.	500,000
Total	$5,500,000

"Within a few days Mr. Brown's lawyer made the following report:

Debts and admin. expenses	$500,000
Fed. estate tax	$710,625
Cal. inheritance tax	443,194
Mich. inheritance tax	260,405
Minn. inheritance tax	4,280
Mont. inheritance tax	4,496
Colo. inheritance tax	2,700
Total death duties	1,425,703
Total expenses	$1,925,703

"On this basis the estate suffered a reduction from $5,500,000 to approximately $3,574,000, thus wiping out all of its except the corporate stock and pinning a heavy loan on that. Mr. Brown had one son and, as he thought of John Henry, Jr., toiling away with little hope of opportunity he determined that he would not subject his own son to the same tribulations.

"Boom times having come, there was no difficulty obtaining a purchaser for Walter Brown & Co., and the California real estate was sold at a good price. The whole was invested in tax-exempt bonds which yielded a very safe return of about 4½ per cent. Walter Brown then moved his legal residence to the more friendly climate of Florida, where state inheritance and income taxes are forbidden.

"The country suffers by the loss of effort which Walter Brown might have continued to expend under a more intelligent system of taxation. We must reform the tax system in such a way that business and industry shall not be hampered. We must make sure that American citizens shall not be deprived of the incentive to work and accumulate and that this country shall not cease to be a land of opportunity. A tax system which discourages initiative cannot be the right system for America."

Mrs. Dalee Miller accompanied her nephew, Mr. Thornton Dudley, home on Tuesday.

Three-Piece Suit Is in Black and Yellows

This charming costume suit in black kasha cloth is trimmed with lynx fur and worn with a bodice of sand-colored canton crepe, embroidered in henna and gold.

Velvet Is to Be Found in Milady's Wardrobe

Few materials have more versatility than black velvet. It belongs to no particular age nor is it reserved for any special occasion. It appears alike in the wardrobes of the young and the old.

One sees the most adorable little coats for the two-year-old made of black velvet and collared with ermine or squirrel.

In contrast to these are the gowns of the dowager, dignified, stately affairs, that have a modern smartness added to a certain old-time elegance. Trimmed with beautiful and rare laces, they have a distinction that nothing else approaches.

The schoolgirl frock of black velvet is most appealing in its ingenuousness, and the effect of its simplicity is heightened by a telling bit of color or a touch of gay embroidery or fur used with discretion. One of the smartest frocks of the season is a slim, straight affair of black velvet which has a Peter Pan collar of ermine and wide ermine cuffs finishing the long, tight sleeves.

For evening there are few materials that give greater satisfaction, and black velvet evening frocks vary from the simplest models to those whose intricate drapery is a marvel of the skill of a modiste.

Shoe Buckles Are Among Important Accessories

In these times, when attention is given to the elaboration of the smallest details of dress, shoe buckles are among the important accessories. From the most prominent shops abroad are brought countless designs, novel and artistic, many being set with jewels and semi-precious stones.

Some regard a ribbon bow as smarter for oxfords and colonial pumps, but evening shoes are trimmed with the most ornate and expensive buckles, and colors are harmonized in an attractive manner. A slipper of brown satin is trimmed with buckles of dull gilt beautifully chased. On another, of bronze satin, the buckles are of gilt set with topaz.

Evening shoes of black satin are stunningly ornamented with silver buckles in the shape of an ivy leaf, studded solidly with garnets in diamond cut. This design is most engagingly worked out in silver set with imitation emeralds, stunning on black or white shoes or on a pair of emerald green satin dancing slippers.

The latest designs in rhinestone buckles and shoe ornaments are most effective and are shown on some of the finest evening shoes in black and in white. These and all of the other new styles in shoe buckles are not inexpensive.

There's a tendency these days to get away from the Bible and its teachings. While we would take none of the glory from science, as we believe in the right sort, yet when it comes to telling us a man came from the ape and that the Bible is untrue its time to call a halt and draw in the line. Nothing so far has been proven by science to shake our faith in the Bible.—Colbert Reporter.

During a recent three-months period, 76 per cent of the long distance telephone calls between New York and Chicago were completed in less than 5 minutes. Compare this with that of European countries where a search of an hour or more is often necessary to even find a telephone from which to put in a call.

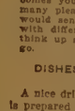
THE KITCHEN CABINET

(©, 1926, Western Newspaper Union.)

Take every good thing that comes your way. There are so many pleasant little outings that would send you home rested and with different viewpoint, but you think up some excuse and do not go.

DISHES FOR WARM DAYS

A nice drink which most people like is prepared with:



Chocolate Sirup.—Take three squares of chocolate, one ounce of cocoa, one and one-half pounds of sugar, and a pint of water, one and one-half teaspoonfuls of vanilla. Boil the cocoa in one-half cupful of water in a double boiler, ten minutes, add the chocolate grated, mixed with one-third of its measure in sugar; add this to the boiling cocoa, stirring constantly, then add the remainder of the sugar and boil for ten minutes. Remove from the fire, strain and cool and add the vanilla. Add a tablespoonful of sirup to cold milk or ice water, top with a spoonful of cream or a marshmallow. This sirup will keep in the ice chest for some time.

Coffee Frappe.—Make a strong infusion of coffee, strain, cool and pack in ice and salt. Serve with whipped cream as a garnish. Chocolate or cocoa may be frozen and served in the same way.

When serving roast of lamb try this sauce to serve with it:

Orange Sauce.—Take one-half cupful of gravy from the roast, add two tablespoonfuls of flour and cook until smooth; add the juice of two oranges and the grated rind of one, one-half cupful of boiling water, salt, cayenne and the juice of a lemon. Serve hot.

Glazed Tongue.—Wash and soak the tongue over night. In the morning place it in a kettle with cold water to cover. Bring to the simmering point and cook at that temperature for several hours until the tongue is very tender. Set away to cool in the liquor. When cold remove the skin from the tongue and trim, fastening the tip and the end together, lay in a mold. Heat three cupfuls of the broth, add one cupful of tomatoes, a bay leaf, a slice of onion, salt and pepper to taste, twelve cloves, some allspice and simmer for twenty minutes. Strain and add two tablespoonfuls of gelatin which has been softened in cold water. Cover the tongue and set away to harden. Unmold and garnish with olives and parsley.

Seasonable Good Things.

A delicious cake to serve for a nice occasion is prepared as follows: Make a white cake, using egg whites and bake in a sheet. Cut in squares and when serving put together with slices of brick ice cream. Cover with whipped cream and decorate each square with bits of candied fruit.

Herring and Potato Salad.—Take one cupful of herring cut in dice, three cupfuls of cooked diced potatoes, one teaspoonful of onion juice, two tablespoonfuls of minced green peppers, four tablespoonfuls of olive oil, three tablespoonfuls of vinegar, a dash of paprika and a few grains of salt. Prepare a French dressing of oil and vinegar and let the fish and potato stand in it for an hour. Mix all the ingredients and pile in the center of a platter, surrounded with shredded cabbage mixed with salad dressing. Sprinkle with chopped green peppers and garnish with whole herring.

Stuffed Fruit Dessert.—Take halves of peaches or pears, place in a baking pan, fill the centers with marmalade, raisins, dates, figs or chopped nuts. When thoroughly heated, remove to a warm dish and pour over a soft custard.

Fried Corn.—Take the corn cut from half a dozen ears, add to three tablespoonfuls of hot butter in a frying pan, cover and simmer until the corn is cooked, adding more butter and salt and pepper to season.

Puree of Summer Squash.—Slice three onions and cover with two quarts of cold water; bring to the boiling point and add a large summer squash cut in thin slices. Let simmer slowly for two hours, then rub through a sieve. Mix one tablespoonful of cornstarch with a cupful of milk and seasonings; add to the soup with butter, if desired. Serve hot.

Blackberry Sherbet. — Strain the juice from a quart of blackberries, add half as much water as juice, and sugar if needed, with a tablespoonful of lemon juice. Freeze to a mush, then add the whites of two eggs beaten stiff, and freeze hard. Thin cream may be used in place of the water.

Sauted Tripe.—Cut pieces ready for serving; parboil for ten minutes, using equal parts of milk and water to cover tripe. Drain, season and roll in flour. Saute in butter.

Swiss Toast.—Mash half a box of berries, sweeten with one-fourth cupful of sugar. Cover five slices of bread with the berries, reserving some of the juice. Heat two tablespoonfuls of butter in a frying pan, and cook the bread until brown on the under side, basting the berries with the butter while cooking. Serve on a hot platter with the rest of the juice poured over the bread. Serve at once.

STYLES FOR LATE SUMMER; SHEER, COLORFUL LINGERIE

WHEN August comes leading in the burning sun of late summer, women demand clothes that are cool and comfortable—and that look all of that. In fact, they insist more upon a cool appearance than upon actual cool quality in their apparel, as witness those small, white felt or white kid hats that are popular. Felt hats are not cool, but they are soft and comfortable and light ones look cool—which combination of good points has spelled success for them.

Plain linen is a time-honored fabric that has maintained its place because it looks cool in summer frocks, and because it launders perfectly. But open-work linen looks cool and is cool and a frock of it is presented herewith, as an ideal garment for the hottest weather. The picture shows it to be simple in design, bordered with scalloped pieces of plain linen down the front, each scallop serving to carry a pearl button and simulated buttonhole. A front panel of crepe de chine has a neck-to-hem plaiting at each side of a strip of plain linen down the front, adorned also with small pearl buttons. Plain and openwork linen in any light color, with white linen in bindings and

For making this irresponsible but fascinating underwear, light or sheer silk and cotton fabrics are demanded and the call for colored voiles has increased. The limit of delicacy is reached in georgette crepe or chiffon and new garments made of it are shown with one color posed over another—that is, they are double. Voile is not so nearly transparent, and two colors are managed in it by using one for yokes and borders hemstitched to the body of the garment in another color; pastel shades are used and a tailored finish. But crepe de chine and ninon crepe take precedence in the accessories, will develop this frock successfully.

The small hat of silk with sectional crown and narrow turned-up brim is of the collapsible kind that can be folded or flattened, to put in a suitcase. The last chapter in millinery's summer story deals with the career of this bit of practical and beautiful headwear, which is so accommodating and becoming. It is as light and cool as it is pretty. As to the footwear that supports this hot weather costume, it plays its important role perfectly—white silk stockings, light brown or gray kid pumps—nothing could be more cool and comfortable.

Designers and makers of lingerie are presenting their new fall lines and it is evident that in their summery minds there is no connection whatever between cold weather and underthings. The responsibility of keeping the feminine world warm in cold weather is blithely switched over to outer garments—let sweaters, frocks, coats and heating apparatus do it, appears to be their motto. The several types of undergarments, except for athletics, concern themselves with beauty of color, daintiness of fabric, easy adjustment to the figure and a general prettiness—which last item seems to be most important of all.

Lesson for August 16

TEMPERANCE LESSON

LESSON TEXT—Gal. 5:13-24.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Gal. 6:7.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Picture of a Good Life.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Good and Bad Fruits.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Drunkenness and Kindred Evils.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Flesh Against the Spirit.

Having shown in chapters 3 and 4 of this epistle that the believer is free from the law as a means of justification, Paul makes practical application of this doctrine.

I. Christian Freedom (vv. 13-15).

1. It Is Not an Occasion to the "Flesh" (v. 13).

Liberty is not license. The notion that when one is free from the law he is free from constraint, is wickedly erroneous. License of the flesh means not merely the indulgence of the flesh in actual material sins, but in the expression of a self-centered life in biting and devouring one another (v. 15). Bickering among Christians is an example thereof.

2. By Love, Serving One Another (v. 13).

Freedom from the Mosaic law means slavery to the law of love. "The emerging from bondage through Christ is the passing into a sphere of life in which all the powers should act under the dominion of the true motive, love."—Morgan.

II. Walking in the Spirit (v. 16-18).

This discloses the secret of how a life of service to another can be lived.

The governing principle in the life of a believer is the Holy Spirit. Walking in the Spirit results in:

1. Loving Service to Others (v. 13).
2. Victory Over the Flesh (vv. 16-17).

By the flesh is meant the corrupt nature of man expressing itself in the realm of sense and self. The renewed man becomes two men between whom a mortal conflict is going on. The Christian must choose between good and evil. When he chooses the evil, the Holy Spirit opposes, and when he chooses the good the flesh opposes. Notwithstanding this deadly conflict, victory is sure if one chooses the good.

III. The Works of the Flesh (vv. 19-21).

By works of the flesh is meant the operation of the carnal nature. The one who chooses to live according to the impulses and desires of his natural heart will be practicing the following sins.

1. Sensuality (v. 19).

The sins enumerated here are practised in the sphere of the body and are:

(1) Fornication. (The word "adultery" is omitted from the best manuscripts.)

(2) Uncleanness. This includes all sensual sins, open or secret, thought or deed.

(3) Lasciviousness. This means the wanton reckless indulgences in the shameful practices of the flesh.

2. Irreligion (v. 20).

These acts take place in the realm of the spirit and are:

(1) Idolatry, which means the worshiping of idols.

(2) Witchcraft or Sorcery. This means all dealing with the occult such as magical arts, etc.

3. Sins of the Temper (vv. 20-21).

These take place in the sphere of the mind and are:

(1) Hatred
(2) Variance, which means strife.
(3) Emulations, jealousy.
(4) Wrath, bursts of passions.
(5) Seditions, factions in the state.
(6) Heresies, factions in the church.
(7) Envyings.
(8) Murders.

4. Sins of Excess (v. 21).

(1) Drunkenness. This means indulgence in intoxicating liquors.

(2) Revelings, acts of dissipation under the influence of intoxicants.

IV. The Fruit of the Spirit (v. 22-24).

This indicates action in the realm of life, the product of the Holy Spirit indwelling the believer.

1. Love, to God and man.
2. Joy, glad-heartedness because of what God has done.
3. Peace with God and fellowman.
4. Longsuffering, taking insult and injury without murmuring.
5. Gentleness, kindness to others.
6. Goodness, doing good to others.
7. Faith, believing God and committing all to Him.
8. Meekness, submission to God.
9. Temperance, self-control in all things. Against such there is no law.

Man's Sorrows

Man's sorrows are a mystery, but that sinners should not have sorrows were a sadder mystery still. And God pleads with us all not to lose the good of our experiences of the bitterness of sin by our levity or our blindness to their meanings.—Alexander Maclaren.

POULTRY FACTS

GRADING OF EGGS BY THE PRODUCER

W. H. Lapp of Iowa State college, in discussing this problem, recommends that the grading of eggs be put on a basis of simplicity and practicability to the producer by adopting two grades on the eggs which he sells to the dealer rather than the more complicated grades into which the eggs are finally divided before going to the trade. These grades are: No. 1, which shall be eggs of good quality, of clean shell and fair size; grade 2, shall consist of all small eggs weighing less than 19 ounces to the dozen, also all dirties, cracks and washed eggs.

All eggs are of equally good quality when laid. However, if they are to reach the market in good condition the first step must be taken by the producer in seeing that they get proper care and handling. The kind of eggs produced is influenced by the quality of the poultry. A standard-bred flock is necessary if the eggs are to run uniform. In selecting eggs for incubation it is equally essential to keep the type of egg in mind so as to improve the uniformity of the eggs laid by the flock.

The primary factors affecting quality of eggs are soundness, cleanliness and color of shell; the size of the egg, uniformity in size and color of shell. Other factors that influence quality are proper storage, frequent marketing and the production of infertile eggs. Infertile eggs are especially desirable in summer for the heat often starts fertile eggs to incubating with a resulting loss in quality.

Attention to the packing of eggs for market is also a means of reducing loss. Generally the best plan is to use the 30-dozen containers or the ordinary egg cases. This is better than bringing the eggs to town in baskets which results in heavy breakage.

From the standpoint of the producer the grading of eggs is a step in the right direction. If the majority of farmers will adopt the practice it will not be long before the produce dealers will pay a better price for graded eggs than for ungraded stock or ordinary farm-run. Eggs that are unsuitable for market on account of size, color, etc., can be used at home, as they are just as desirable as first grade for immediate use.

Lice and Mite Control Helps Egg Production

To get the most out of your poultry, it is essential that the hens be kept free of lice and mites, as they hinder egg production, and lower the vitality of the birds. Now is the time to rid the flock of all pests. Sodium fluoride has been found to be the most effective treatment.

Sodium fluoride may be applied by what is known as the pinch method. A small pinch of the fluoride is carefully rubbed into the skin on different parts of the body. One pinch should be applied on the back, one on each thigh and one under each wing. This treatment will destroy all lice in four or five days. One pound will cost about 55 cents and should be enough to apply by pinch method to about 100 birds, says D. H. Hall, extension poultry husbandman at Clemson college.

The chicken mites make their home in the house and nesting quarters, so it is necessary to treat these in order to keep the mites in check. The best remedy for mites is old auto crank case oil thinned down with an equal part of kerosene. The roosting and nesting quarters should be thoroughly sprayed in order to prevent the mites from living over the winter. A good dusting and spraying now will save a great deal of trouble next spring.

Provide Green Food for Poultry While Confined

The best way to supply green food for fowls that are confined in yards is to have two yards for each flock. In one of them may be grown any kind of green food, such as oats, rye, wheat, corn, mustard, millet, etc. Turn the fowls on the green food and then sow the other plot, so as to permit it to grow during the time the hens are consuming the green food on the first plot.

In this manner a large amount of green food can be provided at a small cost. It is not only the large animals that improve and give good results on grass, vegetables and clover, but the hens will also be benefited as well if given the liberty of a good range over clover.

A grass plot in which clover predominates is really better than one of mixed grasses. The large proportion of nitrogen and lime in clover helps induce the hens to lay and keep healthy.

Oats Good in Summer

Oats will make a good summer feed for chickens as it is not so heat-producing as corn. With the feeds that fowls pick up on the range, the oats will answer for summer feed. Most breeders advocate grinding the oats as the whole grain does cause crop bound. It also obstructs the granular stomach, which is that part of the digestive tract between the crop and gizzard and opening directly into the gizzard. It is much safer to grind the oats.

Few Married Men Are Lawbreakers

The married man who lives happily with his family has a four-to-one chance of steering clear of the law.

That is the conclusion reached by an American statistician and sociologist, who has published a book containing pages of figures proving that only one prisoner in every four is married. The same, he says, is true of women, reports Answers.

Marriage, of course, has a steadying influence on many men and women. At the same time its cares and responsibilities may provide, in certain cases, a positive urge towards crime. A man with a family who has not sufficient money to steer clear of debt, for instance, has a stronger motive for stealing than a man who has only himself to look to. Yet a man's love for his wife and fear of what the result of his discovery and conviction would be to his wife and little ones holds him back from doing wrong.

Need Uniformity in States' Rules

Poultry Industry Retarded by Great Difference in Regulations.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The poultry-breeding industry of the United States is making a determined effort to bring harmony out of the confusion that now exists because of the differences in the rules and regulations applied to certification and accreditation of flocks in the various states. Under present conditions when a prospective purchaser of hatching eggs, baby chicks, or breeding stock comes across the word "accredited" or "certified" in connection with the advertised flocks, he does not know just what factors were taken into consideration to certify or accredit these flocks, unless he is familiar with the regulations governing such work in each state. The great difference in methods, plans, and rules governing the accreditation and certification of poultry in the different states is serving to retard the progressive development of the industry and in unfairly shielding some breeders whose flocks are certified under less stringent rules than others.

Difference in Regulations.

At present there are 22 states which have adopted regulations for certification and accreditation of flocks. The difference that exists between the regulations in these states is seen in the case of baby chicks. In one state chicks are sold by grade based on the production of the parents; in another case two grades of chicks are offered, one grade being from accredited flocks that are not tested for bacillary white diarrhea, and the other grade from flocks that have been tested and are found free from the disease. In another state chicks are sold on a basis of four grades according to the grading of the adult birds, and the grading of the adult birds is based on their general qualities. Still another sells certified as well as two other grades of chicks, the certified chick being produced from certified males mated to certified females, while of the other two grades the first are chicks produced from old hens mated to certified cockerels, and the second grade are chicks produced from certified pullets mated to certified cockerels.

Committee Makes a Survey.

The general committee appointed to co-operate with the poultry office of the United States Department of Agriculture has made a survey in which this same degree of difference in state rules and regulations was found to exist in regard to hatching eggs and breeding stock as well as baby chicks. The committee is of the opinion that if the states can get together to discuss these differences much can be done to stabilize the poultry-breeding industry. Also, from the standpoint of interstate commerce in hatching eggs, baby chicks, and breeding stock, the committee feels that uniformity in the state rules and regulations concerning the accreditation-certification work is necessary if poultrymen are to retain this business.

Starting Sweet Clover With Corn in the Fall

Starting sweet clover in corn at time of last cultivation is a good practice provided it can be done. There is rarely a season, however, when sweet clover or any other of the clovers give a good stand when sown in corn at this time. If the season is very favorable, with considerable rainy weather, a stand is sometimes secured. As a rule, not much of this clover is alive the following spring, though sometimes it gets through the winter.

On some land it is much easier to get sweet clover started with corn than on other types of land. A soil may be poor for corn but rich for sweet clover, and on such land it is comparatively easy to get the clover started with corn; but on good corn land that will grow 50 bushels or more of corn, it does not pay to depend on getting sweet clover started in the cornfield.

Sheep Business Subject to Market Fluctuations

The sheep business, like all other industries, is subject to market fluctuation, periods of low prices being followed by higher prices and lucrative returns. Since the last depression in 1922 sheep have been one of the most profitable classes of farm live stock. Many express the opinion, therefore, that after this year we will see lower prices. No doubt there will be considerable fluctuation in the market and dry weather may cause a sufficient liquidation to temporarily demoralize the market this fall. This should, if it develops, provide an excellent opportunity to lay the foundation for a farm flock and at the same time should be an incentive to every man who is in the business to retain his flock if at all possible to do so.

Mineral Mixtures Help

There are on the market a number of commercial mineral mixtures which have recently been especially compounded for poultry feeding. It will probably be the easiest for the average poultryman to secure his minerals by purchasing them in this form. Be sure that you are getting a well-known mixture, and feed it strictly according to instructions. Most of these mineral mixtures contain, in addition to those mentioned above, other mineral elements, such as sulphur, which undoubtedly have a definite place.

Whitewash Still Is Oldest of Paints

No New Material Found to Supersede It.

Though whitewash is one of the oldest paints used in American agriculture for the interiors of barns and other buildings, no new material has ever threatened to supersede it.

"This is largely because whitewash is cheap, easy to prepare, and has undergone a process of improvement," says E. R. Gross, rural engineer, New Jersey College of Agriculture. "Whitewash cleans and disinfects in addition to giving buildings a wholesome, pleasing appearance.

Quicklime is still the basic substance used in making whitewash, but years of experience have resulted in a formula that includes a few cheap substances which greatly improve the disinfecting qualities and durability of the mixture. What is commonly known as the government formula is excellent:

Half bushel (31 lbs.) of quick-lime or lump lime slaked in 7 gallons of hot water.

One peck (15 lbs.) of salt dissolved in 4 gallons of hot water.

Three pounds of ground rice boiled to a thin paste.

One pound of clear glue dissolved in one gallon of warm water.

Half pound of Spanish whiting dissolved with the glue.

The lime is slaked in a barrel or tub. The salt water is then added, followed by the glue and whiting mixture and, finally, the rice paste. The entire batch requires thorough stirring. Twelve ounces of alum added to this mixture acts as a hardener and makes it stick better. To increase the gloss two or three bars of laundry soap may be added. There is an advantage in applying whitewash while it is hot. Care should be taken not to apply it too thick, as it will then crack and scale.

Hill Selection of Seed Potatoes Is Satisfactory

A large number of pairs of plants from similar halves of the same seed tubers were grown under as nearly the same conditions as possible and were compared for yield at the Geneva experiment station. Wide differences were found in the yields, ranging from nothing to 141.8 per cent of the average yield of the two plants of the pair, with an average difference of 23.4 per cent. This rather unexpected result is said to indicate that there are probably important factors affecting the yield of potatoes which are unknown or which are not now fully appreciated. An unequal number of stalks per plant is known to have been an important cause of the differences in yield noted in the station experiments.

It is believed that these wide differences in yield of plants from halves of the same seed tuber which would ordinarily be expected to be quite uniform, show that the improvement of potatoes by the hill selection method cannot be carried to full perfection.

"The usual farm practice of selecting seed potatoes from the best yielding hills should not be affected by these findings," says the experts, "as they are of interest primarily to the expert or to those attempting to develop improved strains of potatoes. Selecting seed potatoes from high-yielding hills has been thoroughly demonstrated as a satisfactory method for maintaining high yields."

Crown of Alfalfa Plants Is Close to the Ground

Young alfalfa plants have a sort of a crown close to the top of the ground. A horse or a sheep will bite off the young plants below the crown during the first fall and winter and kill the plants. Cattle do not crop so close to the ground but they do eat the tops that should be left there every winter for protection and to hold the snow. Alfalfa stays green under the snow all winter, not very green, but still there is some color near the ground on every crown. A few warm days and the green shows more and then it dies back slightly with the next cold snap. If the stock are even allowed to run over the alfalfa field when the weather is cold they will break off the tops of the plants and kill quite a percentage of all the plants they touch. Fence is cheaper than reseeding alfalfa.

Farm Hints

Spray or dust potatoes; it pays.

* * *

Mow the pastures to destroy the weeds.

* * *

The only excuse for cultivating corn is to kill the weeds.

* * *

Be sure to plant plenty of soy beans for seed, hay and soil improvement.

* * *

Good paint will prevent a multitude of evils; bad paint will commit them.

* * *

Remember that grass and weeds are easier to kill when young. Cultivate crops frequently.

* * *

It has been said that there is no gain without a loss. In other words, gain alfalfa and lose despair.

* * *

Profitable poultry production requires good housing, proper and sufficient feeding, proper care and management.

Cutting Down the Death-Toll of Motorists' Carelessness

The railroads of the United States are constantly and effectively striving to save human life and prevent accidents where their right-of-ways crosses public highways. Warning bells, crossing gates, flash signals, and numerous printed and painted warnings admonish the motorist not to take chances.

That this work has been effective is evidenced by the fact that during the year 1924 one hundred and twenty-seven less deaths were caused by grade-crossing accidents than in the year 1923, and that an even better record is being made for 1925, as shown by the fact during the first half of the year seventy-two less deaths occurred than during a similar period in 1924.

The railroads are doing their part to protect you but you must do your share for safety. There is no better advice that can be given you than the three words so universally used—"Stop, Look and Listen" when you approach a railroad track. Remember that accidents occur when you are trespassing on the railroads' right-of-way, that the train cannot leave the tracks, and that if it were necessary for trains to stop at every grade crossing it would play havoc with America's unexcelled transportation system. The motorist should come to a dead stop and look both ways.

American railroads are building under-passes and overhead bridges as rapidly as their capital will permit. In the meantime, do your part for safety.

Masonic Conference at Thorsby Closed Friday

The Chilton County Masonic conference concluded its three-day session last Friday. This was one of the best sessions held since the conference was organized several years ago, although not as largely attended as some others.

The convention goes to Amon lodge at Cooper next year, the date having been changed to the third Wednesday in July with a two-days session instead of three as heretofore.

The first day was opened with a business session at which the following officers were submitted by the nominating committee, and were elected:

B. Lawrence, Worshipful Master.
R. L. Duffy, Senior Warden.
D. R. Smith, Junior Warden.
J. L. Johnson and J. H. Gillespie, Junior and Senior Deacons.
H. A. Harris, Secretary-Treasurer.
C. C. Petersen, Tyler.

J. B. Atkinson, district lecturer of this district was in charge of the work and his instruction in the work was of much benefit to those present. The degree work was stressed and exemplified, and much time was given over to discussion of Masonry in general.

Thorsby lodge entertained the visitors in a most royal manner, Thursday evening being given over to the ladies of the Eastern Star, who served refreshments. Misses Edith and Louise Stephenson gave very interesting readings.

The newspapers of the county were requested to publish the following reports of committees:

RESOLUTIONS COMMITTEE

Resolved first: That this convention most heartily expresses its appreciation of the hospitality of Thorsby lodge No. 759 for the manner in which it has cared for the visitors to this convention

Second, that we express to the various members who attended this convention thanks for their time and attention in perfecting themselves in the work;

Third, that we thank Brother J. B. Atkinson, district lecturer, most heartily for his painstaking and earnest work of instruction in the Masonic degrees. He has been faithful and untiring, and through his efforts much for the good of Masonry has been accomplished;

Fourth, that we are most apreciative of the courtesies extending on Thursday evening by the ladies of the Eastern Star and for the tempting refreshments served. Also to Miss Edith and Miss for two very interesting readings;

Fifth, that we thank the officers of the conference for the dispatch with which they handled the business of the conference;

Sixth, that we urge those who have attended this conference to carry back to their lodges the information they have gained in this conference, so that the good effect will not be lost. and

Seventh, that in carrying back to the various lodges the instruction gained in the worp, let none lost track of the tenets of the order, that while we may learn that in obeying the principles of Free Masonry while traveling through this vale of tears, each Mason may be laying up in his heart the true teachings of Masonry as living stones for that spiritual building, that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTION

We find that during the past year the Masonic Fraternity has lost by death four masons; Brethern J. H. Patton, W.R. Dawson, of Jemison Lodge number 411 and Elijah Burnett, S.M. McCary, of Thorsby Lodge No. 759.

Resolve, 1st: That in the loss of brethern J. D. Patten and W.R. Dawson, Jemison Lodge No. 411, has been deprived of two of her pioneer members each one of these masons being more than 75 years old and had been faithful members of the Masonic Fraternity for more than fifty years.

Resolve, 2nd: We deeply regret the passing away of these faithful landmarks. In this day and time we need the advice of those whose experience, age and knowledge is well worth heeding. But we are forcibly reminded of the old adage, "Old men for counsel, young men for war." Then again, we recall the truth in God's word that states "Though dead, yet he liveth."

Resolveed 3rd. That we as masons express our sincere sympathy to Thorsby lodge 759 in the removal by Providence of Brethern Elijah Burnett and S.M. McCary.

Resolve 4th. That while these two brethern had just passed the fiftieth mile post we are more than pleased to to know that they had been true to their fellow man, their country and their God.

It is always in order, to warn campers to extinguish fires before breaking camp, to eliminate all possible chances of destruction from this source. Particularly important is this warning to those who expect to Traverse forest reserves, that the property may not suffer on this account. A little thought along these lines at the proper time may prevent great destruction and insure the safety of human life.

A mother that fails to use her time and thought for the very best interest of her children is not worthy of being a mother.

Ask your husband, the man that you have selected for the father of your children; what provision he has made for their welfare in event of his unexpected death.

You owe to yourself and to your children, "Especially to your children" the duty of exerting every precaution against being left without sufficient living and educational funds.

There are a few husbands and fathers who are too selfish to make this provision. See if you have selected one of this type for the father of your children.

Entered in the Post Office at Clanton, Alabama, as Second Class Mail Matter Under Act of Congress.

Col. Bibb Graves has at last thrown his hat in the gubernatorial ring, and since then no one has take a shot at it. Also very little is being said of the senatorial race. All of which speaks well for the people.

Watermelons still come to Clanton, and as long as they do we will continue to spread ourselves. We commend them were made for pic white trash and negroes as well as for others. Anyway, we live that way.

Merchants of Chilton county are asking you to trade with them. Every one there is a local market. Do not forget them. Read the News and endeavor these asking you to trade with its columns. In other words—patronize home industry.

The Birmingham Post has moved into enlarged quarters and plans for a larger growth. The Post started in Birmingham on a modest way grad- ually coming it of today it is taking its place among the worthy afternoon papers of the south. We congratulate the Post on its growth and wish for it a continuance of same.

Some of the writers who protest to Governor all are pointing out a lot of the available candidates for the presidency on the democratic side. Governor Smith Senator Ralsa of Maryland and others just like them. Breathen let us tell you they are not available for free born American people. The democratic party will put up men and not puppet when they nominate.

It is interesting the way cotton speculators manipulate the cotton reports of the government. When it makes a report of a big crop they bear the market by spreading the big crop propaganda, but if the report says the crop is away off, the report is at once discredited. Local runs have made the report look favorable, one will the time preceding the cotton report. Such is life.

HE'LL NEVER PRACTICE

Our esteemed contemporary, the Union-Banner, says Congressman Lamar believes a race westward on his being elected, is out to practice law in Alabama. We wonder why he needs to practice law unless he measures all his cases when he gets there. Listen to the Union [illegible] last attempt.

We do not think he will have any care or inclination to practice law in Alabama as he stays in congress, but maybe he wants the law business to fall back on when the Republicans of the Fourth district shall [illegible] congress in congress in which instance he [illegible] figures he will never live any use for the compensation as a lawyer.

Brethren, it can't be did.

AN APPRECIATION

Such words as contained in the letter [illegible] make it pleasant to us. All applause comes to everyone who [illegible] We are only sorry that all the [illegible] contained in the letter cannot be put to use but when our efforts [illegible] are duly appreciated we will better work and support accordingly.

The editor has never seen and had never heard of the writer of the following letter until its receipt, and we wish to express our appreciation of good wishes contained:

Selma, Ala., Aug. 7, 1925.

Dear Mr. Editor:

If you will kindly allow me a small space in your paper I will try to express my appreciation of your valuable paper, and also try in a brief way to tell the people of Clanton and Chilton County what I think of the Chilton County News.

I have been a subscriber of this paper ever since its infancy and always look forward to Friday evening mail for my paper.

People of Chilton county must realize that a good paper in their county is one of the best things to be had. It [illegible] and also gives [illegible] agricultural matters, [illegible] of settlements from various merchants of the surrounding towns of different bargains in all merchandise, also news from practically every state in the Union. It gives you the happenings of your home county on all subjects.

Now I feel that it is the duty of that are interested in their native county to give every support to the paper which is trying at all times to [illegible] Chilton County in every way. You will know that a good paper is one of the best advertisments a county and a state can have, don't think that the Chilton County News does'nt travel for I know better. It goes to the four corners of the United States and you can see that it has a tendency to draw people into your county from afar.

I have not had the pleasure to be with the good people there at heart in the past six or seven years, but I always feel close to them and also a deep interest in the advancement of Clanton and dear old Chilton my home place. I was over home the fourth of July and it was indeed gratifying to me to see the growth that Clanton has made since I was there last. In a few years it will be one of the leading cities of central Alabama if it keeps the stride it is going at present.

Now listen good people the next time you are in town go around to the office and hand the editor subscription for one year. You will never regret it.

I hope that any time any my Chilton friend come to Selma they will call to see me for I am always glad to see them. I am employed by Jud Breslin funeral directors, as embalmer, and am in charge of a fleet of ambulances, the finest and best equipped in the south.

This will be all for this time, hoping to see you all real soon. With kindest regards to all, I am

Yours very truly,
RAYMOND H. MARCUS.

ADVANTAGE OF SMALL NEWSPAPERS

From an ethical standpoint it can [illegible] be claimed that the country [illegible] and small city dailies have a marked advantage over the big metropolitan newspapers.

The world's papers are conducted by men owners who are personally known to the people and business men of the community and read in nearly every home.

The owners, editors and publishers are free to express their honest convictions than the highly commercialized city press too often run by hired employees, principally to earn dividends.

The small daily or country weekly [illegible] up to opportunities to boost the land of personal journalism in behalf of the community.

As long as the small city dailies and country weeklies remain true to their best traditions, with their editorial devoted to constructive policies, their influence in journalism will increase.

BUILDING UP FOREIGN BUSINESS

Baldwin locomotives, sold under a long time contract are running on railroad of the Republic of Poland. One contract of $1,360,125 was recently made in the Republic for locomotives delivered in 1919.

It is enough money in our country to transact sales anywhere on earth. The general complaint against American goods is the organized credit plans of many European countries. This [illegible] American policy abroad gives [illegible] a lot of low though sure [illegible] compared with the other possible plan of selling only for cash or all around the world.

THE LEGISLATIVE FLOOD

Reviewing the work of legislatures in different states there is a ray of light in a few of the high water marks of new laws has been reached and [illegible] preceding [illegible] legislature that adjourned the other day enacted only 302 new laws and 38 of these were appropriation and enabling acts.

In spite of having hundreds of statutes that are absolutely dead letters [illegible] the Law books Illinois added 280 [illegible] rules of conduct.

But the tide has turned and the Illinois legislature enacted 56 less bills than were ground out in the legislature grist two years before.

Several other states have made similar record and it must be a satisfactory feeling to know that as time goes on, not only fewer new laws may be enacted, but more and more old ones may be repealed.

THIRTY FARMERS IN ALABAMA LEGISLATURE

More than one-fifth of all the members of the Alabama state legislature are farmers, according to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, which has been compiling figures of farmer representation in the state legislature and in Congress.

Of the 35 Senators in the state legislature, 6 are farmers, states the Foundation, and 24 out of the 106 members of the lower house list themselves as agriculturists. A few divide their time between farming and banking, farming and insurance, or some other profession or occupation in addition to their farm interests.

Iowa with a farm population of 46 per cent has 99 farmers in its legislature membership of 158, the highest proportion of any of the states studied the Foundation states. Pennsylvania with its 11 per cent farm population, has only 15 farmers in its legislature out of a total of 258 members. Mrs. Mabel A. Gillespie of Gretna, a member of the Nebraska lower house is the only farmer's wife on record holding a legislative job.

The ratio of representation of farmers in Congress is lower than the average found in the state legislatures, according to the Foundation. With a national farm population of 30 per cent, the 69th Congress finds only five farmers in the Senate and 21 in the House of Representatives.

Chapter XII

In town Dirk lived in a large front room and alcove on the third floor of a handsome old-fashioned three-story-and-basement house. He used the front room as a living room, the alcove as a bedroom. He and Selina had furnished it together, discarding all of the room's original belongings except the bed, a table, and one fat comfortable faded old armchair whose brocade surface hinted a past grandeur. When he had got his books ranged in open shelves along one wall, soft-shaded lamps on table and desk, the place looked more than livable; lived in. During the process of furnishing Selina got into the way of coming into town for a day or two to prowl the auction rooms and the second-hand stores. She had a genius for this sort of thing; hated the spick-and-span varnish and veneer of the new furniture to be got in the regular way.

She enjoyed these rare trips into town; made a holiday of them. Dirk would take her to the theater and she would sit entranced. Strangely enough, considering the lack of what the world calls romance and adventure in her life, she did not like the motion pictures. "All the difference in the world," she would say, "between the movies and the thrill I get out of a play at the theater. My, yes! Like fooling with paper dolls when you could be playing with a real live baby."

The day was marvelously mild for March in Chicago. Spring, usually coy in this region, had flung herself at them head first. As the massive revolving door of Dirk's office building fanned him into the street he saw Paula in her long low sporting roadster at the curb. She was dressed in black. All feminine fashionable and middle-class Chicago was dressed in black. All feminine fashionable and middle-class America was dressed in black. Two years of war had robbed Paris of its husbands, brothers, sons. All Paris walked in black. America, untouched, gayly borrowed the smart habiliments of mourning and now Michigan boulevard and Fifth avenue walked demurely in the gloom of crepe and chiffon; black hats, black gloves, black slippers. Only black was "good" this year.

Paula smiled up at him, patted the leather seat beside her with a hand that was absurdly thick-fingered in its fur-lined glove.

"It's cold driving. Button up tight. Where'll we stop for your bag?"

He climbed into the car beside her. Her manipulation of the wheel was witchcraft. The roadster slid in and out of traffic like a fluid thing, an enamel stream, silent as a swift current in a river. When his house was reached, "I'm coming up," she said. "I suppose you haven't any tea?"

"Gosh, no! What do you think I am? A young man in an English novel?"

"Now, don't be provincial and Chicagoish, Dirk." They climbed the three flights of stairs. She looked about. Her glance was not disapproving. "This isn't so bad. Why did it? She did! Very nice. But of course you ought to have your own smart little apartment, with a lady to look you up. To do that for you, for example."

"Yes," grimly. He was packing his bag—not throwing clothes into it, but folding them deftly, neatly, as the son of a wise mother packs. My salary'd just about keep him in white linen house-coats."

"I'm going to send you some things for your room, Dirk."

"For God's sake don't!"

"Why not?"

"Two kinds of women in the world. I learned that at college. Those who send men things for their rooms and those that don't."

"You're very rude."

"You asked me. There! I'm all set." He snapped the lock on his bag. "I'm sorry I can't give you anything. I haven't a thing. Not even a glass of wine and a—what is it they say in books?—oh, yeh—a biscuit."

In the roadster again Paula maintained a fierce and steady speed for the remainder of the drive.

"We call the place Stormwood," Paula told him. "And nobody outside the dear family knows how fitting that is. Don't scowl. I'm not going to tell you my marital woes. And don't you say I asked for it. . . . How's the job?"

"Rotten."

"You don't like it? The work?"

"I like it well enough. Hey—well, you see we leave the university architectural course thinking we all going to be Stanford Whites or Cass Gilberts, tossing off a Woolworth building and making ourselves famous overnight. I've spent all yesterday and today planning a drygoods store that's going up on the corner of Milwaukee avenue and Ashland, west."

"And ten years from now——"

"Ten years from now maybe they'll let me do the plans for the drygoods box all alone."

"Why don't you drop it?"

He was startled. "Drop it! How do you mean?"

"Chuck it. Do something that will bring you quick results. That isn't an age of waiting. Suppose, thirty years from now, you do plan a grand Gothic office building to grace the new and glorified Michigan boulevard they're always shouting about! You'll be a middle-aged man living in a middle-class house in a middle-class suburb with a middle-class wife."

"Maybe"—slightly nettled. They turned in at the gates of Stormwood. A final turn of the drive. An avenue of trees. A house, massive, pillared, porticoed. The door opened as they drew up at the entrance. A maid in cap and apron stood in the doorway. A man appeared at the side of the car, coming seemingly from nowhere, greeted Paula civilly and drove the car off. The glow of an open fire in the hall welcomed them. "He'll bring up your bag," said Paula. "How're the babies, Anna? Has Mr. Storm got here?"

"He telephoned, Mrs. Storm. He says he won't be out till late—maybe ten or after. Anyway, you're not to wait dinner"

Paula, from being the limp, expert, fearless driver of the high-powered roadster was now suddenly very much the mistress of the house, quietly observant, giving an order with a lift of the eyebrow or a nod of the head. Would Dirk like to go to his room at once? Dinner at seven-thirty. He needn't dress. Just as he liked. Everything was very informal here. They roughed it. (Dirk had counted thirteen servants by noon next day and hadn't been near the kitchen.)

He decided to bathe and change into dinner clothes and was glad of this when he found Paula in black chiffon before the fire in the great beamed room she had called the library. Dirk thought she looked very beautiful in that diaphanous stuff, with the pearls. Her heart-shaped face, with its large eyes that slanted a little at the corners; her long slim throat; her dark hair piled high and away from her little ears. He decided not to mention it.

Dirk told himself that Paula had known her husband would not be home until ten and had deliberately planned a tete-a-tete meal. He would not, therefore, confess himself a little netted when Paula said, "I've asked the Emerys in for dinner; and we'll have a game of bridge afterward. Phil Emery, you know, the Third. He used to have it on his visiting card, like royalty."

The Emerys were drygoods; had been drygoods for sixty years; were accounted Chicago aristocracy; preferred England; rode to hounds in pink coats along Chicago's prim and startled suburban prairies. They had a vast estate on the lake near Stormwood. They arrived a trifle late. Dirk had seen pictures of old Phillip Emery ("Phillip the First," he thought, with an inward grin) and decided, looking at the rather anemic third edition, that the stock was running a little thin. The dinner was delicious but surprisingly simple; little more than Selina would have given him, Dirk thought, had he come home to the farm this week-end. The talk was desultory and rather dull. And this chap had millions, Dirk said to himself. Millions. No scratching in an architect's office for this lad.

At bridge after dinner Phillip the Third proved to be sufficiently the son of his father to win from Dirk more money than he could conveniently afford to lose.

Theodore Storm came in at ten and stood watching them. When the guests had left the three sat before the fire. "Something to drink?" Storm asked Dirk. Dirk refused but Storm mixed a stiff highball for himself, and then another. The whisky brought no flush to his large white impassive face. He talked almost not at all. Dirk, naturally silent, was loquacious by comparison. But while there was nothing heavy, unvital about Dirk's silence, this man's was oppressive, irritating. His paunch, his large white hands, his great white face gave the effect of bleached bloodless bulk. "I don't see how she stands him," Dirk thought. Husband and wife seemed to be on terms of polite friendliness. Storm excused himself and took himself off with a word about being tired, and seeing them in the morning.

After he had gone: "He likes you," said Paula.

"Important," said Dirk. "If true."

"But it is important. He can help you a lot."

"Help me how? I don't want—"

"But I do. I want you to be successful. I want you to be. You can be. You've got it written all over you. In the way you stand, and talk, and don't talk. In the way you look at people. In something in the way you carry yourself. It's what they call force, I suppose. Anyway, you've got it."

"Has your husband got it?"

"Theodore! No! That is—"

"There you are. I've got the force, but he's got the money."

"You can have both." She was leaning forward. Her eyes were bright, enormous. Her hands—those thin dark hot hands—were twisted in her lap. He looked at her quietly. Suddenly there were tears in her eyes. "Don't look at me that way, Dirk." She huddled back in her chair, limp. She looked a little haggard and older, somehow. "My marriage is a mess, of course. You can see that."

"You knew it would be, didn't you?"

"No. Yes. Oh, I don't know. Anyway, what's the difference, now? I'm not trying to be what they call an influence in your life. I'm just fond of you—you know that—and I want you to be great and successful. It's maternal, I suppose."

"I should think two babies would satisfy that urge."

"Oh, I can't get excited about two pink healthy lumps of babies. I love them and all that, but all they need is to have a bottle stuffed into their mouths at proper intervals and to be bathed, and dressed and aired and slept. It's a mechanical, routine and about as exciting as a treadmill."

"Just what do you want me to do, Paula?"

She was eager again, vitally concerned in him. "It's all so ridiculous. All these men whose incomes are thirty—forty—sixty—a hundred thousand a year usually haven't any qualities, really, that the five-thousand-a-year man hasn't. Somebody has to get the fifty-thousand-dollar salaries—some advertising man, or bond salesman or—why, look at Phil Emery! He probably couldn't sell a yard of pink ribbon to a schoolgirl if he had to. Look at Theodore! He just sits and blinks and says nothing. But when the time comes he doubles up his fat white fist and mumbles, 'Ten million,' or 'Fifteen million,' and that settles it."

Dirk laughed to hide his own little mounting sensation of excitement. "It isn't quite as simple as that, I imagine. There's more to it than meets the eye."

"There isn't! I tell you I know the whole crowd of them. I've been brought up with this moneyed pack all my life, haven't I? Pork packers and wheat grabbers and peddlers of gas and electric light and dry goods. Grandfather's the only one of the crowd that I respect. He has stayed the same. They can't fool him. He knows he just happened to go into wholesale beef and pork when wholesale beef and pork was a new game in Chicago. Now look at him!"

"Still, you will admit there's something in knowing when," he argued.

Paula stood up. "If you don't know I'll tell you. Now is when. I've got Grandfather and Dad and Theodore to work with. You can go on being an architect if you want to. It's a fine enough profession. But unless you're a genius where'll it get you! Go in with them, and Dirk, in five years—"

"What!" They were both standing, facing each other, she tense, eager; he relaxed but stimulated.

"Try it and see what, will you? Will you, Dirk?"

"I don't know, Paula. I should say, my mother wouldn't think much of it."

"What does she know! Oh, I don't mean that she isn't a fine, wonderful person. She is. I love her. But success! She thinks success is another acre of asparagus or cabbage; or a new stove in the kitchen now that they've brought gas out as far as High Prairie."

He had a feeling that she possessed him; that her hot eager hands held him though they stood apart and eyed each other almost hostilely.

As he undressed that night he thought, "Now what's her game? What's she up to? Be careful, Dirk, old boy."

As he lay in the soft bed with the satin coverlet over him he thought, "Now what's her little game!"

He awoke at eight, enormously hungry. He wondered, uneasily, just how he was going to get his breakfast. She had said his breakfast would be brought him in his room. He stretched luxuriously, sprang up, turned on his bath water, bathed. When he emerged in dressing gown and slippers his breakfast tray had been brought him mysteriously and its contents lay appetizingly on a little portable table. There were flocks of small covered dishes and a charming individual coffee service. A little note from Paula: "Would you like to take walk at about half-past nine? Stroll down to the stables. I want to show you my new horse."

The distance from the house to the stables was actually quite a brisk little walk in itself. Paula, in riding clothes, was waiting for him.

She greeted him. "I've been out two hours. Had my ride. You ride, don't you?"

"I used to ride the old nags, bareback, on the farm."

"You'll have to learn. Then I'll have some one to ride with me. Theodore never rides. He never takes any sort of exercise. Sits in that great fat car of his."

They went into the coach house, a great airy white-washed place, with glittering harness and spurs and bridles like jewels in glass cases. It gave Dirk a little hopeless feeling. He had never before seen anything like it.

Paula laughed up at him, her dark face upturned to his.

Something had annoyed him, she saw. Would he wait while she changed to walking things? Or perhaps he'd rather drive in the roadster. They walked back to the house together. He wished that she would not consult his wishes so anxiously. It made him sulky, impatient.

She put a hand on his arm. "Dirk, are you annoyed at me for what I said last night?"

"No."

"What did you think when you went to your room last night? Tell me. What did you think?"

"I thought: 'She's bored with her husband and she's trying to vamp me. I'll have to be careful.'"

Paula laughed delightedly. "That's nice and frank . . . What else?"

"I thought my coat didn't fit very well and that I needed—could afford to have Peel make my next one."

"You can," said Paula.

Chapter XIII

As it turned out, Dirk was spared the necessity of worrying about the fit of his next dinner coat for the following year and a half. His cost, during that period, was a neat olive drab as was that of some millions of young men of his age, or thereabouts. Most of that time he spent at Fort Sheridan, first as an officer in training, then as an officer training others to be officers. He was excellent at this job. Influence put him there and kept him there even after he began to chafe at the restriction.

In the last six months of it (though he did not, of course, know that it was to be the last six months) Dirk tried desperately to get to France. He was suddenly sick of the neat job at home; of the dinners; of the smug routine; of the olive-drab motor car that whisked him wherever he wanted to go (he had a captaincy); of making them "snap into it"; of Paula; of his mother, even. Two months before the war's close he succeeded in getting over; but Paris was his headquarters.

Between Dirk and his mother the first rift had appeared.

"If I were a man," Selina said. "I'd make up my mind straight about this war and then I'd do one of two things. I'd go into it the way Jan Snip goes at forking the manure pile—a dirty job that's got to be cleaned up; or I'd refuse to do it altogether if I didn't believe in it as a job for me. I'd fight, or I'd be a conscientious objector. There's nothing in between for any one who isn't old or crippled, or sick."

Paula was aghast when she heard this. So was Julie whose wailings had been loud when Eugene had gone into the air service. He was in France now, thoroughly happy. "Do you mean," demanded Paula, "that you actually think Dirk ought to go over there and be wounded or killed?"

"No. If Dirk were killed my life would stop. I'd go on living, I suppose, but my life would have stopped."

They all were doing some share in the work to be done.

Selina had thought about her own place in this war welter. She had wanted to do canteen work in France but had decided against this as being selfish. "The thing for me to do," she said, "is to go on raising vegetables and hogs as fast as I can." She supplied countless households with free food while their men were gone. She herself worked like a man, taking the place of the able-bodied helper who had been employed on her farm.

Paula was lovely in her Red Cross uniform. She persuaded Dirk to go into the Liberty bond selling drive and he was unexpectedly effective in his quiet, serious way; most convincing and undeniably thrilling to look at in uniform. Paula's little air of possession had grown until now it enveloped him. She wasn't playing now; was deeply and terribly in love with him.

Cost of "Lifting" Oil

The bureau of mines says that from 20 to 90 per cent of the total cost of producing petroleum may be charged to lifting the oil. Although the lifting cost ranges from less than three cents a barrel at flowing wells, producing several hundred barrels a day, to $3 a barrel, at wells producing less than a fifth of a barrel a day, the lifting cost per well may range from more than $1,000 at large flowing wells of the type recently discovered in Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas and California, to less than $10 at many of the old wells pumped only a few hours a week, as in most of the oil fields of New York and Pennsylvania, where the average daily production per well per day is less than one-fourth of a barrel.

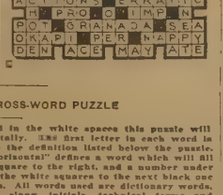
Solution of Last Week's Puzzle



HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

Weather Bulletins Sent to Aviators

Forecasts and bulletins have been prepared and issued daily for several years by the weather bureau for the benefit of aviators, especially those in the services of the army and navy. When the transcontinental air-mail service was extended across the continent in the summer of 1924, arrangements were made at the request of the Post Office department for special weather forecasts.

These forecasts are issued from Chicago. One covers the route from Bryan, Ohio, to Omaha, Nebr., and the other the route from Omaha to Rock Springs, Wyo. In formulating the forecasts the bureau has in mind conditions at the surface and at 5,000 feet aloft. The predictions are prepared each morning and are made available to both eastbound and westbound flyers at the air-mail field at Omaha. An additional forecast is given in the evening, whenever, in the judgment of the forecaster, decided changes are near.

Matter Was Obviously Question for the Deer

Representative O'Connor was discussing in New York his plan for an investigation of telephone and telegraph companies.

"These companies need investigating, if only for their own good," he said. "They have such a bad habit, when questioned, of giving haughty and evasive answers.

"They're like Colonel Carter of Carterville. The colonel sat in the lounge of a New York hotel one evening with a New York banker.

"'Yes,' he was saying, 'it's a powerful fertile country down round Carter hall. Why, sah, I know woods down there where the trees grow so close that you can't shove your hand between the trunks. And game. Why, sah, I've seen deer in them woods with a ten-foot spread of antlers. Yes, sah, a ten-foot spread.'

"'But, colonel,' said the banker, 'how can the deer get those antlers between those trunks?'

"Colonel Carter drew himself up.

"'That, sah,' he said, 'is their business.'"

Edible Birds' Nests

A curious nest is the one the swiftlet builds in Borneo, and which is known to commerce as the edible nest of the Chinese gourmet. The bird builds in caverns around the coasts, and nest seekers go with torches and tear them down and export them. It is said that edible nests to the value of 200,000 pounds are imported into China every year. The nest is woven from a secretion the bird produces—hence its food value.

French "Get Together Club" Along New Lines

Tempted by the success of the Marriage club started last year to bring together young men and maidens, the Mutual Aid society of Paris has conceived the idea of organizing a special picnic party with the avowed aim of encouraging young couples to enter the bonds of matrimony. The picnic will be held on the banks of the River Seine, near Paris.

Every young man and woman will be given a number to be worn, the number to correspond to the page of a register which will contain all information concerning his or her character, calling and fortune. A portion of this information, however, will be kept secret until the very last moment. The remainder will be communicated to the youth or maiden interested in a companion found during the days of the revels.

Much Leather Used

There had been a good deal of kicking among the rookies as to the supplies being handed out by the quartermaster department.

"Say," demanded the supply sergeant of a diminutive John who had been especially vociferous, "wot if they are a little too big? Do you know what them shoes cost?"

"Well," answered the other, as he inspected his new footgear, "they must of cost a right smart lot. They got pretty nigh a whole cow in them."—American Legion Weekly.

WELL ONE DAY IN BED THREE

That Was the Life of Mrs. Hollister Until she Began Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Wyandotte, Michigan. — "After my baby was born I did not do my own work for six months and could hardly take care of my own baby. I always had a pain in my right side and it was so bad I was getting round shoulders. I would feel well one day and then feel so bad for three or four days that I would be in bed. One Sunday my mother came to see how I was, and she said a friend told her to tell me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. So the next day I got a bottle and before it was half taken I got relief. After I was well again I went to the doctor and he asked me how I was getting along. I told him I was taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and he said it did not hurt any one to take it. I am always recommending the Vegetable Compound to others and I always have a bottle of it on hand."—Mrs. HENRY HOLLISTER, R. F. D. No. 1, Box 7, Wyandotte, Mich.

Insanity Statistics

The national committee on mental hygiene says there is no foundation for the popular belief that farmers' wives are more subject to insanity than other women. A recent study of the first admissions to 32 state hospitals in this country shows that not only were fewer women admitted from rural districts than from urban, but that the rate based upon the population of the same environment for urban women was almost twice that for rural. The rate of first admissions in rural districts was found to be much higher among males than among females.

1,010,000 BALES ESTIMATED CROP

FOR FIRST TIME IN TEN YEARS ALABAMA HAS PROSPECT OF MAKING MILLION BALE CROP

Auburn.—For the first time in 10 years Alabama has prospects of making 1,000,000 bales of cotton. Both the federal and state official condition report for August 1 places the estimated yield at 1,010,000 bales, compared with an average for the last ten years of 734,000 bales. Alabama's last crop to exceed 1,000,000 bales was that of 1915, exactly ten years ago.

A report made public by F. W. Gist, of Auburn, and confirmed by the federal government, places the Alabama crop as of August 1 at 74 per cent of normal, representing a decline of 4 per cent from July 16 to August 1. A decline was generally expected and frequently happens at this season of the year. On this basis yield of lint cotton in Alabama this year should be 141 pounds per acre. That of last year was 154 and the 10-year average was 128.

SPARKLING BAY

Picnics in Summer.

It was called St. Margaret's bay, and a great body of water it was, as the books which tell all about bays might have said about it.

But those who lived in the fishing villages along its shores or in the lumber camps near by would never have spoken of it in that way. "The water sparkles in St. Margaret's bay more than water sparkles anywhere."

Maybe that was quite true. It was what they felt about it. And yet they did not boast. They loved it as families love each other with loyal devotion. Sometimes the bay behaved badly, sometimes it was hard and unkind. But it was their bay and they loved it.

They would no more have exchanged bays than they would have exchanged families. They no more would have wanted to live elsewhere than one wants to leave everything and everyone who has grown dear and familiar to settle in some strange country where one is unknown.

They did not talk much of what they felt before strangers. But when they got together they talked of the beauties about them and of their sparkling bay, just as people will talk of what is very dear to them when with those who understand and who are sympathetic.

They did not object to being far removed from cities and amusements and all those things that larger places carry with them.

They were not in the least lonely. And why should they be? There were enough families so they could talk and laugh and tell stories together or play an old organ and sing.

The children knew other children—there were always groups of them for picnics in the summer or swimming in the clear, cool water. They helped, too, with the fishing, the searching after wandering cows which could never have been found had it not been for the hollow-sounding bell, worn around every cow's neck.

The little ones had toys made out of sea shells, and worn-out boats in which to play, and other toys besides what had been brought to them at Christmas time by Santa Claus.

Their cheeks were soft and rosy because of the good salt air, and always they were hungry when mealtime came—even for the fish of which they grew weary at times in thinking about.

When the little meat wagon came along, how they did follow after it. Meat was such a treat.

But it was the sparkling bay that they loved so much they never could have left it—not even for meals and meals of meat.

Water, they knew, sparkled in the sunlight elsewhere. The sea, along the shores, changed colors constantly—even far out at sea the colors changed. Sometimes gray, sometimes blue, sometimes green, sometimes black and inky.

Along the shores there were such soft greens in the water, and delicate blues, and at night if you dipped your hand in you could see silvery wavelets for yourself.

But during the day when the sun shone down and there was a warmth that was never hot, just a comfortable, delicious warmth without real heat and oppressiveness, the bay sparkled more than at any other time.

It fairly seemed to dance for joy. Such a delighted, joyous bay, winking and laughing, dancing and prattling, skipping its jewels along the surface of the water as children skip flat stones along the water.

The sun, looking upon the jewels of the bay, was so dazzling one had to turn one's eyes away every so often and look toward the quiet green woods.

But the bay received most of the attention on those days when it skipped jewels along the surface of the water with the sun looking down.

For, the people said, there is nowhere such sparkling water as the water of St. Margaret's bay on a day when the sun comes out.

Matter of Instinct

There is a great deal of truth in the assertion that knowledge, some kinds of knowledge at least, is largely a matter of instinct. Mildred, aged five, came running into her mother's room one morning in a state of great excitement. "Oh, mamma," she exclaimed, "cook has just killed an old hen to make over into chicken!"

Few Roads Carry Traffic

A very large portion of the highway traffic of the country is carried by a rather small percentage of the roads. A detailed traffic survey made in Maine by the bureau of public roads shows that the primary system of the state, consisting of only seven per cent of the total mileage, carries 53 per cent of the traffic in the state.

School Superintendent Writes of the Proposed One-Mill Tax

The call issued for an election as to whether the one-mill school tax will be renewed, has aroused much interest among the people, and the following article from Mr. B. Lawrence, superintendent of education for Chilton county will be read with interest. It gives an insight into the situation in this county:

I am sure the readers of the paper saw the call for an election to be held in this county Sept. 15, to determine whether or not we shall renew the county one mill tax for school purposes or not.

We are facing a big problem in this county just now in the operation of our schools. A man has just left this office who insisted on getting a man as principal of his school. I know the community and the conditions under which they are laboring, and he is right in asking for it but what are we to do? Of about 150 or 200 applications from teachers, which are on file in this office I doubt if there are 25 men asking for schools and these are demanding such salaries as we cannot afford to pay without cutting down the school term and no one wants this done. Every one certainly wants longer term with more efficiency to bring the men back into the profession. It is not altogether a question of so much salary per month with them as it is having employment for about five or six months in the year and nothing to do the remaining months. And this vacation comes just when it is most difficult to obtain employment.

The desire of my heart is, along with the desire of your own heart is to give the boys and girls in the country an equal chance in our schools. This means more and better equipped buildings, longer terms, and in many instances transportation. Any man or woman should know that before we can have these things we must have the means with which to do. When I was a child I could not understand why my father did not buy more and better farming implements but now I know why he did not buy these things. He did not have the means with which to buy them. I believe we have a school board with the interest of our schools at heart (You understand I am not a member of the board, just its secretary) who are doing everything they can to better our schools and if the citizenship of this county continue to stand by them we are going forward, otherwise retreachment will necessarily be the order of the day.

The county one mill tax will mean about $13, 000 to the school budget. Of this amount the Alabama Power Company will pay the major part. It means this: If your taxes were $20 last year with the one mill tax it will be $21 while the Alabama Power Company tax will be increased nearly $6, 000. With the other corporation taxes in the county I am sure this will bring the total taxes of corporations in the county to $10, 000 to be paid by those who live in the county.

Certainly there are people in the county who are opposed to this tax and they have a right to do so. We are simply wanting the people to express by the ballot whether they want this tax or not. But before we cast our vote let us study it from an unbiased point of view and then vote as we conscientiously feel is for the best interest of our children and our schools.

Filling Station to Be Finest One Yet

One of the handsomest and most up-to-date filling stations to be found anywhere is being erected on the vacant lot just south of the postoffice, by Mr. C. O. Jones. It will be occupied when completed, possibly about October 1, by Dief's Service Station.

Mr. L. E. Diefenderfer, of Thorsby, one of the best known men in this section, will be proprietor, and in addition to the filling station, a line of accessories and tires will be carried.

MR. WILBANKS IN TOWN

Mr. G. T. Wilbanks, a good farmer from out west of Clanton, was in town one day this week. He says crops are looking good in his community.

Trees and Shrubbery Advice

In order to properly locate shrubbery on the home grounds so as to secure maximum results in beautifying the place, some knowledge of the different kinds of plants is necessary. In formation as to the general habits of growth, the height to which a plant ordinarily grows, and a few of this kind are most desirable.

All srubbery naturally falls into one of three different classes. In the first place we have the low growing shrubbers or that which is not more than 3 1-2 feet high when it is mature. Then we have the shrubbery coming in the medium class, or that which is from 3 1-2 to 6 feet high when grown. The third class contains all of the different shrubs that are over 8 feet high when grown.

For instance, shrubbery growing 8 feet high, or higher, should not be planted in front of the porch or window as one does not desire to have the view cut off. Neither should tall growing shrubbery be planted directly in front of a porch, unless it is very high from the ground, or unless one desires to screen the place.

Another reason for knowing something of the height to which some of the different kind of shrubbers grows is so that they may be properly located when several different kinds are planted together, either in border or foundation plantings. For instance, when planting next to the foundation in front of the porch or to the side of the house, the taller growing shrubbery should be planted next to the wall. A kind that grows slightly lower should be placed in front of the taller ones, and a kind slightly lower than the second highest growing ones in front. In this way, a gradually sloping effect, which is so much to be desired in foundation planting, is secured.

When planting clumps of shrubbery near trees, in angles created by walks, or in any other place, so arrange the plants that the taller growing ones will be in the center and the lower ones in front. This will give that gradual sloping or rounded effect, which is so much to be desired where the best possible effect is to result from the shrubbery. If planted in a sharp angle between two walks or drive, then a good effect may be had by planting a row of the taller growing shrubbery next to the walk, with a row of the lower growing kind just in front. If a circular clump is planted, put the taller growing in the center and the lower growing kind in the outer part of the circle.

Spirea Thunbergi and Japanese Barberry are two representatives of the lower growing varieties of shrubbery which are very popular. In the middle class the Spirea Vanhoutti, Double-Flowered Deutzia and Bush Honeysuckle are typical examples. Of the higher growing sort, the Lilac and Golden Bell are among the leaders. The Flowering Dogwood and Crape Murtle also come under this class.

One of the chief uses of a shade tree is to furnish shade. Either the tall or the low growing will furnish this, but in order to furnish a proper background for the house and produce the best effect from the standpoint of beauty, it is necessary to know something of the habits of growth before electing the kind to be planted. Those that are used as background should be of a kind that will, when mature, be high enough to be easily seen above the house. The White Oak and the American Elm come under this class.

The trees to be planted along either side of the house or on either side of the lawn, should be those that are slightly lower growing. Under this class, Maple, Magnolia, Live Oak and other trees should be used.

A little study along this line and one able anyone, however little they may know about beautifying the home grounds, to purchase and plant the right kind of shrubbery and trees to their own particular place.

Let's not become so completely wrapped up in our business affairs as to entirely overlook some of the best things in life. We are doing this very thing if we do not have a good lawn and some shrubbery and shade trees about the home. To say the least of it, we are failing to provide ourselves and families with some of the finer things of life if we do not devote some of our time, energy and a small amount of money to beautifying the grounds. We would prefer an humble cottage surrounded with a beautiful lawn, shade trees, shrubbery and flowers, to a mansion furnished with the finest furniture that money could buy, barren on the outside as far as grass, shrubbery, trees and flowers are concerned.

LAST YEAR'S FOREST FIRES

Alabama is still payitg the penalty for last year's forest fires, says the State Commissioner of Forestry. Seven measurements show that water tables are exceedingly low for this season of the year. The water table of the benches and uplands is far beneath its former level. Very little moisture exists in the soil, and over practically the entire state crops are dependent upon local showers.

The severe fires of last fall destroyed the mulch that had acumulated in the woodlands which is an important factor in retarding the run-off from rains and in conserving the soil moisture against evaporation from heat and drying winds. Soil water not only quenches the thirst in plants and trees but it is the medium by which the mineral substances of the earth are dissolved and made available as plant food. Harmful agencies, such as the burning over of lands, that tend to permit the escape of soil moisture, are the enemies of every farmer and land owner.

Last year 34 per cent of the woodland area of the state was burned over by forest fires. In addition to this a large acreage of both forest and agricultural land was intentionally burned by the owners under a mistaken impression that certain benefits were to be derived. It is probable, taking both the forest fires and the authorized burnings, that nearly half of the land area of the state was burned. It is small wonder, then, that the present situation as to soil moisture is so acute.

The landowners have generally recognized that the imagined benefits from burning practically never are realized, while the harmful results inevitably ensue. As a result, the use of fire, except for the burning out of stumps or getting rid of other rubbish drawn into piles, is being resorted to less and less each year.

JUST OFF THE PRESS

"Christines Ivory Palace", a very pleasing and uplifting religious story by our own Mrs. Lula Dudley, is just off the press. This new story of hers glides in an easy narrativeand persuasive way through out. It is allegorical in design. the author parallels "Christine's Ivory Palace" with Jno. Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," in an effort to cope with conditions of the twentieth century. Mrs. Dudley has spent much time and effort on "Christine's Ivory Palace," and considers this her latest achievement her master piece.

Mrs. Dudley is author of a number of volumes that have found places on the shelves of our public and home libraries. Among these are namely: "Christines Meditation". "In the Sweet Green", and The Secret of a Happy Day Laborer." Mrs. Dudley is being congratulated by appreciative reader, upon her late success: "Christines Ivory Palace."

A HAPPY BIRTH-DAY

On Sunday, Mrs. John Giles was seventy-five years old.

Her son and daughter, Mr. Loam Giles of Birmingham and Mrs. Brown Bessemer, had looked forward to the day and had made it a point to be with their mother in honor of the occasion. Besides the Brown and Giles families others spent the day in honoring "Aunt Nunie"

A feast centered with a large and beautiful birthday cake with its seventy fire burning tapers executed by a local artist, was spread. The cake containing the usual good luck omens was prettily embossed in pink double-bow knot design as a border; the dates 1850 and 1925 were mounted on opposite diagonal rows were arranged the seventy-five candle containers in the form of delicate pink cupped flowers.

The elaborations came without Mrs. Giles fore-knowledge. The day was one of the happiest of her life. Many friends called during the day to express many of the best wishes, for a modest and sympathetic woman who ever shows the disposition to be a friend to those in need of friendship.

CALLOWAY REUNION. Aug 1925

All the happiness that could be crowded into a single day was crowded into the Caloway reunion on Sunday. The usual large dinner was spread, later the melon-cutting came and conversation, brightened with many jokes and much laughter, intersersed the festivities.

BEAUTIFUL NEW HOME

Mr. L. F. Gerald and family are now occupying their beautiful and spacious new home into which they moved on Saturday.

The building is situated on northeast corner of Third ave. and Fifth St. It is a two story frame structure with cement basement and brick ornamentations

Of Conlonial-Dutch architecture, the building attracts much attention on account of its exclusiveness of design The residence elicits admiration because of its peculiar outlines. Upon inspection it is noted that it lends itself readily to the reduction of labor, so that the problem of upkeep in a measure is solved.

Upon the whole the architects, Denham, Van Keuren and Denham, of Birmingham, together with our local workmen are being congratulated upon their workmanship in the development of the beautiful and attractive new home.

Mrs. Glenn W. Moore and two sons of Montgomery, were up this week to visit Mr. Moore of the Jesse French music store.

STOP WASTING--OR FACE PAUPERISM

By WILLIAM E. KNOX
President, American Bankers Association

William E. Knox

The American standard of living, the highest in the world, came easily in the past from the abundance of our natural wealth, but it can be maintained in the future only by drastic national economy in the use of that wealth. We have grown up to our resources. We can not afford to waste them any longer. Industrially we have got to stop wasting, but even more so have we got to stop the wastefulness of our personal habits.

The paramount challenge to education in America today calls for the effective teaching of personal economics—for education in the management of personal incomes so that they will give every individual a good living during his productive years and provide certain security for the nonproductive years of his old age.

Forty-four million people, two-fifths of our population, are gainfully employed in the United States, earning more than $60,000,000,000 annually. The management of the expenditure of this $60,000,000,000 annual pay check is the biggest and most important business in America. It has been estimated that upwards of $10,000,000,000 of this personal income is wasted annually. More than a billion, it is estimated, disappears in foolish speculation in fake schemes.

The spirit of waste in America is a heritage of the past, but today the country has more than one hundred and fourteen million people to support and no nation's resources can withstand extravagance indefinitely. An increase in population will mean a reduced average of personal wealth unless intelligent management maintains a progressively more economic utilization of the national income.

To teach our people this is the task of education and it can not begin to meet the task a moment too soon. The advance of civilization makes man's existence a more and more serious business. Human responsibilities and duties increase each year. It progress has made life more abundant it has also made it more expensive. It is impossible for most men to increase their real wages. Therefore they must meet their added responsibilities out of more economic employment of what they get.

The schools must teach our young people so to manage their own personal affairs as to insure that they will lead lives that have an economic worth to society and to themselves. Business must provide plans for its workers to enable them not only to earn but also to save so that the teaching of the schools will not prove an illusion in practice. Do these things and we will have no pauperism in America. Neglect to do them and we will ultimately develop pauperism,—a nation's worst social crime.

WHAT IS EVAPORATED MILK?

Did you ever stop to figure out the exact meaning of "Evaporated Milk"? The word "evaporated" may give you the idea that in the process of evaporation the milk has lost some of its valuable qualities. It hasn't. It has lost only water. Sixty per cent of the water is evaporated from the milk after it comes fresh from the cow.

The first step in processing the milk is the evaporation, when a portion of the water content is removed. The second step is the homogenization, which insures the cream being distributed evenly throughout the milk. The third is the canning. The fourth is sterilization, which takes place in the can when the milk is subjected to sufficient heat to destroy the bacteria. Thus evaporated milk remains as pure and fresh in the container as when it foomed into the pail in the farmer's barn.

Evaporated milk is now generally recognized as the freshest milk available to those not living on farms and producing their own milk. For freshness in milk means purity.

Transportation of milk from the dairy country to the city is well systematized and rapid and yet owing to the immense quantities of milk that must be rushed in daily, much of it must be obtained at considerable distances and a large per cent is necessarily some days old when it is delivered by the milkman.

Evaporated milk, on the other hand, is last night's and this morning's milk. From the dairy barn, always under rigid inspection, it is hurried by farmers to factories located in the heart of the dairy country and delivered when it is fresh. Evaporated milk is canned just at its "freshest moment," when it is in its finest state. It is never allowed to get old. The whole process from cow to can requires only a few hours. It may be interesting to know that the process of sterilizing takes place after the milk has been sealed in its containers. Once in its sterilized containers, there is no possibility of deterioration.

The sterilizing of evaporated milk insures its purity—it makes a safe milk for the children. Evaporated milk is boiled milk, and this makes it more digestible.

It may be used for any milk need with safety and economy.

For ordinary cream needs, use it just as it comes from the can. When a rich milk is desired, add an equal part of water. For cooking and baking, two parts water and one part milk will usually suffice

THE BULLFROG

"Goog-a-room, goog-a-room, goog-a-room," said Mr. Bullfrog.

And all the little Bullfrogs copied Mr. Bullfrog and made queer sounds.

"It shows we're not so ushul as folks think," said Mr. Bullfrog, as he stood upon a twig and began to make a speech for the benefit of the other Bullfrogs.

"Do people think we're unusual?" asked the little Bullfrogs.

"Well," said Mr. Bullfrog, they think when they come to the zoo that they must see lions and tigers, elephants and camels, giraffes and all such queer creatures.

"They think they can see Bullfrogs almost anywhere. But the zoo people know best.

"They know best."

"What makes you say that?" asked the little Bullfrogs.

"Because there are some of us in the zoo, and they brought us here," Mr. Bullfrog answered.

"They know we are interesting and have our own ways and habits just as much as the camels and giraffes have.

"In fact," he continued, and his eyes bulged more than ever as he talked, "I think we have far more interesting ways than any of those animals I have mentioned."

"We think so, too," said the little Bullfrogs. "And surely we are not prejudiced."

"Surely not," said Mr. Bullfrog.

"The great trouble with the others," continued Mr. Bullfrog, "or rather the great drawback, and the thing that keeps them from being in our class, is that they haven't any family history.

"Once a camel, always a camel.

"Once a giraffe, always a giraffe.

"Once a lion, always a lion.

"Once a tiger, always a tiger.

"Once an elephant, always an elephant.

"With a Bullfrog it is different.

"Those other creatures were born giraffes or camels or lions or tigers or elephants.

"They have always been the same. Of course they've grown larger and have looked more grown-up.

"But they have always seen the world with the same eyes and as the same creatures.

"Now I have seen the world through different eyes and as something different, and so have you, my children and my grandchildren.

"First I saw the world through the eyes of a tadpole. Yes, I have had a history, a family history.

"I was born a tadpole with no legs then I became another kind of a tadpole with little front legs, next I had four legs and my tail shrunk away into nothing at all.

"How proud I was when I was all legs and no tail—of course I had a body, too—and then I became a beautiful frog."

"So did we all," said the other Bullfrogs.

"Yes, my dears, we have had a history. We have been through different forms and stages.

"And the poor camels and giraffes and lions and tigers and elephants have had no such marvelous experiences.

"No wonder we get voices like bulls and so are named Bullfrogs!

"For we like to let the world know we have something to bellow or croak about, and that even though we're not big as bulls are, still we have just as much to talk about, if not a great deal more.

"Even people, who often boast of family history, have none of the wonderful history we have.

"The family history of people is very tame and uneventful compared to ours.

"Goog-a-room, goog-a-room, goog-a-room."

"Surely Not," Said Mr. Bullfrog.

FALL MODES FOR SCHOOL WEAR; FLANNEL CHOICE FOR BLOUSES

FULLER skirts, higher necklines and long sleeves, are themes that have been under discussion for some weeks in the centers that originate styles. These new departures in the modes were well advertised before they were presented—the way paved for their success by making everyone familiar with them; for not every style becomes a fashion and stylists have to leave the success or failure of their best efforts mainly "in the lap of the gods."

All three of the new style features mentioned are shown in the pretty frock pictured and they have been managed faultlessly, even from the viewpoint of the most ardent stickler for simple, straight lines. The long bodice, and neckline high at the back and "V" shaped in front are good on either slim or plump figures and that much disputed point—fulness in the skirt—has been adroitly managed by means of the obliging box plait, which effaces itself so far as interference with long lines is concerned. The narrow girdle, tied at the back, is of the material in the frock and little, round buttons, matching the dress in color, serve for its finishing touch. The picture shows clearly how trim, stylish and school-girlish this model is and it is recommended as a good example to follow in assembling clothes for the college or high school miss. No one will recognize more quickly than this competent and sometimes opinionated young person, that this dress is up-to-date. It may be made of any of the good wool fabrics for fall, flannels, plain, bordered or figured, twills, kasha and novelty weaves. Figured flannel is very effective and one can imagine it in red and black in this material, with either red or black buttons, or in two shades of brown or blue. Do not overlook the small convenient and boyish pockets which have to be discovered at each side.

Pretty Frock for the Schoolgirl.

For afternoon wear, the dress pictured was made of olive crepe-backed satin and ornamented with pearl buttons, probably of the same color.

In matters pertaining to clothes, the eternal feminine may be counted on to change its mind as heretofore. Just when it seemed that all blouses, for whatever purpose, were to be made of silk, along came the soft flannel affair, in the loveliest shades of fashionable colors and immediately won its plen (for a place in the sun) before the tribunal of fashion. Nothing has proved a better medium, than flannel for the mellow shades that distinguish this season and no fabric is better suited to smart, informal or sports blouses.

In the pretty late-summer blouse shown here, buff colored flannel is entirely sufficient unto itself for the blouse and its accessories. Flannel covered buttons and a flannel strap or half girdle across the front finish off the model that owes its distinction to cleverness in cut and beauty in color. It is a slip-on model but has almost invisible shoulder seams that give it a trim adjustment. With sleeves extended to the elbow or a little below, it is a good model for fall. But sleeves grow in importance, both in dresses and blouses, and the new fall models emphasize a variety of long-sleeved styles. The new figured flannels will lend themselves to long-sleeved tailored types in overblouses to be worn with plain or plaited skirts.

In dressier types for afternoon panne velvet and crepe satin are sponsored by the French usually in black or dark colors with embroidery and braidings in contrasting colors, but rich effects. Collars are often high, or a scarf is worn if the neckline is round. Overblouses and short tunic blouses make up the displays and much attention is given to plaitings as a trimming.

Rest is not idleness, and to lie sometimes on the grass under the trees on a summer's day, listening to the murmur of the water, or watching the clouds float across the sky, is by no means waste of time.—Lord Avebury.

APPETIZING DISHES

When preparing mush for a supper of mush and milk make plenty and mold in bread pans, stirring into it any chopped meat while warm. This when sliced and fried makes a good, substantial dish.

Fruit Salad.—Mix together one cupful of chopped nutmeats and one-half cupful of seeded grapes, cut into halves. For the dressing beat an egg, add an eighth of a cupful each of lemon and orange juice, one tablespoonful of pineapple juice, one-half cupful of sugar, then cook in a double boiler until it thickens, stirring all the time. Serve on crisp lettuce leaves.

Stringless Beans.—With the advance in cultivation we have arrived at the tender stringless bean. Wash and trim and cut into half-inch slices diagonally, which permits more cut surface to reach the heat. When tender, dress with salt, pepper and butter or part butter and part olive oil, with a dash of vinegar.

Creole Tongue.—Boil a fresh beef tongue and after skinning and trimming it, serve with the following sauce poured over it: Into a double boiler put a glass of currant jelly, a cupful of orange juice and one-fourth cupful of lemon juice, one tablespoonful of butter, a fourth pound each of raisins, citron, currants, and chopped almonds; soak in the fruit juice and serve with the tongue, after the sauce has been heated, but not boiled.

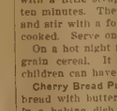
Fig Omelet.—Cut small pieces of figs in pieces and stew them in a little sugar sirup until tender. Beat the yolks of four eggs until thick, adding a tablespoonful of cold water for each egg; fold in the stiffly beaten whites and pour into a hot well-buttered omelet pan. Sprinkle the figs over the top, fold and serve with the sirup.

Cheese Omelet.—Take a cupful of cheese, a cupful of cream, two tablespoonfuls of melted butter and an egg beaten light, season with salt and pepper and put into a buttered baking dish to bake. Serve as a luncheon or supper dish.

Macaroni and Eggs.—Cook until tender one cupful of macaroni broken into inch pieces. Put a layer into a buttered baking dish, cover with a layer of hard cooked eggs, cut into eighths, sprinkle with a little grated cheese, cover with a thick white sauce, repeat and top with buttered crumbs. Put into the oven and heat until thoroughly hot and the crumbs are well crowned. Serve from the dish.

For Luncheon or Tea.

A tasty dish for luncheon or supper is calf's heart. Cut the heart into thin slices and fry in a little butter, seasoning well with salt and pepper.



Spanish Eggs.—Take one half can of tomato, pour off nearly all the liquid or use two or three fresh ripe tomatoes, heat in a saucepan, add salt and cayenne with a little scrapped onion and cook ten minutes. Then break in four eggs and stir with a fork until the eggs are cooked. Serve on buttered toast.

On a hot night for supper serve iced grain cereal. It is a drink that the children can have and will enjoy.

Cherry Bread Pudding.—Spread stale bread with butter and place in layers in a baking dish, cover with cherries well sweetened, using some of the juice. Repeat until enough of the bread and cherries are used, pour over more juice and bake or leave in a cold place to chill.

Tapioca Delight.—Dissolve three-fourths of a cupful of sugar and one-half teaspoonful of salt in four cupfuls of coffee which has been strained. Add one cupful of minute tapioca and cook over hot water until perfectly transparent. Add one-half cupful of chopped nutmeats, and one-half teaspoonful of vanilla. Chill and serve with cream.

Rhubarb, currants, raspberries, blueberries or any kind of fruit may be served in this way.

Save the leftover griddle cake batter and use it for dipping fritters, thus saving the work of preparing fritter batter.

Grape Sandwiches.—These sandwiches will be enjoyed by the children for their luncheon: Butter twelve slices of bread and spread with grape marmalade, chopped apple and chopped nuts, using four tablespoonfuls of the grape marmalade, two tablespoonfuls of nuts and two of apple.

A delicious sauce to serve with fruit or frozen puddings is this: Beat until thick the yolks of two fresh eggs, then add the beaten white of one, and two tablespoonfuls of confectioner's sugar. Place in a double boiler and cook, stirring until thick. Pour into a cool bowl and beat with a wooden spoon until cold, then add one cupful of whipped cream. If to be used with puddings add one-half teaspoonful of vanilla; if fruit use the same amount of almond extract.

Lesson for August 23

THE MACEDONIAN CALL

LESSON TEXT—Acts 16:6-15.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Come over into Macedonia, and help us."—Acts 16:9.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Paul's Wonderful Vision.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Paul Called to Europe.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Macedonian Call and What It Led To.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Hand of God in Missions

I. Forbidden by the Holy Spirit to Preach the Word in Asia (vv. 6-8).

The inclination of Paul and his companions was to tarry in the provinces of Asia Minor preaching the Word but contrary to their inclination they were hurried along. There were many people in Asia who yet needed the Gospel. They might have reasoned what difference would it make where we preach so the Gospel is preached? We have here a fine lesson on Divine guidance. The Holy Spirit is as active and faithful in closing doors as in opening them. "The steps as well as the steps of good men are ordered of the Lord." We ought as truly to recognize God's hand in the "shut-ins" as in the "open-outs."

II. The Call to Macedonia (vv. 9-12).

The Gospel having broken the confines of the Jewish city and country, the middle wall of partition having been abolished, the time has come for it to leap across the Aegean sea and begin its conquest on another continent. Christianity thus ceased to be an oriental religion, and through the centuries has been mainly occidental.

1. The Vision (v. 9).

Being hemmed in on all sides, a vision was given to Paul of a man of Macedonia pleading for help. This made plain to him the closed doors about him. In finding the Divine will we should look both ways. Before there can be any great forward movement, there must be a vision. There is no victory without a vision.

2. The Advance (vv. 10-12.)

As soon as the Divine way was known, they moved forward therein. Visions must be quickly translated, and aggressive action taken or else they are blotted from our sides. Paul never questioned the vision of God nor delayed action. This is characteristic of all God's true servants. With a straight course, Paul moved out of his own country to the strategic center of a new continent.

III. The First Convert in Europe (vv. 13-15).

The missionaries first went to Philippi and spent several days in studying conditions there. The Jewish element in this city was comparatively insignificant. So much so that they could not have a synagogue. Therefore, the devout people were accustomed to worship by the river side. To this humble gathering Paul came and preached to the women assembled there. A certain woman from Thyatira named Lydia, a proselyte, believed his message and was baptized. The steps in Lydia's conversion are worthy of note, for they are typical:

1. Attendance at the Place of Worship (v. 13).

Usually those whom God is calling are found at the place of prayer. Lydia was a woman of wealth, culture and wide experience, and yet she had need of Christ. She was seeking the heavenly light. God sends many an inquirer to the prayer meeting.

2. Listening to the Preaching of the Word of God (vv. 13-14).

The instrument used in the conversion of sinners is the Word of God. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God" (Rom. 10:17). It is highly important that at every prayer meeting the Word of God shall be spoken so that the inquirer after God may find the light.

3. Her Heart Was Opened by the Lord (v. 14).

Only the Lord can convert a soul. It is our business to preach the Word of God, and it is God's business to open the heart of the inquirer. Regeneration is a supernatural work. When the Gospel is preached the Spirit of God opens the sinner's heart for the reception of Christ.

4. She Was Baptized (v. 15).

Every one whose heart the Lord has opened desires to confess Him in baptism. Baptism is an outward sign of inward grace.

5. Her Household Believed (v. 15.)

Real conversion cannot be concealed. When one is converted those in the house will find it out.

6. Practical Hospitality (v. 15).

Those who have experienced God's saving grace are thus disposed to have part in His work by rendering aid to His ministers.

True Humility

True humility consists not in thinking little of oneself, but in not thinking of oneself at all.—Capt. J. Arthur Hadfield.

Selfishness

Nothing parches the soul like selfishness; the heart that feeds upon itself grows old fast.—W. L. Watkins.

Admirers of Dickens True to His Memory

Hall Caine, at a Dickens memorial service, said that after 55 years the novelist is more alive than ever. At this meeting the services of Bertram Matz, founder of the Dickens fellowship, were eulogized. Matz edited a Dickens magazine, published Dickens in many editions and preached him at every turn, answering letters of inquiry from enthusiasts in all parts of the world.

Not long ago in Philadelphia a local "fan" led a stranger up to a picture crowded with characters from the novels. Pointing out an obscure scrawl in a corner, he said: "I have identified every other likeness—please tell me who this is." Such is the true Dickens devotee. 'Tis him Copperfield and Micawber, Pickwick and Sairey Gamp and Oliver Twist are more real than the flesh-and-blood of the street today.

SUFFERED AFTER BIRTH OF BABY

Trouble Caused by Getting Up Too Soon. Relieved by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Talcville, New York.—"I thought it would interest you to know what benefit I have derived from taking your medicine. A few days after the birth of my third child I got up too quick. Then just before my fifth child was born I had inflammation of the bladder and displacement. Seeing your advertisement in a Liverpool (England) paper I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and that was the best confinement I had. Whenever I feel rundown I always take the Vegetable Compound as a tonic. We have just removed from Brockville (Canada) as I was pleased when the store ordered the medicine for me and I got it today. I would not be without it for any price and I recommend it to ladies around here because I feel so sure it will benefit any woman who takes it."—Mrs. AGNES WIGNALL, Talcville, New York.

Why Risk Neglect?

Are you lame and achy; weak and nervous? Do you suffer backache, sharp pains, disturbing bladder irregularities? This condition is often due to a slowing up of the kidneys. The kidneys, you know, are constantly filtering the blood. Once they fall behind in their work, poisons accumulate and undermine one's health. Serious troubles may follow. If you have reason to suspect faulty kidney elimination, try Doan's Pills. Doan's are a tested diuretic, recommended by thousands. Ask your neighbor!

Soils Cause for Clover Failures

Lime Harrowed Into Field Before Seeding Is One Approved Method.

Fertilizing for clover has become one of the farm problems. Lime is one of the first requisites if the soil is acid. A method approved by agricultural experiment stations for the application of lime and which has worked out excellently in actual practice is to harrow it into the plowed field before seeding the clover. The lime can be applied, however, when it is most convenient to plow the fields.

Proper Proportions.

For average conditions, about 3,000 pounds of finely ground limestone or a ton of hydrated lime per acre are the proper proportions and sufficient to remedy conditions and speed up the clover.

Owing to the decrease in the supply of barnyard manure on farms, much soil needs both potash and phosphoric acid for the best stand of clover. Phosphoric acid deficiency, experiments have shown, may be the factor which checks the growth of the clover.

Acid phosphate and muriate of potash supply the lack, applied at the rate of 300 to 600 pounds of potash and 100 pounds of muriate to the acre. If mixed fertilizer is applied, one high in phosphoric acid and potash should be used. Clover when well started will procure its nitrogen from the air.

Seed Is Blamed.

An appreciable percentage of the failure of clover crops is blamed upon the seed when it is the condition of the soil wherein lies the trouble. If limed and given potash and phosphorus fertilizer the clover would do its full duty.

Mammoth red clover is said to be more tolerant of acid and poor soils than the medium variety, but this does not mean that liming to remedy acid conditions is unnecessary.

Another cause for the failure of clover to survive the winter is too close grazing or cutting. Clover needs at least a four-inch growth for winter protection. If grazed closer than this a good stand may be ruined. An application of manure in the fall is a great help in winter protection.

Intertillage Practical Plan to Destroy Weeds

We can't grow food plants and weeds at the same time. That's been demonstrated many, many times. The weeds must be destroyed and intertillage is the only practical way of destroying them. Since most all land is weedy this theory helps us but little. But the question is, is this theory correct for all kinds of soil?

The problem of tillage for sandy or alluvial soils is quite different than for clay or heavy soils. Crops growing on sandy or alluvial soils may get along quite well without tillage if there are no weeds, but how about the clay soils? Individual farmers have tried this and, as a result, they got no corn or beets, even where there were no weeds. Sandy or alluvial soil and any soil containing abundance of humus will remain mellow without tillage, but clay soil settles down hard and is almost impervious to air and moisture. Where it is kept cultivated this does not happen and better crops are secured.

A man considered an authority on soil problems once said: "Weeds are a good thing, they're a blessing to most farmers, for if there were no weeds, people would not cultivate as much as they should. Cultivating not only kills the weeds but it improves the physical condition of the soil."

Describes Development of New Smutless Wheat

Dr. E. F. Gaines, cerealist at the Washington Agricultural Experiment station, gave an illustrated talk on his work in cereal breeding before the agronomy seminar of the Kansas State Agricultural college. His studies have been primarily in smut diseases and in resistance of wheat varieties to smut infection. Tests of the degree of resistance to smut infection were conducted on more than 700 varieties of wheat. A few of these were found to be partially resistant.

Crosses were made between resistant varieties with a hope of combining the good qualities of each and smut resistance. The cross, Turkey X Florence, gave promising results. Turkey wheat used in the cross was secured from the Kansas station about 1906. A number of strains from the cross were thoroughly tested for about seven years and the most promising was named Ridit. This variety, now in the ninth generation, shows almost complete immunity to stinking smut.

Sheep Render Valuable Assistance on Any Farm

Sheep require less feed per hundred pounds of gain than do cattle, and give a larger return for grain used. The conditions under which sheep are kept provide ideal conditions for the conservation of a maximum amount of the fertility contained in the excrement. Sheep render valuable assistance in keeping a farm free of noxious weeds and in the newer sections aid materially in land clearing by keeping down the second growth. Other advantages of sheep are that the investment in buildings is comparatively small and a minimum amount of labor is required in caring for them.

Feed Calves Enough but Don't Overfeed

Do Best if Kept Just a Little Bit Hungry.

Feed the calves enough, but don't overfeed them. They will do better if kept just a little hungry. Overfeeding causes digestive troubles.

These are some of the suggestions made by the department of animal husbandry of the New York State Agricultural college at Ithaca on the raising and care of calves.

The first thing to remember, says the college, is that no calf should be raised for dairy use unless it comes of first-class parentage—from a pure-bred sire and a high-producing dam. Granting this heritage, the dairy calf will respond to, and should receive, careful handling.

It is best to let the calves stay with their mothers for two or three days after birth. Then they should be taught to drink from a bucket. Care should be taken to see that the pail is clean for, as every farmer knows, calves are subject to digestive disorders.

The calf should get from 6 to 12 pounds of whole milk daily for the first three weeks and then may be gradually switched over to skim milk and a little grain. Most farmers find it best to give the calf its grain immediately after it has finished drinking the milk. A good concentrate allowance will contain muscle and bone-building nutrients and will contain some fat to replace a part of that abstracted from the milk.

Here are three rations which have been found good:

Corn 3 parts, bran 3 parts, oats 3 parts, oil meal 1 part.

Corn 5 parts, oats or bran 3 parts, oil meal 1 part.

Oats 3 parts, bran 1 part, oil meal 1 part.

Banking Celery Late in Summer Is Best Scheme

Most of the growth in celery occurs late in summer when the weather is beginning to turn cool and from then on till freezing weather. When the ground is becoming cool, in September, the soil should be pulled up around the plants a little at a time until it is half way to the top. Before much soil is drawn up, the bunches should be tied. This is quickly done by beginning at one end of a row with a ball of twine, one end of which is tied to a stake driven in the ground. Beginning with the first bunch of celery, draw the leaves together with one hand, and with the other make a turn of the string about that bunch, then on to the next without cutting the string, merely keeping it tight between stalks. In this way the leaves are held compactly together without being tied too tightly.

Not before frost should more earth be thrown up, for it tends to rot the stalks if banked while the weather is warm. Celery will stand a killing frost or even a light freeze without injury, but will be destroyed if frozen hard. When the earth is cool, some time between the first frost and the freezing of the ground, the soil should be drawn up from each side to within a few inches of the top. Double rows will save some labor in banking. Some make a practice of adding more earth with the approach of cold weather, then a covering of litter or corn fodder, so that the celery may be left where it grew through the winter storage period. This method requires a great deal of labor both in storing and taking out, and is not to be recommended.

FARM NOTES

Sweet clover can be pastured in the fall.

• • •

A fresh green forage crop will keep the growing pigs coming along fast.

• • •

Hens found on nests at night should be shut up. Broody hens reduce production.

• • •

Don't feed carcasses of animals that have died of disease to any of your stock or chickens.

• • •

Barley straw is similar to wheat straw, and barley hay has more protein and less fiber than timothy hay.

• • •

It is certainly worth while to give the sheep the very best possible care nowadays when wool and mutton are both scarce and high-priced.

• • •

More food animals were slaughtered in the United States last year than ever before. The total was 149,980,500, or about 1.1 for every man, woman and child in the country.

• • •

The consumption of milk in the United States has increased 25 per cent since 1920, but our per capita consumption is still lower than the principal dairy countries of Europe.

• • •

At least 50 per cent of all live-stock losses in transit are preventable by co-operation of the railroads, shippers and producers, say officials of the new Live Stock Loss Prevention Association of Ohio.

• • •

By storing vegetables for late fall and winter use and using a hotbed to produce for late winter and early spring, the summer garden can be supplemented and a supply of vegetables will be available the year round.

Recovery From Influenza Hastened by PE-RU-NA

Mr. C. A. Allen, R. R. No. 2, Bondurant, Iowa, gives testimony to the healing power of Pe-ru-na. Influenza left him much run down in health with catarrh of the nose, throat and bronichal tubes punctuated with attacks of asthma. He writes:

"While recovering from the Influenza I was so weak I could not gain any strength for two months. The latter part of the winter, I bought six bottles of Pe-ru-na and began taking it. My weight increased to 175 pounds, the most I ever weighed.

My usual winter weight is 153. If you can use this letter for any good, you are perfectly welcome."

Such evidence cannot fail to convince the rankest unbeliever of the merits of Pe-ru-na.

Insist upon having the old and original remedy for catarrhal conditions.

Clanton and Western Shops Win and Lose Bassball Game

Jack Hayes was the brght particular star in the game at Cramton Bowl last Sunday in Montgomery when the Western Railroad shops team was defeated. Moulton pitched a good game, but with spectacular fielding by Hayes and the other members of the local team, Moulton was saved on several occasions. The following account of the game is from the Montgomery Advertiser:

Pat Moulton recieved almost perfect support Sunday afternoon at Cramton Bowl, and the Clanton baseball club defeated the West Point Route team 7-4, in a long drawn out affair. Although hit hard, Moulton received, jam up support. Ally started for the locals, but retired in the fifth, after Clanton had scored four runs, largely through ability to use the "squeeze" play. Riddle broke up the mound duties and pitched good ball.

Clanton carried in addition to a hitting team. Shortstpp Hays, who on several occasions saved the game for his team by fast fielding plays. The visiting shortstopper grabbed everything that came his way, and it was around his playing that several rallies were stopped. Without a doubt Hays is the best infeilder playing at the Bowl this season.

Neither team scored until the fifth, when four hits and two errors gave the visitors the lead which they held. The West Point Route rallied in this inning and scored three runs. In the seventh, with bases loaded, Waller was robbed of a sure hit by fast play by Hays, who caught Boyd, who was dashing for third. In the ninth the locals scored a run, but Hayes again stepped in the limelight and retired two of the shopman.

Errors by the Montgomery team assisted to some extent in giving the visitors runs. Ward and Ally taking prominent parts in these miscues.

THURSDAY'S GAME

Clanton started off in last Thursday's game like nothing could stop her, scoring two runs in each of the first two innings, but the West Point boys kept pegging away until they sewed up the game.

Outside of Hudson laying the ball up against the right center fence twice and an unassisted doubit play at first by Hudson, there were no special features. In the fifth James hit safely to right, and his twin brother countered with one right over first base which Hudson caught as he stepped back on the base. It was a shame to treat a pair of twins that way.

The Clanton boys hits McEachern freely, but always after two were out, and after the second inning were unable to socre. Starling started out well in the box, but weakened and was relieved by Parrish in the sixth inning. The later was scored on but once.

INDEPENDENCE OF THE FINANCIAL KIND

By WILLIAM E. KNOX
President, American Bankers Association.

The principle upon which America was founded was independence. The primary duty of the pioneers of this country was to interpret independence in its political sense, but independence today has another special significance in its financial sense. The ability to apply the primary principles of personal economics, to use intelligently that common thing we call "a pay check," has as much to do with individual independence as any other force in life.

The greatest problem of independence of the average man or woman is how to get out of what they earn a good living and a reasonable degree of financial comforts in old age. We cannot maintain a high standard of national life without an intelligent management of the financial matters that constantly confront the average individual and family. In the accumulation of capital in the hands of the masses lies the hope of the true independence of a nation's people. The chief concern of wage earners is to get a reasonable degree of financial independence out of what they actually earn.

This question of how to attain personal financial independence has not been worked out on the principle of individual responsibility. The most important social needs today are a course of instruction in public education to give young people a practical notion of how to start life on a sound economic basis; and, secondly, a broad co-operative plan in American industry whereby men and women shall be helped to work out a personal financial program that will guide them toward a definite goal of financial independence. There ought to be a way for a man, for every dollar put aside each week now, to get back four or five dollars a week forty or fifty years later, regardless of where he works.

The present policy in American industry of helping employees is based on the assumption that they will ultimately become dependent. Old age pensions and other forms of charitable compensation are to be commended in lieu of a practical alternative, but in principle they are wrong and contrary to the purposes of democracy. What we want is an organized plan that will direct working people toward independence. No system can claim complete success that does not contemplate the financial independence of every employee, according to his ability to earn. It can be shown that American employees, with reasonable prudence on their own part, can reach a fair degree of independence while they are still working.

There must be injected into our industrial policy an additional economic element of mutual benefit and permanent value to both labor and capital, concerned not alone with the amount of wages and profits that are earned but with how these earnings shall be used. I am arguing for an industrial savings policy based upon the principle of independence. I am arguing for a new basis of co-operation in industry, for the elimination of poverty, and for a practical demonstration of economic democracy.

When public education teaches school students how to manage their personal affairs intelligently, and when the heads of firms make it a requirement that every young man and young woman who accepts a position shall be working toward a definite goal in saving money, then we will attack economic illiteracy at the source and begin to save men from the tragedy of financial dependency.

A Mother's Duty

A mother that fails to use her time and thought for the very best interest of her children is not worthy of being a mother.

Ask your husband, the man that you have selected for the father of your children; what provision he has made for their welfare in event of his unexpected death.

You owe to yourself and to your children, "Especially to your children" the duty of exerting every precaution against being left without sufficient living and educational funds.

There are a few husbands and fathers who are too selfish to make this provision. See if you have selected one of this type for the father of your children.

No thank, you. I'm not hot.

Dog days, and no rain of late.

Somebody is going to be surprised when the cotton crop is gathered.

It is often said that a rolling stone gathers no moss, but it is equally true that a setting hen never gets fat.

With her streets finished in the near future, Clanton should be put in the city class.

Politicians have their ears to the ground.. In Aabama it is one-sided, but when you crawl through the Mason and Dixon wire fence, both sides have their ears and eyes wide open.

With Mr. Bryan gone, his work will fall on the shoulders of many, and who knows but that in the leaven of counsel, his demise will be merely a change to other shoulders in the Democratic party. Christianity is the big loser.

With the gin whistles blowing in the morning, we are led to believe we have arrived in the manufacturing class. It is a pity that with the good towns in Chilton county, we have as few manufacturing enterprises as are located here.

Notice the date on your paper this week, and if your subscription is out we want your renewal. With the hundreds we have put on we don't want to lose a one. Help us to get the largest circulation in central Alabama. It is possible, and with your co-operation we will have it.

Some politics they have in Birmingham. The News and Age-Herald are all wrought up over the fact that one commissioner who is not running this time has been seen at a lodge meeting with Commissioner Harrison. We suppose it is because he is a working man for as a rule, any man whose sympathies are with those who toil are relegated to the class of those unfit for public service.

DEMOCRATS EXPECT SUCCESS

With 1926 approaching, the democratic party is looking forward to a successful campaign, when they hope to capture many places won by the republicans in the Coolidge landslide of 1924. The republicans are alert and will spare no pains or expense to hold the advantage gained, but it is not believed that they can hold their gains, for the election was an abnormal one in many respects.

The democrats, however, have no one to blame but themselves, and we believe that the party is greater in defeat than it would have been had the party sacrificed itself to privilege and un-Christian elements of the party in order to win.

It is taking a long time to learn it, but the old parties will finally have to serve the people, if they expect to win. People are not like they used to be. In former years they could be easily aroused with some hallucination of some spell-binding and designing politician along about election time, that the world was going to the dogs and the only salvation was in voting for them and their party.

The hill-billy, or farmer, as he has been called in the past, is not the fool some folks get it in their head he is, and every year he is learning more and more how the wool has been pulled over ths eyes by the wolf in sheep's clothing.

There is only one way to change the situation. Let each man think for himself and not go off with some fanatical group, sutdy conditions and the best way to remedy them, then vote accordingly. Be your own boss, and do your own thinking. You can reason out the right way to vote on any question. Listen to those who seek to advise you, pick out what is best and then vote for those who nearest represent you.

Then when that is done, popular government will not be a myth.

COTTON PICKING ADVANCED

Cotton picking is the farthest advanced of any season in the history of the county, all gins of the county now being almost on full time. While there is some good cotton in Chiton county, the general opinion of farmers is that coton is going to come up short. The dry season has cut off the growth and caused cotton to open prematurely.

Cotton will be picked about a month earlier this season, and this will give the farmers a better chance to sow more grain this fall.

The Mint's Sidelines

The United States mints make other objects besides coins. All of the medals for the army and navy are turned out by the mints. Medals of all the Presidents, the Secretaries of the Treasury, the Directors of the Mints, have been designed and executed by the mints. Recently the mints inaugurated the practice of making medals of the Under Secretaries of the Treasury. Congress has authorized the mint to make up 40,000 medals to commemorate the arrival of the first shipload of Norse immigrants on board the sloop Restaur Aitonen, which is to be celebrated at the Norse-American Centennial in Minnesota next summer.

At the last session of Congress there was a flood of bills seeking to have commemorative half dollars minted. The prior session authorized the minting of the Huguenot half dollars and of 5,000,000 half dollars to signalize the start of work on the Stone Mountain carving, which will serve as a monument to the valor of the soldiers of the South. On the Federal coins appear Generals Lee and Jackson, the two leaders of the Confederate forces in the Civil War.

A Flood of Coins

With the 150th anniversary of the great battles of the American revolution approaching, bills were passed last winter to issue coins commemorating the stand of the minutemen at Lexington and Concord and the battle of the Green Mountain patriots at Bennington in Vermont. Proposals were made to pay tribute in a similar way to the battle of Bunker Hill, the victory at Yorktown and other events American history, such as the 200th anniversary of the founding of Stoughton, Mass., and the 50th anniversary of the admission of California to the Union.

Fearing that the growth of this practice would open the way to counterfeiting and make the protection of the integrity of the coins more difficult, Secretary Mellon openly opposed the creation of these special coins, but was not entirely successful in his efforts. He insisted that the practice introduced confusion into our system of coinage, brought about an unnecessary expense and satisfied a very limited demand because the public generally has never shown a special liking to the commemorative coins.

However, Congress felt that these great events were worthy of commemoration and authorized the coins—all of which are to be sold at a premium so that the promoters of these events may raise funds by this extra charge to defray part of the expense attached. The records of the Treasury show that the special coins, as a general rule, are seldom absorbed in circulation. The Monroe coin issue was a dismal failure—270,000 of the 274,000 struck off were turned back to the Treasury for melting up.—Journal American Bankers Association.

THE PROMPT TIDE

Frances loved the water. Many was the time she and Alice used to go down and play among the rocks at Green Bank. It was called Green Bank because above the rocks there was a small bank of hilly mound, and the grass there was green, while a clump of small green fir trees hid the road from the rocks.

They Could Climb About.

The rocks below and even the green mound above went off into a point, but not so great a point as further down along the coast.

Sometimes Frances walked down there, too. You had to go through a beautiful natural park to get to the point, and the point consisted of jagged rocks sticking way out into the water.

How splendid it was at the point when there was a storm. The breakers dashed so magnificently over the rocks. But Green Bank was nearer, and there was something so cozy about its rocks.

You could hide between the rocks, and there were so many nice places to sit and have a little picnic.

Alice and Frances used to talk there and play games there. Sometimes they were allowed to take off their shoes and stockings and slip about among the wet sand and slippery seaweed. They had grown used to the little sea animals living in their shells which were attached to the rocks. At first they had scratched themselves many a time on these and on the rocks.

But they had grown to know their rocks so well they could climb about now without becoming all scratches and bruises.

"Before long now the violets will be out," Alice said, "and the Stars of Bethlehem, too, and we'll find Lady Slippers perhaps."

"Let's go on Saturday and take our lunch and see," Frances suggested.

"Yes, and we can get some of the other girls to go, too."

"Oh yes," Frances agreed.

"I wish it was time for the columbines to be out among the tracks," Alice sighed.

"Well, we can't get every flower at once," Frances said, "and the park is so much nicer than the way along the tracks."

So they planned and talked of the Saturday picnic.

"Let's have sandwiches and ginger ale and olives and candy and cookies," Frances suggested.

"Maybe I could get mother to make one of her chocolate-all-the-way-through cakes," Alice added.

"Oh, do beg her," Frances urged.

"All right," Alice agreed. "I think she will. She's pretty good that way."

"Now let's talk," Frances said.

"Talk" meant their plans for the future.

"I" said Frances, "want to be married to a man who makes speeches, just as Grace's father does. Then everyone will clap and people will point to me when they think I'm not looking (of course I shall be looking very hard) and they'll say:

"That's his wife there. They say she is a great help to her husband.'

"And we'll have six children—no, maybe twelve would be nicer—six of each. And we'll have four dogs and three canary birds and some polliwogs in the spring when they only look like specks in the gray jelly they live in. And we'll have rabbits and a dear horse and two automobiles. One for me and the children. The other for my husband.

"The animals won't need one. What do you think you'll do?"

Alice changed her plans quite often. But she had two special favorite ones. When she had heard music she decided she wanted to have music all she wanted all of her life, but when she went to a circus she thought nothing in the world would make her so happy as to be a trapeze performer.

Up Green Bank They Scrambled.

Oh, to be way up in the air, swinging so beautifully, with everyone's eyes looking up at you! She always practiced every trick she saw at a circus and was able to do many of them.

Just now she couldn't make up her mind. And then suddenly they noticed that the tide had crept up and that they couldn't get back along the beach. Up Green Bank they scrambled—which was not an easy way to go.

"It must be funny to be the tide," Alice said, "and just go on and on, and never plan at all!"

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON EASY MONEY

"An awfully interesting man came to see me today, Aunt Emmy. He had a list of stocks and bonds that look very favorable to me. Take this," said Helen, handing an alluring looking folder to Aunt Emmy. "This stock is pretty good. The man said it would be quoted at 30 on the exchange a month after it is put out. I can buy shares now at two dollars so I would make eighteen dollars for every two dollars I invest and all inside of four weeks." Helen paused for breath while Aunt Emmy looked at the folder.

"If I were to buy those White Leghorn chickens of yours," remarked Aunt Emmy, "would you promise me their eggs will sell for one dollar and a half a dozen a month from now?"

"Of course not, Aunty," laughed Helen. "The price of eggs depends entirely on the supply and demand in the market."

"Well, how about stocks? Why can this man promise you this stock will be selling for twenty dollars a month from now?"

"Well, I don't know exactly, but the listings on the stock exchange are different, aren't they?"

"The prices of stocks quoted on the stock exchange are influenced by supply and demand like the prices of eggs. No one can honestly guarantee the future price of any stock. A promoter who urges you to buy stock on any such guarantee is misinforming you. A stock salesman you could trust would never make such a statement. If you are going to listen to such talk you'd better put your money in the savings bank."

"But I wouldn't make so much on it!" objected Helen.

"Big profits mean big risks, and you cannot afford to take risks," said Aunt Emmy. "The house that gets out this booklet is unknown to you. Why don't you find out who you are dealing with?"

"How can I find out about the thousands of stock houses in the United States?"

"Well," said Aunt Emmy, "if you insist on considering making investments, you ought to at least take the trouble to go to your bank and find out about the people you are dealing with."

"I didn't know banks would bother with anything but actual banking," Helen said.

"They are glad to," Aunt Emmy said. "The more people that save and invest money wisely the better it is for the banks."—A. B. Aymes.

WEED TREES NOW USEFUL

Many weed trees, or species formerly regarded as inferior, have been found to be valuable for certain uses, says the Alabama Commission of Forestry in a statement recently issued. In the early days only the best parts of the best trees were used. If heart longleaf pine was available, none would bother with sap pine. With the diminishing supply of longleaf, shortleaf pine came into general use. However, it was not until the last decade that old field pine, spruce pine and other lighter woods could be marketed. Such species were regarded as mere forest weeds in the sence that they took up space and yeilded little value, corresponding some what to the undesirable plants that crowd into gardens and feilds.

One of the tasks of foresty has been to develop practical uses for all forest products so that nothing may go to waste, thus lessening the demand upon the forest as a whole. Lumberman and foresters have been working for years to persuade the public that for certain needs trees usually regarded as inferior species will furnish entirely suitable material. For many purposes sap pine is as satisfactory as heart pine, but it required a long time to convince the buying public of this face.

Old feild pine, or loblolly pine, as it is often called, is one of the trees regarded as inferior that has lately come into their own. Under skilled manufacture, old feild pine produces a bright, beautifully figured finishing material that finds a ready sale. It is also suitable for general building purposes. When subjected to preservative treatment loblolly pine is available for a large variety of special structural and engineering purposes. In the wood using industries this species is crediteed with about 66 different factory uses, and the list is growing year by year.

When, in 1918, Dirk took off his uniform he went into the bond department of the Great Lakes Trust company in which Theodore Storm had a large interest. He said that the war had disillusioned him.

"What did you think war was going to do?" said Selina. "Purify! It never has yet."

It was understood, by Selina at least, that Dirk's abandoning of his profession was a temporary thing. Quick as she usually was to arrive at conclusions, she did not realize until too late that this son of hers had definitely deserted building for bonds; that the only structures he would rear here were castles in Spain. His first two months as a bond salesman netted him more than a year's salary at his old post at Hollis & Sprague's. When he told this to Selina, in triumph, she said, "Yes, but there isn't much fun in it, is there? This selling things on paper? Now architecture, that must be thrilling. Putting a building down on paper—little marks here, straight lines there, figures, calculations, blueprints, measurements—and then, suddenly one day, the actual building itself. Steel and stone and brick, with engines throbbing inside it like a heart, and people flowing in and out. Part of a city. A piece of actual beauty conceived by you! Oh, Dirk! To see her face then must have given him a pang, it was so alive, so eager.

He found excuses for himself. "Selling bonds that make that building possible isn't so dull, either."

But she waved that aside almost contemptuously. "What nonsense, Dirk. It's like selling seats at the box office of a theater for the play inside."

Dirk had made many new friends in the last year and a half. More than that, he had acquired a new manner; an air of quiet authority, of assurance. The profession of architecture was put definitely behind him. He did not say to Selina that he had put the sheer work from him. But after six months in his new position he knew that he would never go back.

From the start he was a success. Within one year he was so successful that you could hardly distinguish him from a hundred other successful young Chicago business and professional men whose clothes were made at Peel's, who lunched at the Noon club on the roof of the First National bank where Chicago's millionaires ate corned-beef hash whenever that plebeian dish appeared on the bill of fare. He had had a little thrill out of his first meal at this club whose membership was made up of the "big men" of the city's financial circle. Now he could even feel a little flicker of contempt for them. He had known old Aug Hempel, of course, for years, as well as Michael Arnold, and, later, Phillip Emery, Theodore Storm, and others. But he had expected these men to be different.

They were not at all the American Big Business Man of the comic papers and of fiction—that yellow, nervous, dyspeptic creature who lunches off milk and pie. They were divided into two definite types. The older men of between fifty and sixty were great rich-colored fellows of full habit. Their faces were impassive, their eyes shrewd, hard. Their talk was colloquial and frequently illiterate. They often said "was" for "were." "Was you going to see Baldwin about that South American trip or is he going to ship it through without?" Most of them had known little of play in their youth and now they played ponderously and with little grace. Golf and motoring came to whom the gift of leisure had come too late. They ruined their palates and livers with strong cigars, drinking cigarette smoking undignified and pipes common. Only a few were so rich, so assured as to smoke cheap light panatellas. Old Aug Hempel was one of these. Dirk noticed that when he made one of his rare visits to the Noon club his entrance was met with a little stir, a deference. He was nearing seventy-five now; was still straight, strong, zestful of life; a magnificent old buccaneer among the petter crew. His had been the direct and brutal method—swish! swash! and his enemies walked the plank. The younger men eyed him with a certain amusement and respect.

These younger men whose ages ranged from twenty-eight to forty-five were disciples of the new system in business. They were graduates of universities. They had known luxury all their lives. They were the sons or grandsons of those bearded, rugged, and rather terrible old boys who, in 1835 or 1840, had come out of County Limerick or County Kilkenny or out of Scotland or the Rhineland to mold this new country in their strong hairy hands.

Dirk listened to the talk of the Noon club, looking about him carefully, appraisingly. The president of an advertising firm lunching with a banker; a bond salesman talking to a rare book collector; a packer seated at a small table with Horatio Craft, the sculptor.

Two years and Dirk had learned to "grab the Century" in order to save an hour or so of time between Chicago and New York. Peel said it was a pleasure to fit a coat to his broad, flat tapering back, and trousers to his strong sturdy legs. His color, inherited from his red-cheeked Dutch ancestors brought up in the fresh sea-laden air of the Holland flats, was fine and clear. Sometimes Selina, in pure sensuous delight, passed her gnarled, work-worn hand over his shoulders and down his fine, strong, straight back. He had been abroad twice. He learned to call it "running over to Europe for a few days." It had all come about in a scant two years, as is the theatrical way in which life speeds in America.

Selina was a little bewildered now at this new Dirk whose life was so full without her. Sometimes she did not see him for two weeks, or three. He sent her gifts which she smoothed and touched delightedly and put away; fine soft silken things, hand-made—which she could not wear. The habit of years was too strong upon her. Though she had always been a woman of dainty habits and fastidious taste the grind of her early married life had left its indelible mark. Sun and wind and rain and the cold and heat of the open prairie had wreaked their vengeance on her flouting of them. Her skin was tanned, weather-beaten; her hair rough and dry. Her eyes, in that frame, startled you by their unexpectedness, they were so calm, so serene, yet so alive. They were the beautiful eyes of a wise young girl in the face of a middle-aged woman. Life was still so fresh to her. There was about her something arresting, something compelling. You felt it.

"I don't see how you do it!" Julie Arnold complained one day as Selina was paying her one of her rare visits in town. "Your eyes are as bright as a baby's and mine look like dead oysters." They were up in Julie's dressing room in the new house on the north side—the new house that was now the old house.

"So Big!" Answered Dirk.

Julie was massaging. Her eyes had an absent look. Suddenly: "Listen, Selina. Dirk and Paula are together too much. People are talking."

"Talking?" The smile faded from Selina's face.

"Goodness knows I'm not straitlaced. You can't be in this day and age. If I had ever thought I'd live to see the time when— Well, since the war of course anything's all right, seems. But Paula has no sense. Everybody knows she's insane about Dirk. That's all right for Dirk, but how about Paula! She won't go anywhere unless he's invited. They're together all the time, everywhere. I asked her if she was going to divorce Storm and she said no, she hadn't enough money of her own and Dirk wasn't earning enough. His salary's thousands, but she's used to millions. Well!"

"They were boy and girl together," Selina interrupted, feebly.

"They're not any more. Don't be silly, Selina. You're not as young as that."

No, she was not as young as that. When Dirk next paid one of his rare visits to the farm she called him into her bedroom—the cool, dim shabby bedroom with the old black walnut bed in which she had lain as Pervus Dejong's bride more than thirty years ago. She looked somehow girlish in the dim light, her great soft eyes gazing up at him.

"Dirk, sit down here at the side of my bed the way you used to."

"I'm dead tired, Mother. Twenty-seven holes of golf before I came out."

"I know. You ache all over—a nice kind of ache. I used to feel like that when I'd worked in the fields all day, pulling vegetables, or planting." He was silent. She caught his hand. "You didn't like that. My saying that. I'm sorry. I didn't say it to make you feel bad, dear."

"I know you didn't, Mother."

"Dirk, do you know what that woman who writes the society news in the Sunday Tribune called you today?"

"No. What? I never read it."

"She said you were one of the jeunesse doree."

Dirk grinned. "Gosh!"

"I remember enough of my French at Miss Fister's school to know that that means gilded youth."

"Me! That's good! I'm not even spangled."

"Dirk!" her voice was low, vibrant. "Dirk, I don't want you to be a gilded youth. I don't care how thick the gilding. Dirk, that isn't what I worked in the sun and cold for. I'm not reproaching you; I didn't mind the work. Forgive me for even mentioning it. But, Dirk, I don't want my son to be known as one of the jeunesse doree. No! Not my son!"

"Now, listen, Mother. That's foolish. If you're going to talk like that like a mother in a melodrama whose son's gone wrong. . . . I work like a dog. You know that. You get the wrong angle on things, stuck out here on this little farm."

She sat up in bed, looking down at the thin end of her braid as she twined it round and round her finger. "Dirk, do you know sometimes I actually think that if you stayed here on the farm—I—Mother! What for!"

"Oh, I don't know. Time to dream. Time to—no, I suppose that isn't true any more. I suppose the day is past when the genius came from the farm Machinery has cut into his dreams. Patent binders, plows, reapers—he's a mechanic. He hasn't time to dream! Well. . . ."

She lay back, looked up at him. "Dirk, why don't you marry?"

"Why—there's no one I want to marry."

"No one who's free, you mean?"

He stood up. "I mean no one." He stooped and kissed her lightly. Her arms went round him close. Her hand with the thick gold wedding band on it pressed his head to her hard. "So big!" He was a baby again.

"You haven't called me that in years." He was laughing.

She reverted to the old game they had played when he was a child. "How big is my son! How big?" She was smiling, but her eyes were somber.

"So big!" answered Dirk, and measured a very tiny space between thumb and forefinger. "So big."

She faced him, sitting up very straight in bed, the little wool shawl hunched about her shoulders. "Dirk, are you ever going back to architecture? The war is history. It's now or never with you. Pretty soon it will be too late. Are you ever going back to architecture? To your profession?"

A clean amputation. "No, Mother."

She gave an actual gasp, as though icy water had been thrown full in her face. She looked suddenly old, tired. Her shoulders sagged. He stood in the doorway, braced for her reproaches. But when she spoke it was to reproach herself. "Then I'm a failure."

"Oh, what nonsense, Mother. I'm happy. You can't live somebody else's life. You used to tell me, when I was a kid, I remember, that life wasn't just an adventure, to be taken as it came, with the hope that something glorious was always hidden just around the corner. You said you had lived that way and it hadn't worked. You said—"

She interrupted him with a little cry. "I know I did. I know I did." Suddenly she raised a warning finger. Her eyes were luminous, prophetic. "Dirk, you can't desert her like that!"

"Desert who?" He was startled.

"Beauty! Self-expression. Whatever you want to call it. You will! She'll turn on you some day. Some day you'll want her, and she won't be there."

Inwardly he had been resentful of this bedside conversation with his mother. She made little of him, he thought, while outsiders appreciated his success. He had said, "So big," measuring a tiny space between thumb and forefinger in answer to her half-playful question, but he had not honestly meant it. He thought her ridiculously old-fashioned now in her viewpoint, and certainly unreasonable. But he would not quarrel with her.

"You wait, too, Mother," he said now, smiling. "Some day your wayward son will be a real success. Wait till the millions roll in. Then we'll see."

She lay down, turned her back deliberately upon him, pulled the covers up about her.

"Shall I turn out your light, Mother, and open the windows?"

"Meena'll do it. She always does. Just call her. . . . Good-night."

He knew that he had come to be a rather big man in his world. Influence had helped. He knew that, too. But he shut his mind to much of Paula's maneuvering and wire-pulling—refused to acknowledge that her lean, dark, eager fingers had manipulated the mechanism that ordered his career. Paula herself was wise enough to know that to hold him she must not let him feel indebted to her. She knew that the debtor hates his creditor. She lay awake at night planning for him, scheming for his advancement, then suggested these schemes to him so deftly as to make him think he himself had devised them. She had even realized of late that their growing intimacy might handicap him if openly commented on. But now she must see him daily, or speak to him. Her telephone was a private wire leading only to her own bedroom. She called him the first thing in the morning; the last thing at night.

Her voice, when she spoke to him, was an organ transformed; low, vibrant, with a timbre in its tone that would have made it unrecognizable to an outsider. Her words were commonplace enough, but pregnant and meaningful for her.

"What did you do today? Did you have a good day? . . . Why didn't you call me? . . . Did you follow up that suggestion you made about Kennedy? I think it's a wonderful idea, don't you? You're a wonderful man, Dirk; did you know that? . . . I miss you. . . . Do you? . . . When? . . . Why not lunch? . . . Oh, not if you have a business appointment. . . . How about five o'clock? . . . No, not there. . . . Oh, I don't know. It's so public. . . . Yes. . . . Good-by. . . . Good-night. . . ."

They began to meet rather furtively, in out-of-the-way places. They would lunch in department store restaurants at times when none of their friends ever came. They spent afternoon hours in the dim, close atmosphere of the motion picture palaces, sitting in the back row, seeing nothing of the film, talking in eager whispers that failed to annoy the scattered devotees in the middle of the house. When they drove it was on obscure streets.

Paula had grown very beautiful, her world thought. There was about her the aura, the glow, the roseate exhalation that surrounds the woman in love.

Frequently she irritated Dirk. At such times he grew quieter than ever; more reserved. As he involuntarily withdrew she advanced. Sometimes he thought he hated her—her hot, eager hands, her glowing, asking eyes, her thin, red mouth, her sallow, heart-shaped, exquisite face, her perfumed clothing, her air of ownership. That was it! Her possessiveness. Sometimes Dirk wondered what Theodore Storm thought and knew behind that impassive boy-white mask of his.

Dirk met plenty of other girls. Paula was clever enough to see to that. She asked them to share her box at the opera. She had them at her dinners. She affected great indifference to their effect on him. She suffered when he talked to one of them.

"Dirk, why don't you take out that nice Farnham girl?"

"Is she nice?"

"Well, isn't she? You were talking to her long enough at the Kirks' dance. What were you talking about?"

"Books."

"Oh. Books. She's awfully nice, and intelligent, isn't she? A lovely girl!" She was suddenly happy. Books.

The Farnham girl was a nice girl. She was the kind of girl one should fall in love with and doesn't. The Farnham girl was one of many well-bred Chicago girls of her day and class. Fine, honest, clear-headed, frank, capable, good-looking in an indefinite and unarresting sort of way. Hair-colored hair, good teeth, good enough eyes, clear skin, sensible medium hands and feet; skated well danced well, talked well. Read the books you had read. A companionable girl. Lords of money but never spoke of her father. Her self-respect met yours firmly—and it was just a hand. At the contact no current darted through you, sending its shaft with a little zing to your heart.

But when Paula showed you a book her arm, as she stood next you, would somehow fit into the curve of yours and you were conscious of the feel of her soft slim side against you.

He knew many girls. There was a distinct type known as the North Shore girl. Slim, tall, exquisite; a little fine nose, a high, sweet, slightly nasal voice, ear rings, a cigarette, luncheon at Huyler's. All these girls looked amazingly alike. Dirk thought; talked every much alike. They all spoke French with a pretty good accent; danced intricate symbolic dances; read the new books; had the same patter. They prefaced, interlarded, concluded their remarks to each other with, "My dear!" It expressed, for them, surprise, sympathy, amusement, ridicule, horror, resignation. "My dear! You should have seen her! My dear!"—horror. Their slang was almost identical with that used by the girls working in his office. "She's a good kid," they said, speaking in admiration of another girl. They made a fetish of frankness. In a day when everyone talked in screaming headlines they knew it was necessary to whisper their remarks in order to get them noticed at all. The word rot was replaced by garbage and garbage gave way to the ultimate swill. One no longer said "How shocking!" but, "How perfectly obscene!"

Astronomical Theories

The naval observatory says the belief is commonly held among astronomers that Lluras is an older planet than the earth. The old theory of the origin of the solar system, called the nebular hypothesis, was first proposed by Laplace a hundred or more years ago. According to his view, the sun was once so large that it extended as far as the orbit of Neptune. In the process of shrinking to its present size it left bits of itself behind, each of which became a planet; so that the farther out a planet is, the older it is. However, there are many astronomers who do not accept this theory; several different theories are now given to explain the origin of the solar system.

POULTRY

CAPONS COMPARED WITH MALE BIRDS

That caponizing pays but that capons do not gain anywhere near what is claimed by some, is indicated by the results of an experiment conducted by the poultry department at South Dakota State college.

According to these claims, the capon should gain twice as much as a rooster of the same age and breed, but a 10 per cent gain is about the best to expect. The lighter breeds like leghorns, do not really gain at all. Since chickens usually hatch late on the farm and since there is usually plenty of feed, caponizing will probably pay the farmer. The birds should be caponized when developing wattles and combs, or better when they weigh about two pounds in the American or medium-weight breeds. The capons can be shipped in barrels holding 150 to 200 pounds, during January and February, and bring a good price.

Two weeks before marketing, the capons should be put in close quarters and fed on fattening rations, such as milk, corn meal, bran, tankage, etc. Any combination like corn and milk is very good. During the time previous to these two weeks, the capons can be fed on corn and can be allowed to run with the pullets.

In dressing capons for market, only the soft feathers need be removed. The coarse feathers on the wings, tail, etc., may be left on. The capons must be dry-picked, if a good price is expected.

As capon feathers, especially white ones, are in demand and will bring from 85 to 90 cents per pound, the farmer can afford to keep them clean and dry and the colors unmixed.

To have capons mother little chicks does not pay. This means that capons have to be kept over winter. Three or four dollars are thus invested in them, whereas an old hen would do better.

Must Feed Hens Mash to Fill Summer Egg Basket

"Hens will not lay eggs in the summer unless they are supplied with all the mash they can eat," says Duncan H. Reid of the poultry department, University of Wisconsin. During the spring months, the wet ground and grass are full of insects which provide plenty of animal food for the hens, but when summer comes the insects disappear and this lack of animal food must be supplied through the mash.

A good ration recommended by Mr. Reid consists of 100 pounds of ground corn, 100 pounds of ground oats, 100 pounds of wheat bran, 100 pounds of wheat middlings, 100 pounds of meat scrap, and 5 pounds of salt. When milk is fed with the mash, the meat scrap should be cut in half.

"A hen should receive two ounces of grain a day and all the mash she can eat," says Mr. Reid. "The grain ration should consist of corn supplemented with 25 per cent wheat and oats. This is contrary to the general belief that corn furnishes too much heat. Tests have shown that the best results are obtained when this ration is used. The grain should be fed a little in the morning and heavy at night. The mash should be changed at least once a week. A lack of oyster shell during the summer months will cut egg production in half. Green feed, such as clover, when mixed with the mash, has a decided advantage even if the green feed is growing in the yard."

Poultry Notes

For some reason, not fully understood, thick, sour skimmed milk seems to have a greater value for hens than sweet milk.

• • •

The old idea of ducking and starving to prevent broodiness is not to be recommended where further egg production is desired.

• • •

Green feed at all seasons is a necessity for health and egg production. Large quantities of mangels and cabbages can be produced on a very small area.

• • •

Chickens, to be fed profitably, should first be kept growing during the growing season. To best accomplish this they should be given a varied diet of meat and vegetable protein.

• • •

Lime is the principal constituent of egg shells and hens should be provided with lime if they cannot gather it naturally. It can be given in the form of crushed lime stone, crushed egg shells, etc.

• • •

Many farmers begrudge a hen every bite that goes down her neck, and numerous early risers on the farm get up to feed the hogs before daylight to keep the hens from eating with them.

• • •

Poultrymen are finding out that hens will lay as freely without the company of males as with them. This fact permits the lessening of expenses by doing away with the roosters. It is also a fact that eggs that are infertile will keep much the longest.

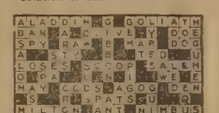
Solution of Last Week's Puzzle.



HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under the column headed "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white spaces to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

Record Sailing Voyage That Astonished World

Historians of the Yankee merchant marine grow boastfully eloquent when they write of the peerless clipper. In fairness, permit the Canadian to blow his own horn. One of the fastest ships that ever sailed was the Marco Polo, launched in Courtenay bay, St. John, in 1850, and commanded by "Bully" Forbes. Carrying a thousand immigrants, the ship left Liverpool for Melbourne, Forbes announcing that he would be in the Mersey again within six months. He was laughed at.

With a willing crew of 60 men the Marco Polo reeled through the "Roaring Forties" and ran its easting down Day after day the booming westerly gales of the high south latitudes drove it along. It was able to beat the steamer Australia to Melbourne by a week, making the passage in 68 days. Homeward bound it made the record passage of 76 days. The round voyage had been sailed in 5 months and 21 days. The shipping world was astounded. Thousands of people came down to view the Marco Polo as it lay in the Salthouse dock. They were thrilled with pride when they gazed at the huge banner hung between the fore and main masts. "The Fastest Ship in the World."

Capt. "Bully" Forbes was the British sailors' hero, a match for the famous masters of Yankee clipper ships. The saying "Hell or Melbourne" is credited to him—the yarn being that this was his reply to a committee of frightened passengers who begged him to shorten sail while he was shoving his ship along in a wicked gale. Characteristic of him was his boast to his cabin passengers as he sat at the head of the dinner table. "Ladies and gentlemen, last trip I astonished the world with the sailing of this ship. This time I intend to astonish God Almighty!"—Ralph D. Paine, in the New York Sun.

Niagara Falls

The water that flows over Niagara falls flowed from the four great lakes and the hundreds of rivers that flow into them, more than one-half the fresh water of the world, according to one authority. The fact that evaporation and precipitation in the form of rain and snow are continually going on in the enormous area of the great lakes region renders it unlikely that the Great Lakes will ever be drained in this manner.

Most Famous Stoic

Epictetus was a Greek Stoic philosopher who lived approximately between the years 50 and 125. He was born a slave in Phrygia, banished from Rome by Domitian and taught philosophy in Epirus. The nobility and moral earnestness of the man and simplicity of his style have made him a favorite with many not otherwise interested in the subject which he taught and of which he wrote.

Night and Day

The earth is every day overspread with the veil of night, for the same reason as the cages of birds are darkened—viz. that we may the more readily apprehend the Higher harmonies of thought. In the hush and quiet of darkness. Thoughts, which day turns into smoke and mist, stand about us in the night, as lights and flames; even as the column which fluctuates above the crater of Vesuvius in the daytime appears a pillar of cloud, but by night a pillar of fire.—Jean Paul Richter.

Huge Hydro-Electric Plant in Kentucky

The great Dix river hydroelectric dam near High Bridge, Ky., is nearing completion. Work was started in the fall of 1923, and a lake 34 miles long will soon be driving generators with a total capacity of 30,000 horsepower—more than is developed by the famous Roosevelt dam in Arizona. This plant will supply electricity to Indiana, Virginia and the greater part of Kentucky. Nearly 1,000 men are pushing the job to completion at top speed. The dam is the largest rock-filled dam in the world. This picture was taken from its top and shows the power house and transformers.

BEST OF DRESSERS

Mrs. Joseph Moran, wife of a wealthy Brooklyn ship builder who has been called the "best-dressed woman in the world" by newspapers in Paris and London. But Mrs. Moran, who returned to New York a few days ago, disclaimed the honor. She believes in American-made clothes for American women, and her extensive wardrobe was acquired not in Paris, but in New York. She says she dresses only to please her husband, and succeeding in that, she pleases herself.

BUILDING OF DAM THREE IN DOUBT

GOVERNMENT MAY NOT CONSTRUCT PROPOSED UNIT IN SHOALS PROJECT

MAY USE PRIVATE CAPITAL

Applications Have Been Submitted the Government By Various Electric Companies

Washington.—It was disclosed at the department of United States engineers that some misapprehension exists in certain sections with respect to the intentions of the government regarding dam No. 3 at Muscle Shoals

The impression exists in some quarters, it was stated by Major Fox, that the government proposes to construct dam No. 3 as it constructed dam No 2, known as the Wilson dam, and Dam No. 1. The so-called Wilson dam was authorized and constructed as a war defense measure and dam No. 1 was authorized by Congress. In the original Burgess report on Muscle Shoals submitted to Congress March 3, 1912 it was proposed and recommended that congress construct dam No. 3, but this report was never adopted. Nearly every bill introduced in the house since then, however, has contained a provision for the construction of dam No. 3 at government expense, the estimated cost being approximately $30,000,000. It is learned that the proposed construction of dam No. 3 is regarded more or less as a pending problem whose eventual solution may have to be accomplished by a private corporation.

Indications are that the government would look with favor upon a proposition for its construction by private capital. Unless such a proposition shall be forthcoming, dam No. 3 will remain unconstructed, excepting, of course, the possibility of Congress passing a bill authorizing the government to construct the dam

The applications which have been submitted to the war department by the Muscle Shoals Hydroelectric Company, the Mississippi Power Company and the Southern Power and Light Company, of Pine Bluff, Ark., for the development of specific power projects at or near Muscle Shoals have been referred to the chief of engineers for study and report.

CAN LEFT-OVERS AS MIXED VEGETABLES

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Mixed vegetables are attractive and economical in salads, omelets, escalloped dishes and to use as garnishes for meat dishes. If the small quantities left from packing different vegetables whole are placed in one can, many desirable combinations can be made. A good combination during the spring season is young carrots. A mixture which the fall garden might furnish is peppers, celery, onions and small lima beans. Do not use beets in such combinations, because they will discolor the mixture.

All the vegetables are prepared separately as for canning and packed in layers in a well-boiled jar, according to United States Department of Agriculture specialists. Each layer should be packed as tightly as possible before the next is added. Fill jars with a brine. Put on boiled top and rubber. Process in water-bath canner either 120 minutes one day or one hour on three successive days, or 35 minutes in steam-pressure cooker under 15 pounds pressure.

Corn and Tomatoes Good.

Corn and tomatoes make a good combination to can. The resulting product is served as a vegetable dish. Blanch fresh corn on the cob five minutes, dip for an instant in cold water and cut from the cob. Scald tomatoes from 30 to 60 seconds and dip in cold water. Remove the skin and core. Chop tomatoes into medium-sized pieces. Mix thoroughly two parts of tomatoes with one part of corn. Pack the mixture in hot glass jars, add a level teaspoonful of sugar and one-half teaspoonful of salt to a quart. Fill jars with hot water. Put on boiled top and rubber and process 120 minutes in water-bath canner one day or one hour on each of three successive days, or 35 minutes in steam-pressure cooker under 15 pounds pressure.

A corn, tomato and string-bean combination is made by using one part of corn, one part of green string beans and three parts of tomatoes. The corn is blanched, dipped in cold water and cut from the cob. The string beans are cut into convenient lengths and blanched for four minutes. The tomatoes are blanched from 30 to 60 seconds and cold-dipped. Remove the skin and core of the tomatoes and cut into medium-sized pieces. Mix the three vegetables thoroughly and pack the mixture in hot glass jars. Add a level teaspoonful of sugar and one-half teaspoonful of salt, and fill jar with hot water. Put on boiled top and rubber and process in water-bath canner either 120 minutes one day or one hour on three successive days, or 35 minutes in steam-pressure cooker under 15 pounds pressure.

Concentrated Soup Recommended.

An excellent concentrated vegetable soup can be made from any desired mixture of vegetables. A tasteful combination to can consists of one quart of concentrated tomato pulp (tomatoes boiled down until thick), one pint corn, or tiny lima beans, one pint okra, and four teaspoonfuls of sugar and salt mixture—made by mixing sugar and salt in the proportion of one-third salt to two-thirds sugar.

To make the tomato pulp, cook together three quarts of sliced tomatoes, one small chopped onion and half cupful chopped sweet red pepper. Put through a sieve and remove seeds and skin. Return strained pulp to kettle and cook down to about the consistency of catsup. Measure, add the corn or beans and okra which has been prepared as for canning, with seasoning. Cook together for ten minutes and pack hot into jars which have been previously boiled 15 minutes. Put on boiled top and cleansed rubber, partially seal and place on false bottom in water-bath canner with water to cover.

If the single-period continuous method of processing is followed, boil for at least two hours. If the intermittent boiling process is used, boil for one hour on each of three successive days. Before each subsequent boiling, the covers must be loosened and after each boiling the covers must be securely tightened again to make sealing complete.

Processing under steam pressure is recommended. Quart jars should be processed 85 minutes under 15 pounds pressure. On removal tighten the tops, invert to test for leaks, and when cool put in a dry, dark, cool place.

BERRIES DRIED BY HEAT OF THE SUN

Avoid Unnecessary Handling and Rough Treatment.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Dried berries of many kinds are excellent for pies, puddings and sauce. Select berries which are fully ripe but not overripe.

Berries to be dried should be picked in the early morning hours. Do not allow them to stand in the sun or in deep layers in picking vessels.

No attempt should be made to wash the berries intended for drying, as the wet berries will soften and mat together in the dryer. Spread on the trays, holding the vessel of berries with one hand, and, while slowly pouring the fruit, use the fingers of the free hand to spread them in a close, uniform layer one to two berries deep. Protect them from insects. Avoid all unnecessary handling and rough treatment, as crushed berries spoil the appearance of the finished product.

Do not attempt to pick out leaves, bits of stem or green berries. These are readily removed after the berries are dry. Raspberries and Logan blackberries require careful handling, as they are liable to crush or flatten out when first heated. Spread them in thinner layers than other berries.

As rapidly as the trays can be spread, place in strong sunlight if they are to be sun dried, as they can be in most sections of the United States, or in a warm evaporator if artificial heat is employed. With artificial heat the initial temperature should be from 135 to 145 degrees. This may be gradually increased when the fruit is two-thirds dry to 150 degrees, with any berries except Logan blackberries and red raspberries. These should be started at 130 degrees F.

When the berries have dried sufficiently to be stirred without crushing, go over the trays and break up any thick clumps which are drying too slowly. The fruit is dry when it begins to rattle somewhat on the trays and when the berries no longer show moisture when crushed between the fingers.

When the berries are dry place in a large wooden or pasteboard box covered with muslin to exclude insects. Pour the warm berries directly into this box as they come from the dryer and every time a new lot is added stir the whole mass thoroughly together. The berries will at first become quite moist, but they will then gradually lose moisture until they become dry and hard to the touch. When ready to be stored permanently, return them to the dryer or oven and heat up to 180 degrees for two or three minutes to destroy any eggs of insects which may be present. Place immediately in sealed containers and store in a dry, warm place.

Kohlrabi Is Delicious When Young and Tender

Do you know kohlrabi, sometimes called turnip-rooted cabbage? It may be used when it is young and tender if it is to be eaten at its best. When it is no more than two or three inches in diameter this vegetable will be found quite delicious, says the United States Department of Agriculture.

To prepare it for the table, clean the kohlrabi, and cut off the leaves. (The very young fresh leaves may be cooked separately as greens, with or without a little chive or onion.) Pare the globe or bulbous stem, discarding any stringy or tough portions at the base. Slice it or cut into dice and cook for about half an hour in slightly salted water. Season with butter, salt and pepper, and serve or make a white sauce and mix with the kohlrabi. Kohlrabi can be used in practically any dish in which turnip is used. It is milder in flavor, and not quite like turnip, though suggestive of it. The dark leaves and the white diced pieces from the globe portion make an attractive dish when served together.

Thorsby's New School Buildiug Now Occupied

I have just returned from the opening of the Thorsby school. They are just now getting into their new hollow tile building and I have never seen a people in better spirits than those splendid people of Thorsby were this morning. Not only were the grown ups happy but the little fellows were as happy and jolly as children are when father has bought them a new suit or a new pair of shoes. The children have been going to school in a building that was altogether inadequate but nowthey have a structure which is a credit to any town or community. The faculty was no less optimistic because they feel that have something with which to work. Teachers need tools to work with as much as a carpenter or any one else and we have been too long realizing this.

During the past three years the county School Board has been giving much attention to this phase of our school system. Within these years they have spent $88,818.10 for buildings and equipment and tis has been done in the face of a great education in state funds. It is remarkable how they have been able to do so much with the money in buildings in the county and when the Verbena Cchool is completed there will be nine. The work of this Board is a monument to their business ability and the wise way in which they have handled the school affairs. If we stay behind them in this work it will not be long until we shall build up a system of schools in this County that will be a credit to it.

I certainly hope we hold to the same standards, at least, and I always feel that even individauls should strive constantly for higher standards. That is exactly why we are asking you to re-vote the one mill tax. Not to vote it means to go backward. To vote it means to go forward. If we turn back let us "Make a cross mark and spit in it" before we do it. If some one should suffer any farmer in this county $10.00 or $1000.00 with which to improve his farm provided that farmer would spend $3,000.00 for the same purpose I am sure he would gladly accept the proposition. That is exactly what the one mill tax means to our school system. The corporations will furnish about $10,000.00 or $11,000.00 over against the farmers $3,000.00. If you are not a land owner you pay none of this tax.

Again asking that every one do the fair thing and study the proporation from an unbiased point of view and vote as he conscientiously believes is for the best interest of the schools. I am,

Yours for better school system.

MR. WILBANKS WRITES OF COTTON

Will be glad for you to publish this letter. Farmers in and around Clanton are laboring under unnecessary hardships. We farmers are not satisfied with present crops not making as much as we were expecting two months ago. However, I want to say much of this can be helped. We begin gathering by paying too much for cotton picking. We haul cotton to gin and pay two prices for ginning. We take our sample and receipt to town and sell for what we can get.

We are to blame for the whole thing. We should get busy and see that ginning is cut. If we could get 30 cents for cotton the present price for ginning wouldn't be too much, but as it is it is unreasonable, so let us get busy for ginning another season.

It seems that our buyers at Clanton are a little behind other towns, so we will try to locate Monroe Hubbard of Jemison, and a few others in Clanton, and see if we can't work up a better market at home. We think it unreasonable, and should be talked and looked after.

We take it for granted that every home in the county takes county paper. If they don't, they should. I would be glad some one would take up the above matter and let us right this matter. The editor, I am sure, will be glad to publish what you have to say. Don't make your letter too long. Any man or woman has a right to look after their rights. Wonder if there is anybody who disagrees with me in this matter? Will watch next week's paper to see.

Unity Baptists Will Meet at Billingsley

The Fifth Sunday Meeting of the Unity Baptist Association will be held with the Billingsley Baptist Church at Billingsley, Alabama, on August the 30th, 1925.

On account of seemingly unavoidable circumstances, the program and notice of this meeting is a week or two late but we hope it will not prove injurious to the meeting.

In several respects this meeting should be one of the very best meetings we have had this year. It is the last one we will have during this associational year. Dr. D. F. Green, secretary-treasurer of the Alabama Baptist State Convention, will have part on program, also Dr. S. J. Ezell will speak to the convention and all who know him know what a treat it will be to hear him.

We urgently insist that each pastor and as many as two or three interested workers from each church in the association attend this meeting. Do not stay away because you are not on the program. We assure you that you will have a chance to say something if you will be there and have something to say.

Adveutists Hold Camp Meeting

The 20th annual conference and camp meeting of the Alabama conference of Seventh Day Adventists is now in session at Clanton. The delegates and workers have come from all parts of the state and the attendance this year is unusually large.

At the first business session of the conference, President C. B. Stephenson rendered a report showing the progress and growth of the various departments of the church work, the report showing 135 new members added to the church through evangelistical campaigns conducted in Pensacola, Mobile and Bessemer.

The report of Conference Treasurer C. O. Franz revealed a very encouraging financial situation. Tithes and mission offering show an increase. During the year 1924 the members of the conference paid tithes amounting to $56,563, and gave $18,719.48 to mission work making a total of $42,476.11, or an average of $56.65 per member. It is one of the beliefs of Adventists that the coming of Christ is eminent and that the world must hear the gospel.

Secretaries of the different departments of the conference work gave very encouraging reports.

J. F. Ashbeck, field secretary for Ala Book and Bible House, stated that many come people have been selling Bible, and religious literature during their vacations, thereby earning scholarship for the commig school year.

The Sabbath school secretary Mrs. K. R. Haughey, reported that 1 members of the Sabbath schools in Alabama follow the custom of studying their lesson every day, and have a perfect attendance record. The mission offering for the second quarter through the Sabbath schools was 30c per church member.

Bishop G. W. Wills of Nashville, president of Southern Union conference has given daily Bible studies on Christ's Life, Justification by Faith, Perfection of Godliness and kindred subjects. These have proved very interesting.

Prof. Marion E. Cady, educational secretary of the general conference, of Washington, D. C., gave a series of inspiring lectures on Christian education. He emphasized the belief of Adventists that the inspired Word of God is the foundation of all true education.

The official business of the conference was carried through with promptness and unity of spirit. The nominating committee submitted the following names for officers for the ensuing year and they were elected by the conference.

President, Eld. C. B. Stephenson.
Secretary-Treasurer, C. O. Franz.
Home Mission Secretary, Eld. R. K. Haughey.
Sabbath School and Young People's Missionary Secretary, Mrs. R. H. Haughey.
Field Missionary Secretary, J. F. Ashbeck.
Executive committee: C. B. Stephenson, C. O. Franz, J. G. Mitchell, W. P. McLemear, J. F. Ashbeck.

Eld. W. F. Martin, religious liberty secretary of the general conference, and Eld. Sparow, who has spent a number of years in active missionary work in Africa, have arrived and will carry the large part of the preaching during the closing days.

Other ... workers in the Adventist church have been present and assisted in the meeting.

The meeting will close Sunday night August 30, and a cordial invitation is extended to the citizens of Clanton and vicinity to attend these public services.

Discussion on 1-Mill School Tax

Dear Editor

I ... a few words about the County one mill tax. I am a land owner of Chilton County and a citizen of same and as such am interested in the schools. I have noticed that most of the people who are against taxation are those who do not own property and therefore will not pay one penny of the tax. I do feel that those people should be willing that those of us who pay the taxes have the privilege of doing so.

The Board is striving to reach our rural children and give them better schools. I am glad to ... them turning their attention this way and I want to ... cooperate with the board it means that we will ... longer terms. We want one of those buildings out here in our community and we know further more that if we begin to cut down the funds the Board cannot do these things for us. I am glad to pay the tax because I think it means something to the system and the time is here that if we do not give our children the very best training it is possible for ... they will have but ... got to be men and ...

... I am ... better schools.

What Shall the Harvest Be?

"For whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."
Galatians VI 7.

This is an unchanging law, just as unchangng as the law of gravity.

If we sow wheat we reap wheat, if we sow, or plant corn, we reap corn. A handful of wheat would not feed a family, but if sown and fertilized would yield a sufficient amount to feed a large family several days.

The above is just as true with money as anything else. We all want to accumulate money and the best way to do it is to plant it by depositing it in a good safe, strong bank, like ours, where it will accumulate and grow.

CARD CLUB COMPLIMENTS WITH CHICKEN BROIL.

The attractive premises surrounding the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. J. H Alred was made the setting when the Clanton Card club decided upon making their husbands honored guests at a chicken broil on Tuesday evening.

Early eventide found the club ladies busily engaged in broiling chickens over a barbecue-pit and making other preparations for completing an epicurean feast.

The husbands-in-waiting looked on while their appetites were registering to the highest degree.

Then came satiation!

Those card club ladies sustained fully their reputation for producing the choicest of 'good eats,'' that were bountifully spread in picnic style.

The remaining part of the evening was spent in the most informal fashion. All the jokes that were indulged in were new (?), that is, they had never been "cracked" before.

An universally happy mood prevailed throughout the evening.

The chicken broil given by the card club ladies, when they complimented their husbands on Tuesday evening was a success in every sense of the word.

Swiss Chard Is Worthy of Place in Any Garden

Swiss chard or leaf beet is a crop worthy to be grown in every home garden. Planted in April, a row 15 or 20 feet long of this vegetable will produce a good supply of greens for the average family from early summer until freezing weather.

Sow the seed the same as the beet, to which family chard belongs, and thin the plants to eight or ten inches apart in the row as soon as they start to crowd, using the thinnings for a good pot of greens. As soon as the outer leaves of the remaining plants get ten to twelve inches long, they are cut off close to the point of attachment at the base, and the central part of the plant allowed to continue growth until again large leaves are produced, when again these are cut and used. Continued cutting of the outer leaves does not harm the plants and they will flourish until October.

Some housekeepers strip the green leafy portions from the thick white midrib of the leaf, use these as "greens" and serve the midribs in the same manner as asparagus.

Swiss chard is easily canned for winter use, and is successfully dried if the thick midribs are split thin so they dry evenly with the leafy portion.

As greens this vegetable is most excellent served with melted butter, bacon grease or cream dressing in the same way as spinach.

Handling Milk for Home Use Is a Big Problem

The farm home has its problems in handling milk for family use. The fact that milk is produced in abundance on the farm does not necessarily mean that it is used in large quantities in the farm home. There are farms where the production of milk is the principal line of work, yet there is but little milk used in the home.

It is in the home on the farm where only a few cows are kept and where butter is made and sold, or where cream is sold for butter making purposes, that the use of milk is often neglected. It has been said that some such homes use less fresh milk per person than do many homes in the cities. The reason is apparent after a moment's consideration. The principal cause of so small a quantity being used is the fact that the farm does not have the equipment for cooling the milk and placing it on the table in a really appetising condition. The city housewife receives the milk in a clean, attractive-looking bottle. The milk is cool when delivered.

FORESTRY WORK IN ALABAMA

The United States Government is prepared to spend $33,300,00 on forestry work in Alabama, according to notice received by the Commission of Forestry. This expenditure, however, is conditioned upon the State's contributing an equal amount. The Commission of Forestry is planning to match the Federal allotment, subject to the practicable development of its work which was organized but little over a year ago. The Commission, however, will not expend State money merely for the purpose of securing additional Federal funds. The policy is to develop public forestry only as rapidly as circumstances may permit. Thus far the progress made has been satisfactory, but it will require several years before the entire area of the state can be covered.

Inquiry is sometimes made as to the reason for Federal cooperation in the development of forestry within the various states. It will be recalled, points out the Commission, that many of the states produce practically no forest growth, but nevertheless are large consumers of forest products. The only way in which these states can contribute to the restoration and perpetuation of the forest resources of the country is through the Federal Government. The prairie states thus bear their pro rata share of the expenses of forestry development, although the timber growing states reap the benefit not only of proximity to the timber supply, but also through the sawmill pay rolls and other business activities associated with the production of lumber and naval stores.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON A NARROW ESCAPE

"Oh, Aunty, I just have to talk to you," said Maud, bursting in on Aunt Emmy. "Those bonds Tom's father gave us for a wedding present have matured and Tom has the money. A man is trying to get Tom to invest in a radio company. I want your opinion on it."

"Don't hurry; tell me everything you can remember," said Aunt Emmy.

"Well, Tom didn't seem enthusiastic. Then Mr. Brown, the salesman, said that if he bought stock in his company, and wanted his money at any time, the company would buy back his stock."

"Are you sure he said that?" interrupted Aunt Emmy. "That is a claim that is not made by people connected with dependable investment houses. Unless you have an agreement with the company clearly stating that it will repurchase its stock, signed by one of its officers, you would have great difficulty in getting the company to buy back your stock. A company cannot be compelled to repurchase its own stock. Do you know who Mr. Brown is?"

"No," replied Maud. "Neither does Tom, but he seems awfully nice and Tom liked him right from the start. He is good looking, well dressed, and has beautiful manners."

Aunt Emmy sniffed, "Did he offer to sell you preferred stock on which dividends are guaranteed?"

"Why, how did you know, Aunty?" exclaimed Maud. "That is exactly what he did."

"I thought so," said Aunt Emmy. "Reliable stock salesmen don't promise that a company will repurchase its stock, nor do they promise guaranteed dividends. Unless a company operates profitably, it cannot pay honest dividends of any sort, guaranteed or otherwise. You can see how foolish it is to believe that you can get dividends just because some one says they are guaranteed. The only guarantee in the world for dividends is the successful operation of a company. Guaranteed dividends is a glib phrase used by unscrupulous persons to get money from unthinking ones. A while back the country was flooded with fake oil stock. Now dishonest promoters are trying radio stock."

"What shall I do?", cried Maud. "Tom is with Mr. Brown now at the store to buy the stock with the bond money."

"You just go to the phone and call Tom," said Aunt Emmy. "Ask him and Mr. Brown to meet you at the bank at ten o'clock. Tell him not to buy the stock until you talk with him again. Half the money is yours. Then call the bank and make an appointment with the vice president to discuss an investment."

About noon Aunt Emmy's telephone rang. It was Maud. "The queerest thing happened, Aunty," she said. "Mr. Brown agreed to meet us at the bank at ten o'clock. Tom and I waited until eleven and he never showed up. Then Tom told the vice president about it and he said we had a lucky escape. Only last week the bank looked up the company Mr. Brown represented and it is absolutely no good!"

HOW TO SET FRUIT TREES

In setting fruit trees, put them straight rows. Of course trees in crooked rows will produce just as good and just as much fruit, other conditions being equal, as will those planted in straight rows. However, it makes the orchard look much better when planted in straight rows and it makes cultivation and all other work in the orchard less difficult than if planted in crooked rows.

A good method, in order to insure planting the trees in straight rows, is to locate by whatever method seems best, the exact place where each tree should be planted and drive down a stake. Often one who is proficient in laying off straight rows with a plow can lay off the field in checks and such way as to get the trees in almost exactly straight lines. Whatever method is practiced, it is usually desirable to put a stake at the exact place where each tree is to be set.

Then make a planting board, which is nothing more nor less than a piece of plank, or 1x4 material about 5 feet in length, and with a hole in each end and a notch cut on one side of the hole. A stake which is in the ground where the tree is to be planted, fit exactly into this notch cut in the center of the planting board. Put a stake in the ground through the hole in each end of the planting board. Then take up the planting board, leaving these stakes in the ends, and dig the hole where the middle stake is set. After the hole is dug, replace the planting board and set the tree so the trunk of it will fit exactly in the notch cut in the center of the planting board. This will insure getting the tree exacty where it should be and will help one to get the row exactly straight.

It is worth while to take the extra care necessary to get the trees in straight rows, because they will remain there for a longtime. Even with only short lived peach tree, they should remain from 15 to20 years, and with proper longer lived tree like apples, etc., they may easily be expec ed to remain over a period of half a century or more if the proper care is given them.

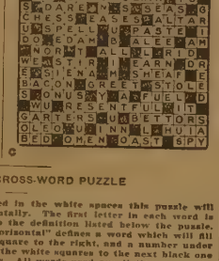
Solution of Last Week's Puzzle.



HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square; No. 1 under the column headed "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

BIRDS MAKE GOOD AS SHEEP HERDERS

Two sheep herders that have only two legs and can fly are proving their value so effectively to August Boeller, owner of a large ranch near Hosum, Wash., that he is thinking of getting rid of all his collies.

The new guardians of the flocks are South American birds called yakamiks. A relative shipped two of the birds to Boeller last summer from Venezuela and now they have matured they are inseparable from the sheep. They are a sort of crane, long domesticated, and, dog-like, show faithfulness and intelligence.

They will attack, mercilessly, eagles, coyotes and foxes, beating them off with their powerful wings. They disdain dogs and have kept collies on the ranch in terror for weeks.

Positive Proof That Baby Was No Bargain

Otis A. Marshall, 2103 East Riverside parkway, several days ago related to a number of his friends how his niece, Mary Jean, age five, exploded a "bomb shell" in the midst of the family group one evening some time ago when a neighbor was calling.

Mary Jean, with childish curiosity, asked the neighbor why she was so fond of the dollar bargain sales she spoke of so frequently. Not wishing to discuss "dollar sales" to any great length the neighbor replied that "there were some wonderful things obtainable on $1 bargain counters."

Not to be discouraged the child asked what could be obtained.

"Why, honey, your mother got you at a dollar sale," the neighbor said.

"Oh, no, she did not," Mary Jean replied. "My mother got me on Sunday and all the stores were closed."—Indianapolis News.

Moisture in Trees

The forest products laboratory says that the moisture in different green trees or in different parts of the tree may vary considerably, but as a general average, 40 to 50 per cent of the weight of the wood in the tree may be water. The rest of the wood, that is, the wood fiber itself, will commonly contain about 50 per cent carbon, so that of the original wood 50 per cent is water, 25 per cent is carbon and the other 25 per cent of the tree consists mostly of hydrogen and oxygen in chemical combinations with the carbon.

Charity Box

In every home there should be a drawer or box where worn clothing, discarded toys, outgrown shoes, clothes, etc., are placed. Then when a call comes for help from some charitable institution there is not a frantic search for something to give away. The plan also permits keeping your own belongings away from unused articles.

Prefer Imported Leather

To promote the wearing of home-produced leather, leather traders of Great Britain introduced an "all-British" boot, but retailers have refused to co-operate because they claim that wearers prefer footwear from other countries.

Army and Navy Cadets

The graduates of the United States Military academy at West Point and the United States Naval academy at Annapolis make an agreement upon entering the academies that they will serve a period of eight years, four years of which is the schooling at the academies and four years' service upon graduation. However, in special circumstances resignations are accepted before the termination of this period.

Bees in Orchard Most Profitable

Under Modern Methods of Handling Insects Are Not Bothersome.

Orchardists think kindly of the lowly honey bee. There is a very common saying among experienced orchardists which sums the matter up in a few words. It is: "No bees, no fruit." The failure of orchards in certain parts of the country, the indifferent fruiting which is often blamed on the season, might very often be traced to the absence of bees. It does not make much difference, so far as the orchard is concerned, whether it is tame bees or wild bees that perform nature's method of fertilization of the bloom. It does, however, make some difference to the orchard owner in that tame bees will give him a yield of honey and sure pollenization without the consumption of extra ground. The same land can be made to yield two crops just as well as one.

Orchard Failures.

The discontinuance of the keeping of tame bees on many farms, and the additional destruction and disappearance of the wild bees in the surrounding woods have all had their hand in the so-called "failure of orchards." Bees are one of the most profitable side lines which the farmer can carry. He can well afford to consider their possibilities, not only for their own sake but for the sake of the orchard.

Under modern methods of handling bees, they are not half the bother and the trouble that they used to be. Swarming, the old-time bugaboo of the beekeeper, has been practically eliminated, because we have learned its cause and by practicing precautionary methods, by getting ready in advance for the "fun," bees can be hived in a very few minutes. Indeed, beekeepers now have ways of preventing swarming if they so desire.

Modern Appliances.

Modern appliances such as hives, supers and the uniform pound frames all aid in encouraging the modern bee to produce more than his earlier ancestors did. Ten to twenty pounds per hive used to be a fair average production for one season; now it is not uncommon for Iowa beekeepers to receive as much as 200 pounds of honey from one hive in a favorable season. An average of 40 to 80 pounds can be had from each hive under ordinary conditions per season, so Iowa beekeepers report.

The finest quality honey comes from white clover, alsike clover and sweet clover. It is clear and golden. Buckwheat is often a desirable late feeding ground for bees, but it falls short of premium prices on the market because it is darker in color and a little rankер in flavor.

Soy Beans Produce Best Hay When Planted Thick

Thickly planted soy beans produce hay of greater feeding value than those that are thinly planted, according to preliminary results of tests which are being made by the college of agriculture, University of Illinois. Soys seeded with a wheat drill at the rate of one and a fourth bushels an acre yielded hay with fine stems, only six per cent of which was refused by dairy cows. In contrast to this, beans that were seeded thinner produced coarser hay, a larger proportion of the stems being left uneaten. The plot seeded at the rate of about a half bushel an acre produced very coarse hay, 16 per cent of which was refused, according to Dr. W. B. Nevens, assistant chief of dairy cattle feeding at the college. The difference in the feeding value of the fine stemmed hay as compared with the coarse hay, therefore was about 12 per cent, or about 240 pounds for each ton of hay fed.

For one thing the thinly seeded plots contained more weeds, an important factor affecting the quality of hay.

Larger plots of soy beans are being grown in the test with the object of making further studies of the effect of rate of planting on the quality of hay.

Different Kinds of Food When Hen Is Confined

When the hen is confined to the poultry house and its immediate surroundings, perhaps a small yard, the only way that she can make eggs is to receive from the caretaker the various different kinds of food that she would obtain on free range in summer, or their equivalents. On most farms there is a reasonably good variety of grains, including corn, wheat, oats and barley, and these form sufficient variety so far as they are concerned. In addition there should be ground grains, including wheat, bran and cornmeal, to use in dry or damp mashes. To take the place of the bugs and worms of the summer season beef scraps, such as are furnished by dealers in poultry supplies, or cut fresh bone should be given.

Grain for Cattle

For cattle a grain ration of one-third bran, one-third middlings and one-third oats would be very suitable. While for the hogs, a ration of 60 per cent middlings and 40 per cent oats would make a suitable ration for sows or older pigs. For the young pigs at weaning time a ration of 45 per cent ground oats, 45 per cent ground barley and 10 per cent tankage is recommended as a more suitable ration.

To Make Silage Out of Soft Corn Crop

Chop Fine and Pack Tightly Is Plan Urged.

There is a lack of silo room in many places for the whole corn crop should it be frosted or immature. Because the ears are the most valuable part they should be saved in any event. It is difficult to save the ears of a soft corn crop by storage in cribs. In 1917 the Iowa experiment station demonstrated that soft ears in the late roasting stage could be husked, run through a silage cutter, and tightly packed into silos with very good results. The silage resulting after 12 days of fermentation was of surprisingly good quality and held its flavor so well that at the end of two months it was in excellent feeding condition. Silage can be made in ten or twelve days and will probably be ready to feed two weeks after filling.

"It is not necessary to husk the corn in order to make soft-ear silage," says Andrew Boss of University farm, St. Paul, Minn. "Snapped corn can be handled just as satisfactorily as the husked corn and the husks give the advantage of greater bulk and additional feed.

"The Iowa station urges chopping the corn finely in making ear-corn silage and packing it tightly in the silo by tramping, especially near the walls. Silage made from ears that are partially matured may require the addition of water to insure proper packing and prevent overheating and molding in the silage-making process. Silage made from ear corn should be covered with a layer of finely cut corn fodder or stover. If such a cover is not provided there will be too much waste of valuable corn. It is not advisable to make silage of mature or nearly mature corn. The cobs prevent packing and they do not contain sufficient sugar to permit the fermentation which is necessary for preservation.

"Ear corn silage should be fed as a concentrate, not as a roughage."

Red Mites Disposed of With Very Little Work

The common red mites which often infest the hen house and kill or stunt chickens may be disposed of effectively with a little labor. These suggestions are offered by the poultry extension men at Iowa State college.

1. Clean up the filth around the hen house, ventilate thoroughly and let plenty of sunshine into the house.

2. Construct removable roosts and dropping boards, allowing as few cracks as possible.

3. Paint or spray the roosts, walls around the roosts, dropping boards and nests with a full-strength solution of two parts oil to one part stock dip, or five gallons lime sulphur to 40 gallons of water. Applications should be made four to six times in spring, summer and fall, and in pairs, one following the other in five or six days.

Starting Team With Big Load Is Not Difficult

To the driver who would start his heavily loaded team here is a bit of excellent advice from the Horse Association of America:

The driver must hold his lines taut. Experience has shown that nearly all drivers get excited and push on the lines, thereby virtually turning the horses loose at the very moment that they need to be steadied by a moderate pressure on the bit.

Whipping is worse than useless. The experience of practical teamsters proves conclusively that no pair of horses can or will exert their best efforts when fearful that they are about to be whipped. Fear interferes with the deliberate, careful placing of feet and legs.

Soy beans should be cut for hay when the beans in the largest pods appear about half grown. One successful grower says that they should be cut when the pods are yet slightly green and the beans beginning to get hard.

POULTRY

GRAIN PROPORTION LOWER IN SUMMER

Although equal parts of mash and grain are often recommended, it is not desirable to hold to any such arbitrary figures. It is desirable, however, to know what proportion is being consumed so that production may be somewhat regulated. During warm seasons the proportion of grain should naturally be lower than in winter as less sugars, starches and fat are needed for body warmth.

When egg production and health are satisfactory it is wise to let well enough alone regardless of whether more grain or more mash is being consumed. If production and consumption of mash are both low, the trouble may lay in too much grain being fed, or in an unappetizing mash. If the birds are poor in flesh and subject to colds, the feeding of more grain is usually the correct procedure.

Feeding wet mash instead of dry mash is occasionally practiced with success by skilled feeders. Because there is considerable risk of overfeeding by this method, and because no better results are secured for the time expended, wet-mash feeding is not recommended as a substitute for hopper feeding of dry mash.

Wet mash in addition to hopper feeding throughout the year is usually unnecessary and dangerous in the hands of the average feeder. This practice is probably desirable and to be advocated from July 1 to September 1 to postpone the moult, and on slow-maturing pullets in the fall. Three quarts before wetting to 100 birds is sufficient. Feed mash at noon, so that it can be gradually discontinued when the desired results have been secured without upsetting the regular feeding schedule.—O. C. Krum, Extension Service, Colorado Agricultural College.

Promoting Chick Growth by the Use of Sunlight

Direct sunlight as an essential in promoting growth in chicks and in preventing the development of leg weakness has been proved by recent experiments just announced by the poultry department of the State College of Agriculture, New Brunswick, N. J.

One thousand chicks kept under glass weighed only one-fourth pound at the end of 12 weeks, whereas 200 chicks of the same age, but kept outdoors in direct sunlight averaged one and one-half pounds each.

Cod liver oil has for some time been considered an effective growth stimulator and preventive of leg weakness, so the truth of this was also investigated by the experimenters. Of the chicks under glass 800 were fed varying amounts of the oil. At the end of 12 weeks they were no more thrifty than those receiving no oil. After the fifth week leg weakness began to appear among all of the birds under glass, whether they were being fed cod liver oil or not. In contrast with this the chicks kept in direct sunlight showed no leg weakness at all.

The combination of direct sunlight and cod liver also was tried by the experiment station. Using 200 chicks and feeding oil equivalent in weight to 1 per cent of the ration, it found that an average weight of one and three-fourths pounds per chick had been attained. This was one-fourth pound more than the weight of the chicks getting sunlight but no oil.

It was found that chicks kept behind glass and developing leg weakness could be cured by a half-hour exposure to sunlight on four days.

Value of Limestone and Oyster Shell for Hens

According to Maryland Bulletin 244, "a crushing test of eggs laid by oyster-shell-fed and limestone-fed hens showed no appreciable difference in the strength of shell.

"There was practically no difference in the thickness of shell of production in the limestone pen.

"The consumption of limestone per bird was much less than the consumption of oyster shell even though there was a greater egg production in the limestone pen.

"This test would indicate that limestone can be safely used as the sole source of supply of material for egg-shell making with laying hens."

When to Fatten Turkeys

During the summer and early fall turkeys can find an abundance of feed on the average farm. About October 1, it is advisable to begin fattening them for market, giving only a little feed at first and gradually increasing this until the birds are marketed. The marketing season for turkeys is very short, running only from the middle of November to the latter part of December.

Kill Lice on Fowls

Use either sodium fluoride or blue ointment to get rid of lice on poultry. Of the former it will require 1 pound for each 100 hens. Use the "pinch" method, which is to take a pinch of the powder and rub into various parts of the body. The blue ointment is applied in similar places, being rubbed into the skin well. Mix the ointment with equal parts lard and divide into pieces the size of a small garden pea. Keep away from children, as it is a poison.

Permanent roads are a good investment —not an expense

One Horse Town, Good-Bye!

Any community whose streets are not durably paved is going to be known as a "one horse town."

When that time arrives, Prosperity says, "Good-bye, old friend. Good-bye!"

People start moving away. Bank deposits fall off. Business in general begins to take a slump, and the place is no longer "on the map."

Contrast all this with the city that is well paved.

It steadily forges ahead over its hard, even streets. Automobiles, busses and delivery trucks, operate efficiently and economically, regardless of season or weather.

Business is good, and keeps getting better. Modern, fire-safe buildings spring up. New industries are attracted to town. Plants and factories are working full time. Trade at the stores is brisk, and everybody's busy.

In short, permanently paved streets and roads are one of the very best investments any community can make. You can enjoy the tonic effect of well paved streets by helping your local authorities to find ways and means to build more of them.

"Mechanical Brains"

Two different types of "mechanical brains"—machines that perform the most complicated mathematical problems automatically—recently have been perfected separately by two young inventors, Frank P. Gage of Boston, Mass., and Stuart C. Dodd, a graduate student of Princeton university. Both machines are expected to prove of great importance in psychological and educational research and in industrial statistical work. They are said to complete, within an hour or so, problems that usually require many hours or even days.—Popular Science Monthly.

A citizen of the Rumpus Ridge neighborhood, going homeward from town, beheld sitting on the ground by the side of the road and marking in the dirt with sticks, a couple of well-known residents of the region.

"Me and Newt, yur, swapped hosses this afternoon," replied one, "and ever since then we've been trying to figger out how both of us could be stuck at the same time."—Kansas City Star.

AN OPERATION RECOMMENDED

Avoided by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Los Angeles, Cal.—"I cannot give too much praise to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for what it has done for me. My mother gave it to me when I was a girl 14 years old, and since then I have taken it when I feel run down or tired. I took it for three months before my two babies were born for I suffered with my back and had spells as if my heart was affected, and it helped me a lot. The doctors told me at one time that I would have to have an operation. I thought I would try 'Pinkham's,' as I call it, first. In two months I was all right and had no operation. I firmly believe 'Pinkham's' cured me. Everyone who saw me after that remarked that I looked so well. I only have to take medicine occasionally, not but I always keep a couple of bottles by me. I recommend it to women who speak to me about their health. I have also used your Sanative Wash and like it very much."—Mrs. E. GOULD, 4000 East Side Boulevard, Los Angeles, Cal.

Many letters have been received from women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after operations have been advised.

"Have You Got 'Em?"

David Isaiah Dumond, of Indianapolis, age three, was visiting his cousin, Lloyd George Hawkins, who lives south of Spencer. After the evening meal the two youngsters were playing bear. Lloyd George told David to be the man, climb into a tree (chair), shut his eyes tight, and he would get his feet. David climbed into a tree, projecting his feet outward and downward. With eyes tightly closed, and in a very tense attitude he exclaimed before the bear had made a single move, "Have you got 'em?"—Indianapolis News.

These Sadder Days

On the whole, these are much sadder ages than the early ones; not sadder in a noble way—the way of ennui, and jaded intellect, and uncomfortableness of soul and body. Not that we are without festivity, but festivity more or less forced, mistaken embittered, incomplete, not of the heart. And the profoundest reason of this darkness of heart is, I believe, our want of faith.—Ruskin.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

THE CHAMOIS

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Chamois were holding a reception.

That is, they were talking to the mountain goats and wild sheep at the zoo.

They were also taking bits of grass to eat from time to time, so that Mrs. Charles Chamois said it was just like a party where people had chicken salad and ice cream.

She had heard, she said, people talking of such parties when they came to the zoo.

Often, she added, people looked at the animals, but talked about their home plans, and what they were going to do.

The animals picked up a great deal of information this way, some of which, however, did not mean much to them.

It was not all useful information.

Of course Mrs. Chamois was not giving the grass to her guests.

They took it themselves. But no matter, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Chamois were holding a reception.

They had started to talk, and they were continuing.

"Mr. Charles Chamois, that well-known member of the antelope family and a relative of the mountain goat family is about to make a farewell speech," said Mrs Charles Chamois.

Mr. Charles Chamois.

All the others listened and looked very much interested.

They beat their hoofs on the ground which was their way of clapping hands.

"We are to be moved," said Mr. Charles Chamois, "to another part of the zoo where we will be given sand to walk upon.

"Somehow it has not agreed with us here. We are not as well as we might be.

"You see, zoo life has been such a change, and now they have grown to know here what will agree with us best, so we are going to be changed, and the change will do us great good.

"We will not go away for a change and come back again. We will stay in our new place.

"That's the way we have a change. We think this way is the best.

"So we are going to be well and as happy as ever.

"But we will miss our friends and hope to see them in another part of the zoo, too, some day.

"But I have been asked, or if I haven't been asked, I should have been, to tell you a little of the life of a Chamois, and especially about our own lives which are considered a bit unusual."

"Do tell us," the others said.

This delighted Mr. Chamois. He would have spoken anyway, but it was nicer to be urged.

Mr. Charles Chamois moved a little toward Mrs. Chamois and said:

"We admired each other because we were each so brave. We came from Switzerland where there are great mountains.

"Sometimes we lived in the mountains and sometimes in huge caves.

"We could jump and run, and we never lost our footing.

"We were careful when we were in dangerous places, but still we were very brave.

"In the summers we had one home—one which was high up—but when winter came we moved lower down where it was warmer and where we could be more protected.

"Yes, these are the ways of the Chamois family, and these are the things we did, but now we must be going, for the keeper is coming to take us to our new home in the zoo."

"Farewell," said Mrs. Chamois.

"Farewell," said Mr. Chamois.

"Farewell," the other animals said.

And they even stopped eating grass and said that they would miss such brave and splendid animals from their neighborhood, but were glad they were going where they would be well.

FALL COATS PASS IN REVIEW; FROCKS IN WOOL OR SILK

THE procession of new fall coats is beginning to pass in review; important looking and gracious garments, that immediately inspire respect and interest, are in the vanguard and we are meeting them for the first time. There is nothing easy-going and casual in their style points—they are original, beautiful, assertive and increasingly emphasized when coats for formal wear or semidress come into view.

The most important style note is the changed silhouette—the new coats are fuller and the flaring skirtline has gone a long way toward replacing the straight line. This greater fullness is very adroitly managed with a view to preserving the impression of slenderness in the figure and is usually introduced below the swell of the hips or in front. With it there is a tailored trimness in the body of the garment—very long sleeves and high collars adding length of line, and there is much dignity in design.

Width and Dignity in This Design.

Fur maintains its place as a border for the bottom of many coats and has captured other positions. Besides collars and cuffs in great variety fur supplies trimming touches in other ways and is much used in patches and emplacements on dressy coats. A handsome coat of the sports type that will make a strong appeal to younger women is shown in the picture. It is made of natural kasha, lined with red crepe which appears in the turned back cuff and revers. It is bordered with American opossum fur and has a decoration of buttons down the sides. In this model the fullness is developed in front and the fur border emphasizes the flare in the skirt, but the coat hangs straight at the back.

New style points in fall dresses are coming in like a flock of debutantes, for presentation at the court of fashion. One style show follows another in the large cities and here the new arrivals make their bow. There has been some doubts as to whether some of them would be well received or not; for certain of them have little lineage and few can point back to any particular period for their origin. They are modernists and original, but well behaved and rarely bizarre.

First and most important is the tailored note in street and afternoon frocks and in coats. There is no doubt about its success for American women have long admired tailored styles. In this connection the return of wool to favor must be noted, especially in smooth-faced cloths of high lustre—broadcloth or "satin broadcloth," as it is called, and fine flannels. Next in order of importance is increased fullness, by means of plaits or flares. But this increased fullness in tailored dresses does not always mean a wider silhouette. Plaits are the favored medium for introducing fulness. There is almost no exception to the rule of long sleeves, but in these and in necklines there is a pleasing variety.

One of the newcomers, shown above, might be developed in a smooth-faced wool cloth, ribbed silk or crepe satin and one may study in the picture its adaptation of certain favored style features. A group of plaits at each side, in the skirt, release a little fullness below the hips and they are accented by buttons about them, covered with material like the dress. The vestee and undersleeves appear to be of tucked net banded with a very narrow braid and the tie of narrow ribbon with long ends is a particularly effective finish for an excellent model.

A FEW NICE COOKIES

A cooky jar well filled is a good asset in any household. They may pass with a dish of fruit, for dessert, with a tinkling cold drink for a thirsty caller, as never-ending pleasure to the children and are a good "filler in" at any meal.

Nut Cookies. — Beat two eggs, add one cupful of light brown sugar and beat again to a cream.

Add one-half teaspoonful of vanilla extract, a pinch of salt, six tablespoonfuls of flour, one teaspoonful of baking powder and one cupful of walnut meats chopped fine. Mix well and drop from the end of a teaspoon on a greased baking sheet. Bake a delicate brown.

Crisp Cookies.—Take five-eighths of a cupful of butter or shortening, one heaping cupful of powdered sugar, one-fourth of a teaspoonful each of salt, ginger and nutmeg, one teaspoonful of lemon extract and one-half teaspoonful of cinnamon, two eggs, two tablespoonfuls of milk, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and three and one-half to four cupfuls of flour. Rub the butter and half the flour together until smooth, then add the spices, sugar, salt, the well beaten eggs, the flavoring and milk, and beat well. Sift the baking powder with the rest of the flour and add it gradually. If the cakes are to be rolled, sprinkle the board with sugar and cinnamon; if to be dropped or sliced or made into balls, sprinkle them with powdered sugar and cinnamon before baking. Bake until crisp.

Plain Cookies.—Take one cupful of sugar and add to one-third cupful of butter softened, then add one egg well beaten, two and one-fourth cupfuls of flour sifted with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one-half teaspoonful of salt. Add flavoring to taste; if spices are used sift them with the flour. Chill and roll, cut into rounds and bake in a quick oven.

Ways to Use Honey.

There are many homes supplied these days with a hive or two of bees. They forage for themselves and with a little care will serve you with enough honey to supply a good-sized family with sweet teeth, and leave many pounds to be sold. The flavor of good honey combines especially well with spices in cookery and it takes the place of molasses and sugar.

Honey Ice Cream.—Take a pint each of milk and cream, the yolks of six eggs and a cupful of strained honey. Heat the milk in a double boiler and cook until it thickens, adding the honey and eggs. Cool and add the cream with such flavoring as one likes and freeze as usual.

Salad Dressing.—Take one teaspoonful of butter, three tablespoonfuls of honey, one-third of a cupful of mild vinegar and two well-beaten egg yolks. Mix the dry ingredients, add the remainder and cook until smooth and thick.

Honey Pudding.—Take one-half cupful of honey, one cupful of bread crumbs, one-half cupful of milk, the rind of half a lemon grated, two eggs, two tablespoonfuls of butter and one-half teaspoonful of ginger. Mix the honey, breadcrumbs, milk, egg yolks and seasonings. Beat well, add the butter, and the whites of the eggs beaten stiff. Steam two hours in a pudding mold.

Honey Custard.—Take five eggs, one-half cupful of honey, four cupfuls of scalded milk, one-fourth of a teaspoonful of cinnamon, the same of salt. Beat the eggs just enough to unite the yolks and white, add the other ingredients and make in cups. Set the cups in water to cook.

For a boiled custard use two cupfuls of milk, three eggs or two—if a rich custard is desired—one-half cupful of honey, and a pinch of salt. Cook in a double boiler until the custard coats the spoon.

Cure for Sleeplessness

A Paris medical review recommends for sleeplessness the isopropyipropenylbarbiturate of amidoxyline. You can take it that way; or you can shut your eyes and say it slowly, slow-ly, s-lo-w-ly.—New York World.

Lesson for August 30

PAUL AND THE PHILIPPIAN JAILER

LESSON TEXT—Acts 16:16-40.
GOLDEN TEXT—"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."—Acts 16:31.
PRIMARY TOPIC—The Story of an Earthquake.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Conversion of the Jailer.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Conversion of the Jailer.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Gospel in Philippi.

I. Paul and Silas in Jail (vv. 16-20).

1. The Occasion (vv. 16-24).

As the missionaries went out from day to day to the place of prayer they were accosted by a young woman possessed by a spirit of divination. She was owned by a syndicate of men who derived large gains from her soothsaying. This act of the woman became a great annoyance to Paul, who in the name of Jesus Christ commanded the evil spirit to come out. The evil spirit immediately obeyed. When the demon was cast out of the maid, her supernatural power was gone, therefore, the source of revenue was dried up. This was so exasperating to her owners that they had Paul and Silas arraigned before the magistrates on the false charge of changing their customs. This was playing the hypocrite for it was not custom, but illicit gains that had been interfered with. There is always trouble ahead when you interfere with wrong business. Without any chance to defend themselves Paul and Silas were stripped and beaten by the angry mob and then remanded to jail, and were made fast by stocks in the inner prison.

2. Their Behavior in Jail (v. 25).

They were praying and singing hymns to God. It seems quite natural that they should pray under such conditions, but to sing hymns is astonishing to all who have not come into possession of the peace of God through Christ. Even with their backs lacerated and smarting, their feet fast in stocks, compelling a most painful position in the dungeon darkness of that inner prison, and with the morrow filled with extreme uncertainty, their hearts went up to God in gratitude.

3. Their Deliverance (v. 26).

The Lord wrought deliverance by sending a great earthquake which opened the prison doors and removed the chains from all hands. The earthquake was not a mere coincidence, but a miracle. Earthquakes do not throw all bolted doors open, and unclasp the fetters from men's hands.

II. The Conversion of the Jailer (v. 27-34).

The jailer's sympathy did not go out very far for the prisoners, for after they were made secure he went to sleep. The earthquake suddenly aroused him. He was about to kill himself, whereupon Paul assured him that the prisoners were all safe. This was too much for him. What he had heard of their preaching, and now what he experienced, caused him to come as a humble inquirer after salvation. He was convicted of sin and felt the need of a Saviour. Paul clearly pointed out the way to be saved. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." The proof that the jailer was saved is threefold:

1. Transformation From Brutality to Tenderness (v. 33).

He who a little while ago could with impunity lay on the cruel lashes is now disposed to wash and mollify the wounds of the prisoners.

2. Confession of Christ in Baptism (v. 33).

Those who have really been convicted of sin and have experienced the saving grace of God delight to confess their faith in Him under whatever circumstances.

3. He Set Meat Before Them (v. 34).

4. His Whole Household Baptized (v. 33).

III. The Magistrates Humbled (vv. 35-40).

1. Orders to Release the Prisoners (vv. 35-36).

The earthquake brought fear upon the magistrates which moved them to give leave for the prisoners to go.

2. Paul's Refusal to Go (v. 37).

The ground of his refusal was that their rights as Roman citizens had been violated. They demanded public vindication. The magistrates were guilty of serious offense. Paul was willing to suffer for Christ's sake, but he used the occasion to show them that persecuting men who preached the gospel was an offense against the law of God and man.

Finally Got That Longed-For Laugh

"Until recently it had been 15 years since I'd enjoyed a real, hearty laugh, one that made the tears come to my eyes and an actually hurtful pain rack the region of my stomach," declared a salesman in a downtown hotel lobby. "I'd been searching a long time for a joke or an incident funny enough to produce a laugh of that kind, but my quest seemed futile until I sat in a serious card game in the parlor of a friend's home, and my partner, after playing a bid of three no trump and being off four tricks, jumped up and hit his head on the frame of a little window we had opened to let the night air in. Hardly a ludicrous incident, I know, but it tickled my risibilities so healthily that I finally enjoyed one of the laughs I'd been searching for all these years. And I'm now convinced that no adult laughs heartily after a joke or an amusing incident. He laughs at the discomfort or pain of others. Funny folks, are we not?"—Detroit News.

Against Communism

Dr. Lewis H. Haney, head of the business research bureau of New York university, said at a dinner:

"I am against communism and bolshevism. We'll always have successes and failures, as we'll always have good weather and bad weather, sun and rain, light and darkness.

"Why, if you reduced all mankind to one dead level, that level would soon get full of hillocks and hollows.

"In other words, even if you put the rich man under the poor man's feet, the poor man would only just be walking on his uppers."

KIWANIANS AND AGRICULTURE

Chicago, Aug. 10.- Hundreds of Kiwanis clubs in the United States and Canada are again making preliminary arrangements for holding county fairs, shows, dairy and grain exhibits and agricultural institutes during the coming fall months, according to reports being received by Kiwanis International headquarters, Chicago. This is in direct line with the organizations policy of developing closer relations between the farmar and the City man.

Last year the festivals promonted interest in many communities where shows had never been held, giving thousands of farmers a chance to display their products and enter into the contest for prize awards. Dairy and poultry shows led the list of Kiwanis sponsored activities during the past season, but it is known that this year many clubs will make the displays more diversified. With a record corn crop this season many Kiwanis clubs will major in grain exhibits, it is expected.

Hundreds of Boys and Girls clubs, financed by Kiwanis who purchased pure bred stock and poultry, will be valued contestants at many of the county and state fairs through-out the North Amercian continent. Calf, pig, egg, poultry and corn clubs have become very popular among Kiwanis sponsored farm boys and girls interests.

Agricultural implement demonstrations in connection with the farm proposed by many of the clubs in vicinities where new farm machinery equipments being introduced.

the Railroads Face an Enormous Task

Statisticians and well posted traffic authorities, both in and out of the railroad business, have estimated that two million more freight cars will be required in 1925 than in 1924.

This estimate is supported by the fact that during the first eighteen weeks of the current year, nearly half a million more cars were used than during the same period last year.

Fall stocks of merchandise and bumper crops must be transported. The railroads have the biggest task on their hands that they have ever had to accomplish. You can help by ordering shipments out now, before the October and November rush comes on.

The Louisville & Nashville Railroad has added to its equipment 2,000 freight cars and 25 engines since the first of the year, representing an investment of $4,700,000. This railroad is trying to do its part.

FEDERAL RESERVE HELPS FARMERS

How Its Aid to England's Return to a Gold Standard Benefits American Agriculture.

By M. A. TRAYLOR
Second Vice President American Bankers Association.

There has been no more important event for the American farmer and stock man since the Armistice than the recent return of Great Britain to a gold standard. It seems a long distance from the Montana farm to the gold vaults of the Bank of England, but the price the farmer gets for his wheat and cattle depends not a little on that gold

M. A. Traylor

The farmer sells his wheat to the elevator man and yet the real buyer, in many cases, is an Englishman, a Frenchman, a German, or an Italian. About one-third of the wheat crop is usually sold abroad and this part is a large factor in fixing the price of the entire crop. Between the farmer and the foreign buyer there are many steps. In recent years the most important step has been that at which the foreign buyer has to pay the American exporter, for the International mechanism of payment has been badly out of order because Europe was off the gold standard. It was just as though an English buyer drove up to your farm house, bargained for your wheat and drew up the contract. But when you discussed payment, he said: "I'm sorry I haven't any good United States money to pay you with; I'll have to pay you in my English paper money, which isn't worth its face value in gold I don't know what it may be worth next week, but that is your risk."

A Deadly Foe of Trade

How many would be willing to sign contracts on this basis? Yet that is the way most of the world's trade has had to be carried on since the Armistice. In practically all countries except the United States the currencies have had no fixed value in gold, but have changed in value from day to day. Whenever one country sold anything to another country, somebody had to take the risk of loss because the value of the money might change before payment was made. Such uncertainty of payment is a deadly foe of trade, and people were afraid to do any larger international business than they had to.

Exports of food stuffs from the United States fell from two and a half billion dollars in 1919 to eight hundred millions in 1923, and the difficulties of European buyers in making satisfactory payment for American farm products was one of the large factors in the drop in the prices of farm products. But now the recent action of Great Britain in declaring that it will again redeem its paper money in gold means that British buyers of American products can pay for them with money which is accepted the world over at its face value in gold. With the return of Great Britain to the gold standard, a majority of the countries of Europe have paper currencies equal to gold.

How Reserve Banks Helped

American bankers have assisted in the British return to the gold standard by giving a $100,000,000 credit to the British government. But more important than this was the action of the Federal Reserve Banks in granting the Bank of England material co-operation They placed $200,000,000 gold at the disposal of the Bank of England for two years, to be used by it, if necessary, in maintaining the gold standard. The readiness of the Reserve Banks thus to co-operate was an important influence in the willingness of the British to take this all important step.

This action of the Reserve Banks was a most constructive step in aid of American farmers and producers who will benefit greatly by the removal of this element of uncertainty from their export transactions. If all the sins of omission and commission charged against the Federal Reserve System by banker, business man, live stock man or political blatherskite in the last five years were true, and practically none of them are, the service rendered commerce and industry by the System in connection with the restoration of the gold standard in so large a part of the world would far outweigh any mistakes that those in charge of the System may have made. No banker, business man or farmer should permit any self serving declaration by favor seeking demagogue to deprive him from a determination to see that the System is maintained for the future welfare of the country.

Fundamentally conditions are very sound and we are doing a very large volume of business, no little part of which is due to the equalizing and stabilizing effect exercised by the Federal Reserve System on the credits of the country. Throughout all the stress of the last five years there have been no times of either stringency or plethora of bank credit. Rates have run along on a rather level keel and in my judgment have had much to do with the stable volume of business which we have enjoyed, and which is quite contrary to the old experience of the aftermath of panics. With a credit structure such as only the Federal Reserve System can guarantee, I feel we need have no apprehension but on the contrary sound

A Mother's Duty

A mother that fails to use her time and thought for the very best interest of her children is not worthy of being a mother.

Ask your husband, the man that you have selected for the father of your children: what provision he has made for their welfare in event of his unexpected death.

You owe to yourself and to your children, "Especially to your children" the duty of exerting every precaution against being left without sufficient living and educational funds.

There are a few husbands and fathers who are too selfish to make this provision. See if you have selected one of this type for the father of your children.

THE ONE-MILL TAX

The election to be held early in September to decide whether Chilton county shall retain the one-mill school tax which has ben in effect for number of years, or whether the schools will be deprived of this amount, is being discussed rather freely among the citizens.

In voting on a subject of this kind there is more to be considered than just voting for one man against another, or for one party against the other. When you cast your vote in this election you cast a vote either for or against those who cannot help themselves. An excuse for a vote against the tax on the ground that it is not spent wisely is without effect. Elect men capable of handling it.

A vote for it on a party line is a very poorly cast ballot. It makes no difference whether it is espoused by more democrats than republicans, or vice versa is not justified.

The children of the county either need the tax or they don't need it. If they need it it is your duty to give it to them. If they don't need it, vote it down. Having only been in the county this year we don't feel like going out and trying to persuade the voters to our way of thinking. We believe you are capable of deciding the right side of this question. Some men don't think for themselves as much as they ought. Some get enthused over assertions about certain things that are untrue and are made only to confuse the man who is trying to figure out the right and is in doubt. That is where the crafty politican comes in.

Personally, we are strongly for this tax, as the best means so far advanced to keep the schools up to the standards already reached, and to keep advancing to a higher level. Now then these funds may not be applied as well in some counties as in others, and we don't want anyone to infer from this article that these funds have not reached as far in this county as they have in others. In fact, as far as we are advised, they have been as well handled as in the other counties.

What we need is a cooperation between all the citizens to get the best out of these questions, and we would like to se a series of meetings to discuss this particular question in the several sections of the county so all may vote intelligently. Many good questions are lost from a lack of information.

Give the people the information necessary as to what is needed, then if a majority don't want it, we are a democrat, and want the majority to rule.

But, let no one vote against the question because it is a tax. We are all disgusted with taxing in general, but let's not let the good suffer for the bad. Pick out the good, and eliminate the other.

CLANTON COTTON MARKET

Mr. G. T. Wilbanks, a good farmer of this county, raises the question as to whether ginning fees of Clanton are in line with what they should be. Also that the price of cotton in Clanton is lower than in other places.

We are not informed as to the truth of either question, and only hope that Mr. Wilbanks has been misinformed on both questions.

We would like to see the farmers of Chilton county get the very highest price for their cotton, and that is too little, but sometimes we hear from some other town and the differences in price is for a different grade.

We hope this is an error, and if not the discrepancy should be remedied.

A good brother came in this week and paid us the first dollar out of the new cotton crop. Thank you brother.

Chilton county gins are breaking all records for the amount of cotton ginned this early in the season.

You can call them hill-billies if you want to, but when they gather their crops in the fall, they are the salt of the earth.

Clanton will have the prettiest business section of any town in the state when the present paving program is finished. Now for a few small industries and the town will be ideal.

Those who think they can ride into office in Alabama on the road bond issue, either for or against, are doing nothing more than offering insult to the intelligence of the people. Let the good roads issue alone, and run on your merits, Mr. Candidate.

A LETTER FOR RENTERS

Mr. Editor:

I saw a letter last week from a man who said, "I am a renter, myself," and he urges "every renter" to come out on September 15 and vote against the proposed school tax.

It is by all means the thing for every renter to do if he wants his childern to be renters all their lives.

We hold that in the old slave days, the slaves prayed for the day when their children might be free. But in these modern days, many of those who are "chained to the land" will fight the hardest against those who would release their childern from these same chains.

If Chilton County could compel every white child, whose health of mind and body allowed it to attend a good school nine months in the year for the ten years from 7 to 17 Chilton would be 25 years hence the wealthest rural county in the state unless other counties did the same thing and the childern of the "renters" would reap the largest benefits from the improvements.

ADVERTIISE ALABAMA TO OUTSIDE WORLD

LEGISLATIVE HALL
State Capitol
September 3rd., 1925

Believeing in Alabama, its great resources and its future possibilities from an agricultural, commercial, industrial and maritime point of view, and believing that the opportune time for boosting and advertising our State to the Nation is now.

And realizing that in order to do this in a business-like and successful way, that it will be necessary to have a state-wide organization, we therefore call a convention of representative citizens from each county in state, to meet in Montgomery, Alabama at the Legislative Hall, at the State capitol on the 3rd day of September 1925, for the purpose of organizing and perfecting such plans for the above said purpose, as follows:

1. That each Newspaper in the state be represented.
2. That each Probate Judge act as chairman of his county, appoint his committee and come with them.
3. That every chamber of commerce, commercial, civic or social club send delegations.
4. That every minister of the Gospel, pastor of churches, judges of courts, teachers and all other citizens are called upon to give publicity to this movement.
5. That the commercial organizations of Mobile, Birmingham and Montgomery are especially requested to be active in this movement.
6. That the ladies be requested to send representatives from all clubs and other auxiliaries.

LAMAR JEFFERS VISITS CHILTON

Mr. Lamar Jeffers, congressman for the fourth district of Alabama, was shaking hands with friends in Chilton county one day last week. Mr. Jeffers was transacting business here and mixing with the people of this end of the district.

Lamar, as we have been used to call him, is making one of the best congressmen Alabama has had in the lower house. He is always looking after Alabama's interest and especially the interest of the fourth district. He has recently studied law and was admitted to the bar in Alabama last month.

There may be other men in the fourth district who would like to represent this district, and the desire is a laudable one, but knowing Mr. Jeffers as we do, it is doubtful if the district could find a man better or who would do as well as our present congressman will do. He was inexperienced when he went there, but he didn't sit down and rest on his laurels, but went to work to study the needs of the people and to earn his pay, as it were. That he is succeeding, everyone knows, and he is continually adding to that store of knowledge which will make him more useful.

When a better man offers for the place, we are for him, but at the present time, we don't believe the district has that man.

Southern Baptist Building Larger Seminary

LOUISVILLE, KY.— The Southern Baptist theological seminary located at Louisville, Ky., has entered the state of Alabama with its field force of solicitors to give Alabama Baptists their opportunity to assist in the world famous school's $2, 000, 000. 00 building campaign. The sixty day intensive effort in Alabama has the sanction of the southern Baptist Convention and the Alabama Baptist Convention.

The Seminary at Louisville has become world-famed through its great faculty of Christian scholars who have remained sound and progressive in this age of religious controversy and because it has the largest student body of licensed or ordained ministers in the world. An average annual enrollment of 429 for the past four sessions has been the record established. Thes represented thirty-three states and twenty-seven forgein countries.

This unprecedented number of ministers flocking to the seat of orthodoxy has, however, created a need for a larger seminary plant. Present buildings, the last of which was built thirty-two years ago, have been taxed to capacity. And the encroaching business section of the City has made expansion both impossible and wholly undesirable. New buildings which will be ready for occupancy by January are being erected on an ideal site in eastern suburbs of Louisville.

Baptist leaders have called the Seminary greatest single asset of southern Baptists." It has trained sixty-five per cent of the southwide and state leaders in the denomination work at home and eighty five per cent of all male forgein missionaries. Its alumni number 6,000 and these labor in fields on which the sun never sets.

In Alabama Seminary alumni are in 60 of the 67 countries and in the 60 counties they are in county seats of 46 of them.

The words, spoken in their sweet clear voices, fell nonchalantly from their pretty lips. All very fearless and uninhibited and free. That, they told you, was the main thing. Sometimes Dirk wished they wouldn't work so hard at their play. They were forever getting up pageants and plays and large festivals for charity; Venetian fetes, Oriental bazaars, charity balls. In the programme performance of these many of them sang better, acted better, danced better than most professional performers, but the whole thing always lacked the flavor, somehow, of professional performance. On these affairs they lavished thousands in costumes and decorations, receiving in return other thousands which they soberly turned over to the cause. They found nothing ludicrous in this. Spasmodically they went into business or semi-professional ventures, defying the conventions. Paula did this, too. She or one of her friends were forever opening blouse shops; starting Gifte Shoppes; burgeoning into tea rooms decorated in crude green and vermilion and orange and black; announcing their affiliation with an advertising agency. These adventures blossomed, withered, died. They were the result of post-war restlessness. Many of these girls had worked indefatigably during the 1917-1918 period; had driven service cars, managed ambulances, nursed, scrubbed, conducted canteens. They missed the excitement, the satisfaction of achievement.

They found Dirk fair game, resented Paula's proprietorship. Susans and Janes and Kates and Bettys and Sallys—plain old-fashioned names for modern, erotic misses—they talked to Dirk, danced with him, rode with him, flirted with him. His very unattainableness gave him piquancy. That Paula Storm had him fast. He didn't care a hoot about girls.

"Oh, Mr. DeJong," they said, "your name's Dirk, isn't it? What a slick name! What does it mean?"

"Nothing, I suppose. It's a Dutch name. My people—my father's people—were Dutch, you know."

"A dirk's a sort of sword, isn't it, or poniard? Anyway, it sounds very keen and cruel and fatal—Dirk."

He would flush a little (one of his assets) and smile, and look at them, and say nothing. He found that to be all that was necessary.

He got on enormously.

Between the girls he met in society and the girls that worked in his office there existed a similarity that struck and amused Dirk. He said, "Take a letter, Miss Roach," to a slim young creature as exquisite as the girl with whom he had danced the day before; or ridden or played tennis or bridge. Their very clothes were faultless imitations. They even used the same perfume. He wondered, idly, how they did it. They were eighteen, nineteen, twenty, and their faces and bodies and desires and natural equipment made their presence in a business office a paradox, an absurdity. Yet they were capable, too, in a mechanical sort of way. Theirs were mechanical jobs. They were lovely creatures with the minds of fourteen-year-old children. Their hair was shining, perfectly undulated, as fine and glossy and tenderly curling as a young child's. Their breasts were flat, their figures singularly sexless like that of a very young boy. They were wise with the wisdom of the serpent. Their legs were slim and sturdy. Their mouths were pouting, soft, pink, the lower lip a little curled back, petal-wise, like the moist mouth of a baby that has just finished nursing. Their eyes were wide apart, empty, knowledgeless. They managed their private affairs like generals. They were cool, remote, disdainful. They reduced their boys to desperation. They were brigands, desperadoes, pirates, taking all, giving little. They came, for the most part, from sordid homes, yet they knew, in some miraculous way, all the mechanics that Paula, knew and practiced. They were corsetless, pliant, bewildering, lovely, dangerous.

Among them Dirk worked immune, aloof, untouched. He would have been surprised to learn that he was known among them as Frosty. They admired and resented him. Not one that did not sometime of the day when he would call her into his office, shut the door, and say, "Loretta" (their names were burbankian monstrosities, born of grafting the original appellation onto their own idea of beauty in nomenclature — hence Loretta, Imogene, Nadine, Natalie, Ardelia), "Loretta, I have watched you for a long, long time and you must have noticed how deeply I admire you."

It wasn't impossible. Those things happen. The movies had taught them that. Dirk, all unconscious of their pitiless all-absorbing scrutiny, would have been still further appalled to learn how fully aware they were of his personal and private affairs. They knew about Paula, for example. They admired and resented her, too. They despised her for the way in which she openly displayed her feeling for him (how they knew this was a miracle and a mystery, for she almost never came into the office and disguised all her telephone talks with him). They thought he was grand to his mother. Selina had been in his office twice, perhaps. On one of these occasions she had spent five minutes chatting sociably with Ethelinda Quinn, who had the face of a Da Vinci cherub and the soul of a man-eating shark.

Selina always talked to everyone. She enjoyed listening to street car conductors, washwomen, janitors, landladies, clerks, doormen, chauffeurs, policemen. Something about her made them talk. They opened to her as flowers to the sun. They sensed her interest, her liking. As they talked Selina would exclaim, "You don't say! Well, that terrible!" Her eyes would be bright with sympathy.

Selina had said, on entering Dirk's office, "My land! I don't see how you can work among those pretty creatures and not be a sultan. I'm going to ask some of them down to the farm over Sunday."

"Don't, Mother! They wouldn't understand. I scarcely see them. They're just part of the office equipment."

Afterward, Ethelinda Quinn had passed expert opinion. "Say, she's got ten times the guts that Frosty's got. I like her fine. Did you see her terrible hat! But say, it didn't look funny on her, did it? Anybody else in that getup would look comical, but she's the kind that could walk off with anything. I don't know. She's got what I call an air It beats style. Nice, too. She said I was a pretty little thing. Can you beat it? At that she's right. I certainly yam."

All unconscious, "Take a letter, Miss Quinn," said Dirk half an hour later.

In the midst of this fiery furnace of femininity Dirk walked unscorched. Paula, the North shore girls, well-bred and professional business women he occasionally met in the course of business, the enticing little nymphs he encountered in his own office, all practiced on him their warm and perfumed wiles. He moved among them cool and serene. Perhaps his sudden success had had something to do with this; and his quiet ambition for further success. For he really was accounted successful now, even in the spectacular whirl of Chicago's meteoric financial constellation. North-side mammas regarded his income, his career, and his future with eyes of respect and wily speculation. There was always a neat little pile of invitations in the mail that lay on the correct little console in the correct little apartment ministered by the correct little Jap on the correct North-side street near (but not too near) the lake, and overlooking it.

The apartment had been furnished with Paula's aid. Together she and Dirk had gone to interior decorators. "But you've got to use your own taste," Paula had said, "to give it the individual touch." The apartment was furnished in a good deal of Italian furniture, the finish a dark oak or walnut, the whole massive and yet somehow unconvincing. The effect was somber without being impressive. There were long carved tables on which an ash tray seemed a desecration; great chairs roomy enough for lolling, yet in which you did not relax; dull silver candlesticks; vestments; Dante's saturnine features sneering down upon you from a correct cabinet. There were not many books. Tiny foyer, large living-room, bedroom, dining-room, kitchen, and a cubby-hole for the Jap.

Dirk did not spend much of his time in the place. His upward climb was a treadmill, really. His office, the apartment, a dinner, a dance. His contacts were monotonous, and too few.

His office was a great splendid office in a great splendid office building in LaSalle street. He drove back and forth in a motor car along the boulevards. His social engagements lay north. LaSalle street bounded him on the west, Lake Michigan on the east, Jackson boulevard on the south, Lake Forest on the north. He might have lived a thousand miles away for all he knew of the rest of Chicago—the mighty, roaring, sweltering, pushing, screaming, magnificent hideous steel giant that was Chicago.

Selina had had no hand in the furnishing of his apartment. When it was finished Dirk had brought her in triumph to see it. "Well," he had said, "what do you think of it, Mother?"

She had stood in the center of the room, a small plain figure in the midst of these massive somber carved tables, chairs, chests. A little smile had quirked the corner of her mouth. "I think it's as cosy as a cathedral."

Sometimes Selina remonstrated with him, though of late she had taken on a strange reticence. She no longer asked him about the furnishings of the houses he visited, or the exotic food he ate at splendid dinners. The farm flourished. The great steel mills and factories to the south were closing in upon her but had not yet set iron foot on her rich green acres. She was rather famous now for the quality of her farm products and her pens. You saw "DeJong asparagus" on the menu at the Blackstone and the Drake hotels. Sometimes Dirk's friends twitted him about this and he did not always acknowledge that the similarity of names was not a coincidence.

"Dirk, you seem to see no one but just these people," Selina told him in one of her infrequent rebukes. "You don't get the full flavor of life. You've got to have a vulgar curiosity about people and things All kinds of people. All kinds of things. You revolve in the same little circle, over and over and over."

"Haven't time. Can't afford to take the time.

"You can't afford not to."

Sometimes Selina came into town for a week or ten days at a stretch, and indulged in what she called an orgy. At such times Julie Arnold would invite her to occupy one of the guest rooms at the Arnold house, or Dirk would offer her his bedroom and tell her that he would be comfortable on the big couch in the living room, or that he would take a room at the University club. She always declined. She would take a room in a hotel, sometimes north, sometimes south. Her holiday before her, she would go off roaming gaily as a small boy on a Saturday morning, with the day stretching gorgeously and adventuresomely ahead of him, sallies down the street without plan or appointment, knowing that richness in one form or another lies before him for the choosing. A sociable woman, Selina, savoring life, she liked the lights, the color, the rush, the noise. Her years of grinding work, with her face pressed down to the very soil itself, had failed to kill her zest for living. She prowled into the city's foreign quarters—Italian, Greek, Chinese, Jewish.

She loved the Michigan boulevard and State street shop windows in which haughty waxed ladies in glittering evening gowns postured, fingers elegantly crooked as they held a fan, a rose, a program, meanwhile sniffing their delicate scent upon an envious world fan-cooling its nose against the plate glass barrier.

She penetrated the Black belt, where Chicago's vast and growing negro population shifted and moved and stretched its great limbs ominously, reaching out and out in protest and overflowing the bounds that irked it. Her serene face and her quiet manner her bland interest and friendly look protected her. They thought her a social worker, perhaps; one of the uplifters. She bought and read the Independent, the negro newspaper in which herb doctors advertised magic roots. She even sent the twenty-five cents required for a box of these, charmed by their names—Adam and Eve roots, Master of the Woods, Dragon's Blood, High John the Conqueror, Jezebel Roots, Grains of Paradise.

"Look here, Mother," Dirk would protest, "you can't wander around like that. It isn't safe. This isn't High Prairie, you know. If you want to go round I'll get Sakl to drive you."

"That would be nice," she said, mildly. But she never availed herself of this offer.

She would go over to South Water street, changed now, and swollen to such proportions that it threatened to burst its confines. She liked to stroll along the crowded sidewalks, lined with crates and boxes and barrels of fruits, vegetables, poultry. Swarthy foreign faces predominated now. Where the red-faced overalled men had been she now saw lean muscular lads in old army shirts and khaki pants and scuffed puttees wheeling trucks, loading boxes, charging down the street in huge rumbling auto vans. Their faces were hard, their talk terse. Any one of these, she reflected, was more vital, more native, functioned more usefully and honestly than her successful son, Dirk DeJong.

"Where 'r' beans?"

"In th' o' beanery."

"Tough."

"Best you can get."

"Keep 'em."

Many of the older men knew her, shook hands with her, chatted a moment friendlily. William Talcott, a little more dried up, more wrinkled, his sparse hair quite gray now, still leaned up against the side of his doorway in his shirt sleeves and his neat pepper-and-salt pants and vest, cigar, unlighted, in his mouth, the heavy gold watch chain spanning his middle.

"Well, you certainly made good, Mrs. DeJong. Remember the day you came here with your first load?"

Oh, yes. She remembered.

"That boy of yours has made his mark, too, I see. Doing grand, ain't he? Wa-al, great satisfaction having a son turn out well like that. Yes, sirree! Why, look at my darter Car'line—"

Life at High Prairie had its savor, too. Frequently you saw strange visitors there for a week or ten days at a time—boys and girls whose city pallor gave way to a rich tan; tired-looking women with sagging figures who drank Selina's cream and ate her abundant vegetables and tender chickens as though they expected these viands to be momentarily snatched from them. Selina picked these up in odd corners of the city. Dirk protested against this, too. Selina was a member of the High Prairie school board now. She was on the Good Roads committee and the Truck Farmers' association valued her opinion. Her life was full, pleasant, prolific.

Chapter XIV

Paula had a scheme for interesting women in bond buying. It was a good scheme. She suggested it so that Dirk thought he had thought of it. Dirk was head now of the bond department in the Great Lakes Trust company's magnificent new white building on Michigan boulevard north.

Its white towers gleamed pink in the lake mists. Dirk said it was a terrible building, badly proportioned, and that it looked like a vast vanilla sundae. His new private domain was more like a splendid bookless library than a business office. It was finished in rich dull walnut and there were great upholstered chairs, soft rugs, shaded lights. Special attention was paid to women clients. There was a room for their convenience fitted with low restful chairs and couches, lamps, writing desks, in mauve and rose. Paula had selected the furnishings for this room. Ten years earlier it would have been considered absurd in a suite of business offices. Now it was a routine part of the equipment

Dirk's private office was almost as difficult of access as that of the nation's executive. Cards, telephones, office boys, secretaries stood between the caller and Dirk DeJong, head of the bond department. You asked for him, uttering his name in the ear of the six-foot statuesque detective who, in the guise of usher, stood in the center of the marble rotunda eyeing each visitor with a coldly appraising gaze. This one padded softly ahead of you on rubber heels, only to give you over to the care of a glorified office boy who took your name You waited. He returned. You waited. Presently there appeared a young woman with inquiring eyebrows. She conversed with you. She vanished. You waited. She reappeared. You were ushered into Dirk DeJong's large and luxurious inner office. And there formality fled.

Dirk was glad to see you; quietly, interestedly glad to see you. As you stated your business he listened attentively, as was his charming way. The volume of business done with women clients by the Great Lakes Trust company was enormous. Dirk was conservative, helpful—and he always got the business. He talked little. He was amazingly effective.

Ladies in the modish black of recent bereavement made quite a somber procession to his door. His suggestions (often originating with Paula) made the Great Lakes Trust company's discreet advertising rich in results. Neat little pamphlets written for women on the subject of saving, investments. "You are not dealing with a soulless corporation," said these brochures. "May we serve you? You need more than friends. Before acting, you should have your judgment vindicated by an organization of investment specialists. You may have relatives and friends, some of whom would gladly advise you on investments. But perhaps you rightly feel that the less they know about your financial affairs, the better. To handle trusts, and to care for the securities of widows and orphans, is our business."

It was startling to note how this sort of thing mounted into millions.

"Women are becoming more and more used to the handling of money," Paula said, shrewdly. "Pretty soon their patronage is going to be as valuable as that of men. The average woman doesn't know about bonds—about bond buying. They think they're something mysterious and risky. They ought to be educated up to it. Didn't you say something, Dirk, about chances in finance for women?"

"But would the women come?"

"Of course they'd come. Women will accept any invitation that's engraved on heavy cream paper."

The Great Lakes Trust had a branch in Cleveland now, and one in New York, on Fifth avenue. The drive to interest women in bond buying and to instruct them in finance was to take on almost national proportions. There was to be newspaper and magazine advertising.

When Pedagogues Kicked

Scotland's army of schoolmasters in the year 1782 sent a memorial to parliament pointing out that while their average income was £13 a year that of a plowman was £14 to £16. No relief was granted until 1802, when the Schoolmaster's Act was passed, and their income was legally fixed at "not under 300 merks (£16 13s. 4d) nor over 400 merks (£22 4s. 6d)." The heritors had also to provide a house, "which need not contain more than two rooms, including the kitchen, and with ground for a garden or not more than a quarter of a Scots acre, or two bolls of meal as its equivalent." They were highly indignant at being obliged to "erect palaces for dominies," but legal compulsion could no longer be ignored. Thereafter, conditions were at least good enough to prevent school masters from resigning their office to become beadles—as had actually happened during the darkest days!

THE ONE PHOBIA

By HARRIS M. LYON

(©, by Short Story Pub. Co.)

HE WENT to bed that night in a preoccupied fashion, thinking of a conversation he had had at the club with a well-known expert in nervous diseases. Of all the thousand phobias to which the brain is heir, his mind dwelt upon but one, and dwelt upon that one insistently—hypsophobia; and the reason for this was that it was his one greatest fear, this dread of high places, this fear of looking down from a lofty height.

Tonight he had discussed it to the physician's idle, yet interesting, chat without revealing this weakness of his own, and had followed with caught breath the detailing of symptom after symptom identical with those which he himself experienced. With these things in his mind he went to bed.

* * * * * * *

When he awoke it was broad day and the sky was overcast with a garish green light such as the light which precedes a storm or a hurricane. He himself felt decidedly nervous and queer, as if laboring under a strange tension, but this he attributed to the atmospheric conditions about him; possibly, also the overstrain of which he frequently complained had something to do with this present light-headedness. He remembered having drunk a large pot of coffee the night before; the caffeine would be sure to affect him thus. And yet—was his condition really due to these causes?

What had he dreamed? He struggled to get his wits together and consider the events of the past night. He found himself bathing his eyes in cold water in order to shock himself into clear headedness; he pulled the stopper out of a camphor bottle, and let the penetrating odor bite its way into his befuddled brain; he remembered that he was mechanically dressing himself; he had the sensation of going through movement after movement of this sort, all the while vainly groping in his memory.

Of a sudden he stopped. "Great God," he said to himself, "I know now what it was!" He had dreamed, amid some awful, horrid setting, that he saw his body, his dead body, somewhere. It lay face downward, with the arms spread out. Yes, he recalled these items in the dream now, perfectly, clearly. The rest was laborious work. What else had happened? Was there any other sensation? With the feeling of a feverish child, he realized that he could not think. All he knew was that he had dreamed he was dead; and that the nightmare pursued him even now, into the sickly light of a new day. He shuddered with uneasiness and looked about him apprehensively. The carpet, the chairs, the books—everything seemed strange; there was a wan, colorless, impalpable quality to each bit of familiar furniture, no doubt due to the pale light of the heavens. The hushed closeness of the place was sickening to his overwrought nerves. He felt that he must get out of there before he shrieked aloud. He could not bear the image of that dream-corpse before his mind's eye, ghastly, motionless, in sharp relief.

Moreover, there was a steady, insistent, weirdly unpleasant attraction at work upon him, something impelling him to leave, drawing him as if by unseen threads, the rest of his strength down on to the street. Whither was it calling him? He felt it, but could not guess it meaning. He glided to the window and drew up the blind. He had never seen such a sky. It was flat, oppressive, and pale green in color, the color of sea water when a diver opens his eyes a fathom beneath the waves. There was no sun, no clouds. He glanced at his watch, but his troubled eyes could not distinguish whether it was eight o'clock or twenty minutes to twelve. More than likely, he concluded, it was twenty minutes to twelve. In that case he had slept exactly eight hours.

He marveled at the untrustworthiness of his eyes; a slight fog seemed to roll and tumble across the scope of his vision, and he mentally noted that he must have the orbs examined and adopt spectacles hereafter—a thing he had been intending to do ever since he first felt the strain upon them.

All the time, as he stood revolving these matters, he felt the vague impulse at work in him, the impulse which he could not fathom; it seemed like a gnawing at his brain.

With a gesture of impotent disgust at his own weakness this morning he turned his gaze again out the open window. Slowly he took in the old, familiar landmarks, the news stand on the corner, the grocery opposite, the gaudy cigar sign half a block down the street, the barber shop—and then! His brain swam giddily!

A stone's throw from where he stood, looming gray and soft against the background of the monotonous sky, and seeming higher than the skies themselves, he espied a lofty office building in the course of erection. Steel girders protruded two hundred feet or more into the air; three of the stone sides had already been set into place; on the fourth side a spider's web of scaffolding covered the entire wall, and at the highest point on this scaffold-work he saw a solid wooden platform such as workmen use as a support. It must be twelve feet square, yet from where he stood it seemed no larger than the top of his center table. What it was that seized him and hurried him on he could never have told; a mad notion, perhaps, that he would satisfy this insistent craving, that he would quiet this nervous unrest, much as a wrecked drunkard seizes drink, as an opium fiend eats additional quantities of the drug. He snatched up his hat, burst out of the door, and ran.

Events thereafter raced past his mental vision with the swiftness of a cinematograph, quivering, fluttering, coming rapidly out of obscurity into the glare of his illuminating brain-heat. He seemed to move viciously in quick jerks, down the stairs, out onto the stale streets, past unheeding groups of people who stared at him like ghosts, into the building—had a delirium stolen into his blood this morning?—up ladder after ladder, triumphantly mounting, amazed at his own bravery. Where was his hypsophobia now? What wond he do when he reached the platform? He did not know. He remembered every nail in that last ladder, and yet it seemed to him he had come up it as swiftly as if he had been shot out of a mortar. He looked back. No one was following him. He felt of his heart. It was beating at a fearful rate with hard, dry thumps against his ribs.

In a flash he was out upon the platform, his brow bared to the breeze, exultant, glorious in the high air. How clean it all was up there! He looked over toward his own room and laughed gayly. It seemed to him that he was a bird, soaring and swimming in the ether, rinsed by all the purity of the upper sky, free and joyous, sustained swooping gently in great rings, up up up . . . .

Suddenly he felt a blinding stroke across his eyes, a yawning at the pit of his stomach, something choking him like a ball or an apple lodged in his throat, and he caught himself leaning fascinated at the very edge of the planking. The reason of this was that his hat had fallen from his hand, and in sickening little circles was drifting earthward. His nervous fingers clung to the trembling woodwork, he found himself unaccountably stretching up on tiptoe, he could not catch a breath while the black bit of headgear, with many a coil and spiral, fell itself gently down. He tried to turn his eyes away and could not. The old fear had returned upon him. The blood fleeing from his skin, had left the sweat upon his brow as cold as the sweat upon a corpse. He no longer felt the first exhilaration, the uplift of his senses. A certain convulsive struck into the very marrow of his bones and left him dizzy and shaken before his impending fate.

All was changed. The gusts of wind, instead of bringing a sense of freedom, now roared about his ears so violently that they terrified him; he imagined he saw the scaffolding rock to and fro, and even felt the stone walls sway slightly beneath his hand. A great dread rushed over him that this breeze would blow him off of the platform. He looked rashly down and his eyes were blurred by the sight of a myriad of pigmy objects, human beings crawling about like ants, carriages and wagons appearing as tiny bugs or beetles, streets as ribbons, houses as little cardboard playthings

The rapidity with which his mind worked seemed inconceivable. He paid scarcely any attention to the phenomenon, yet felt indistinctly that his brain was clicking off its pictures more swiftly than a camera's shutter, that each tiny scene was thrown out before him as a film, bitten by the developing fluid, flashes out its negative presentation.

Once more his stomach yawned; then all consciousness seemed to swoon. His thoughts swirled and reeled and swirled in a wild tumult; a maelstrom seemed sucking him in, and he felt seasick; vast noises roared through his head, as if his blood were congested there; red-and-green colors rotated before his eyes; his teeth were clenched together, and his tongue was dry; and always around and around in a tremendous mental whirlpool his thoughts spun and swung, spun and swung like a grotesque, irresponsible crazy pendulum. His vibrating nerves had the sensation of cracked, twanging wires. His throat was completely stopped now by the round ball he had swallowed. Where had he swallowed it? He doubled up with fear, racking each tendon in the utmost tautness And then there was another change.

Far below him the pigmy people started coming up, sailing toward him in a great dream, larger and larger The cabs left off their bug-like semblance and slowly grew into cabs; the ribbons became white streets. Things seemed metamorphosing as through ages of slow evolution. He was watching this with lulled senses when, in a terrible flash, he realized that he was falling!

It was he who was dropping toward the earth, he who had left the platform! His whole sequence of living flashed across his mind like one long dive. Slowly he took in the old, familiar landmarks, the news stand on the corner, the grocery opposite, the gaudy cigar sign half a block down the street, the barber shop—and then! His brain swam giddily!

Suddenly he felt a blinding stroke across his eyes, a yawning at the pit of his stomach, something choking him like a ball or an apple lodged in his throat, and he caught himself leaning fascinated at the very edge of the planking. The reason of this was that his hat had fallen from his hand, and in sickening little circles was drifting earthward. His nervous fingers clung to the trembling woodwork, he found himself unaccountably stretching up on tiptoe, he could not catch a breath while the black bit of headgear, with many a coil and spiral, fell itself gently down. He tried to turn his eyes away and could not. The old fear had returned upon him. The blood fleeing from his skin, had left the sweat upon his brow as cold as the sweat upon a corpse. He no longer felt the first exhilaration, the uplift of his senses. A certain convulsive struck into the very marrow of his bones and left him dizzy and shaken before his impending fate.

All was changed. The gusts of wind, instead of bringing a sense of freedom, now roared about his ears so violently that they terrified him; he imagined he saw the scaffolding rock to and fro, and even felt the stone walls sway slightly beneath his hand. A great dread rushed over him that this breeze would blow him off of the platform. He looked rashly down and his eyes were blurred by the sight of a myriad of pigmy objects, human beings crawling about like ants, carriages and wagons appearing as tiny bugs or beetles, streets as ribbons, houses as little cardboard playthings

The rapidity with which his mind worked seemed inconceivable. He paid scarcely any attention to the phenomenon, yet felt indistinctly that his orain was clicking off its pictures more swiftly than a camera's shutter, that each tiny scene was thrown out before him as a film, bitten by the developing fluid, flashes out its negative presentation.

Once more his stomach yawned; then all consciousness seemed to swoon. His thoughts swirled and reeled and swirled in a wild tumult; a maelstrom seemed sucking him in, and he felt seasick; vast noises roared through his head, as if his blood were congested there; red-and-green colors rotated before his eyes; his teeth were clenched together, and his tongue was dry; and always around and around in a tremendous mental whirlpool his thoughts spun and swung, spun and swung like a grotesque, irresponsible crazy pendulum. His vibrating nerves had the sensation of cracked, twanging wires. His throat was completely stopped now by the round ball he had swallowed. Where had he swallowed it? He doubled up with fear, racking each tendon in the utmost tautness And then there was another change.

Far below him the pigmy people started coming up, sailing toward him in a great dream, larger and larger The cabs left off their bug-like semblance and slowly grew into cabs; the ribbons became white streets. Things seemed metamorphosing as through ages of slow evolution. He was watching this with lulled senses when, in a terrible flash, he realized that he was falling!

It was he who was dropping toward the earth, he who had left the platform! His whole sequence of living flashed across his mind like one long dive. Slowly he took in the old, familiar landmarks, the news stand on the corner, the grocery opposite, the gaudy cigar sign half a block down the street, the barber shop—and then! His brain swam giddily!

A stone's throw from where he stood, looming gray and soft against the background of the monotonous sky, and seeming higher than the skies themselves, he espied a lofty office building in the course of erection. Steel girders protruded two hundred feet or more into the air; three of the stone sides had already been set into place; on the fourth side a spider's web of scaffolding covered the entire wall, and at the highest point on this scaffold-work he saw a solid wooden platform such as workmen use as a support. It must be twelve feet square, yet from where he stood it seemed no larger than the top of his center table. What it was that

FARM PADLOCKED BY FEDERAL JUDGE

KEY TURNED OVER TO PROHIBITION LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICER W. K. McADORY

TENANT IS ALLOWED BOND

Judge Clayton Announces His Intention to Break Up Volstead Act Violations

Montgomery.—A forty acre farm on the Carter Mill road was padlocked by Judge Henry D. Clayton in an order issued. On that farm 770 gallons of liquor was found by raiders of the state law enforcement department August 8.

Anthony Bozeman negro, who had leased the farm from McGehe Brothers, of Montgomery, must climb the fence or obtain permission from Walterter K. McAdory, chief supervisor of the state law enforcement department, when he desires to enter or leave the premises. The padlock was placed on the only gate by the district marshal and on orders of Judge Clayton the key was put in the possession of Chief McAdory.

It is the first case that has come to public attention where an entire farm has been closed because of a violation of the federal prohibition laws. Judge Clayton declared that Bozeman may give a $500 bond as a pledge that he will not permit the use of the premises for further violations of the law and that if such bond is given the padlock may be removed.

In issuing the injunction Judge Clayton made an address from the bench in which he again emphasized that he is determined to break up violation of Volstead act in his territory. He said federal officers should direct their attention to the rum runners and the big violators while state courts should handle the pint and quart violators.

CANNING TIME TABLE IS QUITE USEFUL

Blanching and Processing Fruits and Vegetables.

The following time table shows the blanching time required for the various vegetables and fruits, and also the time for processing in a hot-water bath outfit, and a steam-pressure canner. The periods given in this table are for quart jars. Add 30 minutes for 2-quart jars and deduct 5 minutes for pint jars.

For a few vegetables, such as corn, beans, peas and asparagus, the United States Department of Agriculture recommends that when a hot-water outfit is used in the South, they be processed intermittently, that is, from one to one and a half hours on three successive days.

CORN GIVES MOST CANNING TROUBLE

Speed and Care Demanded in Following Directions.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Corn seems to give the average home canner more trouble than any other product. It is especially important, therefore, that extreme care be used and that directions be carefully followed. Much depends upon the age and condition of the corn. Select fresh, tender, juicy corn which has not reached the starchy stage. A little experience in selecting the ear and the ability to recognize corn that is just between the milky and dough stage are important.

Have the utensils in readiness before starting. The jars (already tested for leaks) and tops should be boiled 15 minutes and then be left in the hot water until ready for use. The rubbers should be placed in a hot soda solution made with one tablespoon soda and one quart of boiling water. If a hot-water bath canner is used (either homemade or commercial), have the water heating in it before starting to cut the corn from the cob. A steam-pressure canner is recommended for use in the canning of corn. If used, the water in it should be started to heating beforehand. A container of boiling water should be in readiness in which to blanch the corn.

Blanch the Corn in Hot Water.

Cut From the Cob.

Remove husks and silk; blanch (boil) corn for one to five minutes on the cob. Dip for an instant in cold water. After cold dip, cut immediately off cob with a sharp, thin-bladed knife.

Speed is requisite in successful canning of corn. The best results can be obtained when one person cuts the corn from the cob and another fills the containers. Pack the corn to within one inch of the top. Add one level teaspoon of salt and one-half teaspoon of sugar to each quart. Fill the jars with boiling water. Put rubbers and tops into position on the jars. When using jars with glass tops which have wire bails the top bail only should be put in place.

Place the filled jars on false bottom of wood in the water-bath container or into the steam-pressure canner. With the hot-water bath canner have the water above the tops of the cans.

When one period of processing is used, boil steadily for 180 minutes.

Pack Corn in Jars.

starting to count time after the water is boiling vigorously. If the intermittent processing is used, boil 1½ hours the first day and 1 hour on the two succeeding days, allowing only 12 to 18 hours between the first and second processing periods. Tighten the jar tops after each boiling and loosen just before the successive boiling.

Only one period of processing is necessary with the steam-pressure cooker. When one is used, process corn 50 minutes under 15 pounds pressure at a temperature of 250° F.

When jars are removed from the canner, tighten tops immediately. Coo in a place away from drafts, test the seal, and store in a cool, dark, dry place.

Wrap and Store in Cool, Dark Place.

Custard Desserts

"Floating island" is a custard dessert with the stiffly beaten, sweetened whites served on tops of the custard, after having been cooked a moment in the hot milk before the yolks and sugar were added.

An English dessert called "trifle" consists of pieces of almond-studded sponge cake, soaked in flavored cooked soft custard, and topped off with bits of tart jelly and spoonfuls of whipped cream.

For cornstarch blancmange, vanilla or chocolate gelatine, fruit gelatine, souffles and steamed puddings, custard sauce will be acceptable if cream cannot be spared.

Some Canning Essentials

Clean, fresh fruit and vegetables.

Containers which can be made air-tight.

Rubber rings possessing life and elasticity.

Care and cleanliness from start to finish.

Heat for a sufficient time to insure preservation.

Air-tight sealing at end of "processing."

Cool, dark, dry storage.

Shortage of Power Still Very Acute in the South

Montgomery, Aug. 26.—Several southern cities are threatened with a shortage of electric power on account of an insufficient head of water back of the dams, says the Alabama commission of Forestry. This is due partly to deficient rainfall in recent months, but more especially to the fact that the rain that has fallen was retained in the soil whence it could seep into the streams and keep the reservoirs filled.

When rain falls upon the earth it may either soak in or quickly run off. If the surface upon which it falls is loose, spongy and porous it will absorb tremendous quantities of water. A surface of this nature keeps the mineral soil underneath from becoming hard and enable the latter also to retain the water, yielding it at a comparatively slow and steady rate into the streams. Such a surface is furnished nature through leaf mold and the decay of forest litter. In general this part of the soil is called the humus layer.

If the humus layer is not allowed to accumulate or is burned off by forest fires, the exposed soil becomes baked and hardened, thus permitting the water to run off quickly causing floods of greater or less severity. Even when a part of the water succeeds in penetrating the soil it is quickly evaporated by the sun and wind in the absence of a protective mulch.

For the forest fires that swept the south last year we are still paying the penalty. Over millions of acres of land, much of which was at the headwaters of our streams, the humus layer was completely destroyed. It will take several years for this again to accumulate. Meanwhile, with a spring and summer drought following that of last fall, the earth has been so throughly drained of its moisture that, unless the situation is saved by the general rains, may dwindle to a point where its service to the public will be greatly curtailed.

UNNECESSARY EXPENSES CUT ROAD MILEAGE

Our annual road bill is approaching the billion-dollar mark. The cost of state highways, not to mention county roads runs up to astonishing totals—millions and millions of dollars per mile.

With thousands of road to be paved in practically every state, and available fund, for only some hundreds of miles, it is essential that the officials charged with the expenditures of the taxpayers dollar should very diligently study types of pavement which will give the maximum wear and mileage at a minimum of expense for first cost and maintenance.

The California Oil World criticize the highway program in California which it claims calls for an unnecessary expenditure of $10,000 a mile for highway repair work where cement concret is used for surfacing when more satisfactory results can be secured with asphaltic concrete at a great saving.

It is necessary to lay a heavier course of cement concrete over a broken or shattered piece of road than would be required with asphaltic concrete because cement does not have the elastic qualities of the asphalt to bind the broken and loose particles of the road base into a shock absorbing resilient mass.

Every dollar unnecessarily expended for new pavement or maintenance means that road which could other wise be hard-surface must go unpaved

State Highway Is Being Paved in Clanton This Week

The paving on the Birmingham-Montgomery highway has reached to the top of the hill just beyond Maddox gin on Seventh street, and then started again at the postoffice and will join the paving in South Clanton by Saturday night.

Four blocks were jumped through the heart of town on account of the work of sewerage and water pipes not being completed.

The city paving job has been about two-thirds finished. All of Sixth from the court house to Polk Bros. garage has been completed and opened to traffic. The block on Second avenue from court house to Upchurch's has been completed and the north side of Second avenue from Elmore's corner to the New Wilson hotel has been finished and First avenue from Sixth to Seventh will be finished this week.

This will leave only the two block from Upchurch's to the New Wilson hotel on the south side, and part of the paving on Seventh street unfinished.

With this work completel all Clanton needs to make it a fine little city is for the business men to locate some industries here. This would not be hard to do with a little effort.

DIFFERENT RATE ON AUTO INSURANCE

In a recent article on automobile public liability insurance, H. P. Stellwagen, Manager of the Automobile Department of the National Bureau of Casualty and Surety Underwriters went into details of rate making. He explained the reason for variation in rates in different localities.

He showed that for every 100 cars insured, there were 19.4 public liability accidents in New York City; 11.2 in Buffalo; 7 to 11 in Syracuse, Rochester, Albany, and Troy; 6.5 in Chicago; 6 in Cleveland and 3.7 in Detroit. So it goes over the coutry. Where the most accidents occur naturally the rates have to be the highest. The same is true in cities which show the greatest fire loss. Insurance rates must be higher thap in Cities with a small loss record.

There is a oint of much public interest in these figures in connection with the agitation for compulsory automobile liability insurance and the further proposition to put the state into the business. Naturally this would take insurance into the field of politics. At the present time the city man pays the highest rate for automobile insurance while the rural resident pays less because the risk is less.

With political control of automobile liability insurance, there would be great temptation to offer rate concessions to the thickly populated City vote centers where liability insurance cost is highest. There would be one inevitable result, state insurance funds to become weakened, or would have to be strengthened by charging hicher rates in the new $85,000 annex to Alabama Military Institute.

Huntsville — New knitted goods factory begins operation.

HENRY C. WEST WILL RUN FOR SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. Henry C. West of Birmingham will again be a candidate for secretary of state in the campaign next year, according to information received in Clanton this week.

Mr. West was a candidate last election, and was the runner-up to Walter Miller of Tuscumbia, and Sidney Blair the successful candidate. Mr. West has numerous friends over the state and will no doubt make a formidable race. The prospects are for five or six in this contest.

section where risk was less

Past experience in state experiments in different lines of business does not lead one to believe that as big a proposition as automobile liability insurance would be kept free from politics and on a strictly business basis if turned over to political control.

Definite steps have been taken by the Radio Corporation of American in its program of standardizing Radiotron bases, resulting in the final adoption of one standard "push" type base for all Radiotrons for receiving purposes.

The RCA denied reports which have been in circulation to the effect that Radiotrons equipped with the new "UX" standardized base would provide a performance superior to the tubes which are at present equipped with the "UV" standardized base would provide a performance superior to the tubs which at present equipped with the "UV" base.

Thepractical significance of the standardization of tube bases by the RCA will be reflected in the form of simlified merchandising problems affecting the entire distribution organization from manufacturer to consumer. Aside from this advantage, the selection of the "push" type base as a standard is favored because of its [illegible] and electrical superiority over other types.

Now of the [illegible] Radiotrons supersede existing types. They were designed for the special purpose of giving greater audio outputs from existing sets.

THE JOKE ON US?

J. B. Atkinson says there is no other like the editor of the Chilton County News. He ought to know, he came from Coosa county. Anyway, our good friend and fellow-townsman, Frank Foshee, no doubt has the same opinion now. Anyway, good manners are very desirable, but you are likely to get picked up anyway.

The joke on friend Foshee came about this way. All during summer we have been fussing at him for not bringing in vegetables and selling them to lazy folk in town. He finally agreed and sold us quite a few roasting ears, some beans, etc., and gave us some hot pepper to eat with them.

Last Saturday he asked us if we couldn't go out to the farm with him and get some corn for Sunday dinner.

No hesitation was necessary, we never [illegible] we informed him we would gladly go, and went. After gathering some okra, we retired, or rather repaired, to the corn patch, where the editor proceded to invest himself with the luscious ears of corn. After gathering about a dozen I suggested that I would get about 18, and proceeded to the task. After arriving home and getting the corn out of the car we proceeded to offer pay. He told us the treat was all on him. Well, things would not have looked so bad if we had only gotten 8 or ten or twelve but, oh well, it couldn't be hoped, anyway, and here's luck to him—the corn was enjoyed. The editor was like the young fellow when he was visiting When the lady serving the table insisted on his taking some hash, repiled that he never ate hash away from home. Asked why, he informed her that it was because he didn't know what was in it. The lady was offended and informed her guest that what she cooked was absolutely sanitary. He readily saw the break he had made and made it worse by explaining that he didn't eat it at home because he did know.

We thank you, brother.

To the Voters of Chilton County:

I deem it next to useless to even appeal to the intelligent voter and ask that he maintain an educational stand ard he has once established, because we as a people, a nation, a State, a County, believe in growt

Our superintendent estimates the 1 mill tax will produce $13,000. Of this amount, the Alabama Power Co., and other corporations will pay $10,000; in other words, they furnish $31 every time we put up one $1 dollar

There are about five thousand children school age in Chilton County. By simple division you will see there will be little over $2.50 for each child Now if your district has one hundred peoples you will get $250 or enough to lengthen your term one and a half or two months with two teachers. If in your district your property is assessed at $50.000 your district will pay $50 or $1 on each $1,000; 10c on each $100

However, it is a policy, a right we as Americans have always enjoyed to peaceably meet, to express our opinions both publicly and privately. Thus we can always trust the people to fix such conditions as will best serve a free and independent people and safe guard our republic.

An educated populace is an absloute necessity if we expect to hold our place with present day world complications

To educate requires money. The honey bee grows under his wing the wax with which he builds his comb, but our board of education must get from the people money with which to build our schools.

We are all crying for longer terms, more teachers, transportation, better buildings, and more equipment. Of course, we must pay for these things by taxation and private donation

There has been a notice of my district (Enterprise) and but one legal voter opposes renewing the 1-mill tax This same man opposed our new building plan three years ago. Now don't understand me to say he is an undesirable citizen. He is a good man, but was reared when boys had six weeks or three months schooling each year, had one teacher for seventy five or hundred pupils, had split logs with legs driven through auger holes for benches, had an old open fire place for heating I had such grand advantages only, but God being my helper, my boy shall have better opportunities.

It cost me about one hundred dollars each year for the up keep of my old flivver. Am I willing to go back to the old ox wagon that groaning, crying, slowly bore me to church when a child? Nay, double, treble, and quadruple, present cost, but don't force me to return to by gone ways. Thus I am sure enough voters like me are satisfied with our present progress and are willing to trust an honest Board of Education to properly handle our school funds and wish the proposed tax was not a 1-mill but 4

G. C. WELDON.

What Shall the Harvest Be?

"For whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."
Galatians VI 7.

This is an unchanging law, just as unchanging as the law of gravity.

If we sow wheat we reap wheat, if we sow to plant corn, we reap corn. A handful of wheat would not feed a family, but if sown and fertilized would yield a sufficient amount to feed a large family several days.

The above is just as true with money as anything else. We all want to accumulate money and the best way to do it is to plant it by depositing it in a good safe, strong bank, like ours, where it will accumulate and grow.

Let us help you with your money crop.

REYNOLDS-HAMMACK WEDDING.

One of the prettiest weddings of the month was that of Miss Tessie Reynolds and Joseph J. Hammack which was impressively solemnized at the home of the brides parents in Clanton on Wednesday afternoon at six o'clock.

The spacious apartment attractively arranged with potted plants and mass[illegible] formed a beautiful setting for the wedding. In the music room an improvised altar of palms and ferns interspered with cathedral candles formed an artistic background for the bridal party.

Immediately before the ceremony, Perey Pitts, accompanied by Miss Beverly Hester sang "Until" and "Love Through the Dawn Came Stealing." Mrs. Crutcher Ross sang "All for You."

To the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march the bridal party, led by Miss Clara Kelly, descended the broad stairway and approached the altar, through an aisle of taper lighted candelabra festooned with tulle. Hoyt Reynolds entered next followed by the matron of honor, Mrs. Percy Pitts, sister of the bride. Next came Miss Willodean Reynolds, the maid of honor.

The matron and maids were costumed in pastel shades of crepe Elizabeth and carried arm clusters of vari-colored asters.

The dainty flower girls, Myrtle Pitts, Olive Rainer Elmore, and Janet Pitts, entered singly scattering rose petals in the path of the bride. Preceding the bride was Reuben Reynolds Jr., who carried the ring in a Killarney rose.

The bride entered with her father, W. A. Reynolds, and was met at the altar by the groom and the best man, Joe Mullins. Miss Reynolds was gowned in a cocoa brown ensemble suit with fur trimmings and accessories to match. She carried a shower bouquet [illegible] lilies of the valley.

Rev. C. C. Wilkerson, pastor of the Clanton Methodist church, performed the ceremony.

During the ceremony Miss Hester played softly "Just a Song At Twilight."

Mrs. W. A. Reynolds, mother of the bride entertained at at a reception immediately after the ceremony.

Miss Reynolds is a charming and accomplished young woman, and comes of one of Clanton's most prominent families. Social circles of Clanton will miss Miss Reynolds, but are glad that she will reside in the state.

JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIAL.

The Junior Christian Endeavor social of the Presbyterian church had a delightful social affair, an "Old Maids' Party," on Tuesday evening.

The entertainment was well planned and afforded very much pleasure. Each member of the organization was allowed the privilege of inviting a guest, all of whom were urged to enter fully into the spirit of the plan of entertainment, by flouning a costume that was in keeping with the occasion. Much laughter was evoked over the various "make-ups."

The usual parlor games and music were enjoyed.

Delicious refreshments were served and the "Old Maids' Party" was a howling success in every sense of the word.

The delightful honeymoon trip that had been planned by Mr. Hammack and Miss Reynolds, to Lookout, Signal, and various other mountain peaks and scenic points, had to be abbreviated. Solution of Last Week's Puzzle.

HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

MOST OF US KNOW THAT KIND OF ACHE

Mayor Hilary Howse of Nashville was praising Southern cooking at a banquet.

"Southern cooking," he said, as he took fresh portions of terrapin and Brillie Lunn, "is the best cooking in the world. There isn't a grain of indigestion in a ton of it, either.

"Northern cooking is good but too rich. Too much pork. Too much pastry.

"I once attended a Thanksgiving dinner up North, and the next morning I found my host's young son shoveling the snow off the sidewalks, for it had snowed during the night.

"'Doesn't that work give you a backache, son?' I said.

"'No, sir,' said he.

"'You're young,' I said. 'I guess you've never had the backache.'

"'No, sir,' said he, 'but I had the frontache after yesterday's Thanksgiving dinner.'"

Modern Youth Urged to "Get Into the Air"

Horace Greeley's contribution to the good advice of his generation was: "Go West, young man, go West."

If any other Horace Greeley of this period wants to make his reputation as a sage, he can accomplish it on the slogan: "Get into the air, young man, get into the air."

Just as the future of young men of Greeley's day lay in the West, so does the future of ambitious young men of this day lie in the air, says the Vancouver Sun.

In twenty years nine-tenths of North America's passenger traffic, express traffic and probably a good slice of inland freight traffic will pass through the air.

The pioneers in air transportation will carve a place for themselves in history, just as the Jim Hills, the Shaughnessys and the Van Hornes carved places for themselves in history through the medium of two steel rails.

The sons and grandsons of the men who followed Greeley's advice and "went West" need another Greeley today to catapult them "into the air."

Of Course He Obeyed Doctor's Orders, but--

Sybrant Wesselius, the political leader of Grand Rapids, said at a banquet:

"I distrust the corporation lawyer. Earning his quarter-million a year at the corporation's hands, what laws won't he deform, if he can, in the corporation's favor?

"In his interpretation of the law this chap is like the bon vivant whose doctor said to him:

"'And only one glass of port a day, general. That's positive and final. Only one glass of port a day hereafter.'

"The old bon vivant bowed his gray head meekly. Then, when the doctor was gone, he called in his butler and said:

"'Calhoun, I'm to have only one glass of port a day. Doctor's orders. See that it's served to me, Calhoun, in the celery glass.'"

A Very Brief Case

Blake—Have you read Brown's novel? Rather stupid, I think.

Drake—Yes, I can't quite get what he's driving at in the first paragraph, when he says the famous lawyer carelessly laid his jury box upon the witness stand.

Beetle Broadcasts

The broadcasting of a beetle's love song to its mate was the feature of a program sent out by a London, England, station. The occasion was a natural history lecture in which the life cycle and habits of the beetle were discussed. At the appropriate moment, the beetle, which had a special microphone to himself, was permitted to give his call. Many radio fans complimented the beetle on his performance.—New York World.

Life's Span Lengthened

In the last 75 years the average of human life has been lengthened 15 years due, it is said, largely to the activities of public health and hygiene agencies. It is now stated that the average time of human existence will have been lengthened 20 years in the next 50 years.

Franklin on Immortality

Take courage, mortal: Death can't banish thee out of the universe.—Benjamin Franklin.

Silage Spoilage Easy to Prevent

Doors Should Be Fitted to Make Sure They Are Securely Airtight.

Much silage is wasted each year by molding or rotting. The presence of air is the cause of both.

Where wood-stave silos are in use the hoops should be tightened, the inside of the silo coated with creosote, and the outside painted, advises the New Jersey State College of Agriculture at New Brunswick. The doors should be examined and fitted to make sure that they are airtight, for they sometimes fall apart during the summer because of drying out.

Spoilage Traced to Air.

Where a silo is airtight and the silage continues to spoil it can still be traced to air that has not been excluded at filling time by sufficient tramping. If silage is cut too green, the possibilities are strong that there will be some rotting. If it is cut too dry, molding is probable because air cannot be excluded unless the silage is wet.

The proper stage for cutting the corn is after the kernel is dented, but before the milk dries up. If, for some unavoidable reason, the corn does get too dry before putting it into the silo, it is advisable to put a water hose inside of the blower, and in that way moisten the fodder.

A lack of sufficient tramping around the walls during filling is also a common cause of molding. Many dairymen attempt to economize by placing only one man in the silo when it is being filled. This is poor economy, as one man cannot keep the silage level and tramp it sufficiently. Thorough tramping, especially around the walls, will save much labor and useless waste next winter.

Spoiling on Top.

Some spoiling on top must be expected at first. A good method is to fill the last six or twelve inches with either weeds or dry fodder soaked with water. If nothing else is available, it is well to take off the ears and use merely the fodder on top, as it will spoil anyway. Unless this fodder is very green, water should be added through the blower. Some have found that oats, rye or wheat sown on top will sprout and thus form a desirable airtight mat.

Proper Care Increases Life of Farm Tractor

Tractors, like horses, do not last long if they are neglected or abused. Some simple rules for increasing the life of these machines as well as for reducing their repair bills are offered by E. R. Gross, professor of rural engineering at the New Jersey State College of Agriculture.

1. Handle the tractor as though it could feel. This will avoid many broken or bent parts.

2. Do not race the motor except when it seems necessary. The governor is intended to protect the motor when under load. The operator must throttle it when it is running idle.

3. In almost all cases move slowly instead of by jerks. It is easier on the machine. This applies to shifting gears and operating the throttle and clutch.

4. Examine the machine throughout in order to detect any loose bolts. Tighten them before damage is done. This, with oiling and greasing, is as essential as the daily care given a work animal.

5. Motor repairs and adjustments such as taking up bearings, replacing piston rings, cleaning spark plugs, removing carbon, and the like, must be done eventually, but may be deferred if the tractor is carefully operated.

6. In addition to the daily care, give the tractor each winter a thorough cleaning with water to remove dirt, and with kerosene to remove grease. If it is needed, an overhauling should accompany the cleaning.

Heifer Calves Deserve Attention of Dairymen

The heifer calf dropped this fall—the cow of two or three years hence—should be given a fair start now. Whole milk from its dam for the first week and from the herd for two or three weeks longer is almost essential. But as early as the third week of the calf's life it should be offered grain and hay so that it will not miss the fat of the milk when the change is made to skim milk. The chance to skim milk should be made gradually. If whole milk is being sold and there is no skim milk available, powdered buttermilk diluted with nine parts water and fed at the same rate as skim milk is equally satisfactory.

Experimental work has proved the value of buttermilk for calf feeding, only where there is no skim milk available. Whole oats, cracked corn and bran make a good grain for the calf. Coarse alfalfa hay is preferable to leafy hay. A darkened shed will afford the calf protection from flies.

Cut Egg Crop Short

Overheated poultry houses hasten the molt and therefore cut the egg crop short. Rear ventilators over the roosts are essential for comfort. All doors and windows and ventilators should be kept open as much as possible. Summer drafts do not injure hens. Good egg production can be maintained by supplying, in addition to the grain, green succulent feed, as for example: Alfalfa pasture, finely chopped sudan grass or rape and a mash moistened with water or milk, together with cool roosting quarters.

Clover Mix Better Than Timothy Alone

Yield of Hay Can Be Materially Increased.

Why not make it timothy and clover when planting for the next hay crop? There are three good reasons for doing so, according to A. W. Blair, associate soil chemist at the New Jersey agricultural experiment station.

First, clover enriches the soil in nitrogen, whereas timothy takes all of its nitrogen supply from the soil.

Second, the yield of hay from the mixture of clover and timothy is generally greater than from timothy alone.

Third, the mixture gives a hay having a decidedly higher protein value than timothy alone.

In 1921 the average yield of hay from four timothy plots at the experiment station was at the rate of 2,360 pounds per acre, while the average yield on four corresponding timothy and clover plots was 2,676 pounds per acre. In 1922 these plots gave average yields of 2,096 and 4,325 pounds per acre, respectively. Thus, in the two years the difference in favor of the timothy and clover was almost one ton of hay an acre.

In 1921 the timothy and clover plots yielded a fair second cutting of hay (much richer in protein than timothy hay) whereas there was no second cutting from the timothy plots.

In most cases the percentage of nitrogen is nearly twice as high in the mixture as in timothy alone. In the 1921 experiments, the timothy plots returned an average yield of 20.5 pounds of nitrogen per acre, whereas the timothy and clover plots returned an average yield of 46.4 pounds per acre. The corresponding figures for 1922 were 34.7 and 78.4 pounds per acre, respectively.

According to the 1920 United States census, New Jersey farmers seeded 75,000 acres of land to timothy in 1919. Had this been seeded to timothy and clover, the yield of hay would have been materially increased and its feeding value would have been distinctly improved.

Handle Fruit in Hurry During Harvesting Time

"Handle fruit in a hurry," says G. W. Peck of the New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca.

"Have everything ready when picking begins. Delays in harvesting and packing are costly. To maintain its best quality and market value, fruit should be packed and shipped or stored as soon as possible after picking.

"This applies particularly to peaches, pears, and early apples, and to any fruit harvested during comparatively hot weather.

"With cold storage fruit, a day's delay in storing means a week's loss from the time possible to keep it in storage. Leaving it in the packing house or orchard for three or four days after it is picked, means that three or four weeks will be cut from the maximum storage period.

"Have packing tables, sizing machines, picking bags, orchard containers, ladders, and everything needed in good repair before it is wanted. Even the ruts and rough places in the roadways through the orchards may well be given some attention to help keep the fruit from being bruised on the way to the packing room.

"Hire dependable pickers after estimating how many will handily care for the crop, and have in convenient places the necessary supplies of barrels, baskets, corrugated caps, nails, stencils, hatchets, and the like. Getting all these things ready can well form a major part of the fruit-farmer's rainy-day jobs until picking time."

Cream in Hot Weather

During the hot weather it is hard to deliver good cream. The essentials for producing high-grade cream are to keep it clean by having clean cows, clean buckets and clean cans, and to keep it cold. With a good cellar, running water or cooling tank this can be accomplished. Deliver cream often and it will have less opportunity to get too sour. Good butter cannot be made from poor cream and many creameries are beginning to pay a premium for first-grade cream.

FARM NOTES

Few farms are without cats, yet rats abound.

• • •

Timothy has a good reputation, but clover gives it an added lustre.

• • •

Put aside a few bales of fourth cutting alfalfa for the hens to pick at this winter.

• • •

Junior calf club activity is an avocation that may be the father of a profitable vocation.

• • •

It costs just as much to raise a 40-bushel crop as one that yields 50 bushels, so why not plant your farm to adapted varieties?

• • •

Yields of alfalfa have been increased an average of 3,500 pounds annually from 1915 to 1920 by the use of acid phosphate and limestone.

• • •

Home-grown seed is always best if the variety is an adapted one. Perhaps you are fortunate in having a community "seed crank." Use him.

IMPROVE METHODS FOR RANGE SHEEP

Do you remember when the only investment a sheep man had was in his camp outfit and in his sheep? Such a business could be managed to yield a profit by methods which would spell ruin if owned by the range sheep man today.

The sheep man of today must own or lease land to stay in the business. This land must be purchased or leased to maintain watering places, to control and be assured of sufficient range, or produce feed for feeding. It is even necessary to own improved ranch property before a permit will be granted upon the national forests. Investments have also been made in dipping vats, warehouses, storehouses, lambing sheds and the like. All of these mean increased capitalization. A man with 500 to 1,000 breeding ewes can easily have an investment in his range business of $12,000 to $14,000. Such an investment requires managerial ability, and the adoption of modern and approved methods of range sheep management, which was not needed in the old days.

Aside from an increase in capitalization, there has been an increase in the operating expenses. The sheep have been crowded out of the land which formerly afforded range, and now they must be fed hay during the winter. Labor charges have advanced, due to advances in the wage scale and also because the flocks have decreased in size.

In order to realize a profit from the business it is necessary to increase the per cent of lambs dropped. A great loss of lambs is suffered from dropping to docking time. A range sheep man on the Colorado National forest had 20 per cent lamb loss during this time. He plans a lambing shed to reduce this loss. Many range sheep men have found that the saving in lambs soon pays for the cost of the lambing shed.—B. W. Fairbanks, Extension Service, Colorado Agricultural College.

Hogs Require Shade and Clean Water in Summer

Shade and clean water during the summer months are essential to successful pork production. All kinds of hogs must have shade. Too much direct sunlight and heat is a frequent cause of hogs failing to thrive and is often the cause of hogs dying. During July and August small pigs often blister on the backs and about the ears which causes, in some cases, severe infections and bad sores.

Expensive shelter is not necessary. Shade trees provide ample protection. Where no trees exist temporary shade may be provided by the covering of a frame with canvas, under which the hogs may go for protection. Some producers build individual hoghouses with sides that may be lifted to provide an increased amount of shade during the summer months. This plan furnishes shade for hogs where only a few are kept.

Clean fresh water for drinking and wallow is equally as important as, or more important than, shade. The old-time wallow hole covered with scum, which was once also the drinking fountain, is no longer in favor with the successful hog breeder. Hogs must have water to drink, and if they cannot get fresh, clean water in the trough or fountain, they will drink where they can find it, regardless of its condition. This fact has caused some to believe that hogs prefer nothing better, but they do, and will demonstrate the fact when they are able to get fresh water from the well.

Live Stock Notes

Don't feed moldy, or spoiled silage.

• • •

Don't put fresh feed in dirty or sour troughs.

• • •

Don't forget to salt all animals regularly.

• • •

Don't feed milk from tuberculous cattle to your animals.

• • •

Keep the brood sows on the farm—hogs are going to be high the coming year.

• • •

Supplement pasture with sufficient grain to keep the hogs in good thrifty condition.

• • •

Protect cattle, horses, and mules from the torment of the biting fly and the horn fly by using fly repellants.

• • •

About 62 per cent of pure-bred live stock is marketed directly for meat purposes.

• • •

Low ceilings for hoghouses save heat and lumber. But don't overlook the necessity of ventilation—and sunshine.

• • •

Two litters of not less than seven pigs each, raised to maturity each year, more than double average profits from hogs.

• • •

The ewe with twin lambs should produce much more milk and consequently needs more feed than is best for the ewe that is feeding only one lamb.

Spanish Grandee Well Loaded With Titles

The duke of Alba is a duke by four other titles than Alba. He is a marquis by ten titles attached to as many landed estates. He is the twenty-fourth count of Lemos—that title goes back beyond the year 1000—and he is count 13 times elsewhere. And he is hereditary constable of Navarre, once a kingdom not to be sneezed at. The duke's father, from whom he inherited all this nobility, died in New York 24 years ago.

This does not end the mixed and marvelous blood boiling in the veins of this grandee who turns to the people. His family name is Fitz-James and he is tenth duke of Berwick in Scotland, which means he is descended straight from James the Second, the last of the Stuart kings of England. And it also means he is a descendant of Mary Queen of Scots.

FLY FUNIRAL

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

THE AFRICAN LION

"Tell me your story," said Billie Brownie, who had gone to the zoo to pay a call on the African Lion.

Billie Brownie, as you know, was given permission some time ago by Mother Nature to go and talk to any of the members of her family he wished to call on.

He was given the power, too, to understand their different languages, and he used to hear their stories and translate them into language others could understand, and sent out word of his trips and his adventures and what he had heard.

They were always anxious to hear the result of his trips back in Fairyland and Brownieland where they used to gather about and hear what he had to say.

It was always an eager lot of fairies and brownies and gnomes and elves who gathered about when Billie Brownie came back from a trip.

"Yes, pray do tell me your story," he said again to the African Lion.

"Roar, roar," said the African Lion. "I will tell you my story.

"Roaring to me is like laughing to people.

"It keeps me cheerful. It makes me feel gay. It makes me feel like eating and it makes me feel like eating more!

"Sometimes I roar because I am mad, and sometimes because I am glad.

"But anyone ought to be able to tell one roar from the other. My roars are different just as people speak differently when they are cross from when they are pleasant and cheery.

"In my days back in Africa I used to walk with my head down low, never looking up unless I was suddenly startled.

"Sometimes I walked with some of my friends, sometimes with my mate.

"Yes," Said the African Lion.

Sometimes the Mrs. Lions all walked together and sometimes the Mr. Lions all walked together."

"You changed about," nodded Billie Brownie.

"Yes," said the African Lion.

"If meat was scarce," he continued, "we would have attacked anything which came our way.

"Oh, when meat was scarce, we were dangerous."

"Oh," shuddered Billie Brownie.

"Well, it's not scarce now. And you're all right anyway."

"Good," smiled Billie Brownie. "I feel greatly relieved, I do."

"We used to have such a fine way of doing when we were free," the African Lion continued.

"We would each roar in turn, and when one had to stop roaring to get his breath, another would continue with another roar, which sounded all like one great long roar.

"Oh, such days, such nights! Such freedom! Such hunting! Such roaring!"

But Billie Brownie hastily put on his invisible robe for people were coming into the lion house now.

"I must hurry away," said Billie Brownie. "Thank you for your story. I know my friends will be interested hearing it."

"Good-by," said the African Lion. "You aren't a bad little chap."

The African Lion did not talk any more. The lion house in the zoo was now filled with people.

They were listening to him now as he began to roar to see that he was still in practice. They had heard his voice and had not heard what he had been saying, but he had attracted them to the lion house.

The other lions understood that he was thinking of the days of freedom and they began to think of them, too, and then they began to roar, one lion after the other roared.

So from one end of the lion house to the other every lion was roaring.

As one took breath, the other roared even louder to make up for the one who was short of breath for the moment.

And they acted just as they did when they were free as far as their roars were concerned, for they were all thinking of the wild days which now were over.

But they had not left their voices behind them.

TAILORED NOTE IN COATS; SHOES TO MATCH ENSEMBLE

IN SPITE of the much-talked-of flared silhouette for fall, and the introduction of godets and plaits in the composition of new styles, the coats now beginning to pass in review give a general impression of slim lines. Several things contribute to this desirable feature: one is intricacy of cut, which introduces fullness with great subtlety; flares placed near the hemline; plaits, where they will efface too-opulent curves in the figure; and the popular side fastening and wrapped styles—these all make for slenderness.

Next to the introduction of fullness, the most important style feature for fall is the formal tailored note apparent in all coats. Even in utility coats there is nothing casual and little that is severely simple in their styling. They are given touches—as in fur collars and cuffs, elaboration of sleeves or the addition of a cape—that lend them dignity and importance. Cape models are not plentiful but they are represented in several variations. One of them, shown in the picture, is of plain twill, lined with crepe and finished with a becoming fur collar. It is a debonair garment that can be worn anywhere.

For utility coats the natural or fur colors seem to be favored—the brown, beige, cocoa, tan and gray shades that are unobtrusive and not likely to strike a jarring note with other colors in frock or hat. But rich dark greens and blues, of the blue pencil varieties, are sponsored; but their support is more in evidence in formal garments than in coats for general wear.

Sitting at the chess board of fashion, the ensemble suit and the regulation tailored suit take turns in striving to win the lead in popular favor. At the moment it appears that the ensemble suit has made a clever move that bids fair to make it the winner. In ensembles, designers have concentrated on coats, making them as practical as separate coats that can be worn with any frock—an advantage that women are quick to see. Along with the coat goes a smartly styled dress, usually combining a lighter-weight fabric with that used in the coat, but the coat will look as well with other dresses. In ensembles of this character the coats are full length or nearly full length and becomingly trimmed with fur.

It remains for the buyer to decide whether she will put her money in a practical two-piece suit, or in a practical coat—with a dress thrown in. If she can afford both she will choose a dressy affair in her ensemble suit—but still with an eye to making the coat do service with several frocks.

Having completed this move on the part of ensembles, designers consider what the two-piece suit must do to nullify it. They have presented it in attractive models made with three-quarter length or longer coats, skirts to match and very handsome blouses. The latter are shown in metal brocades, embroidered silk crepes, and other materials. Furthermore, coats with stunning vestees are offered, and, of course, the blouses and vestees may be varied. Another factor that may stand in the path of the ensemble suit is the "compose suit" in which coat and dress are both combinations of the same two fabrics. An example appears in a suit with plaid skirt and plain coat faced with the plaid material. It has a vest of plain broadcloth in a bright contrasting color as red or green, fastening up to a high collar with tiny metal buttons.

Whatever the choice may be, the time is here when footwear must be carefully considered, and this is most important in the case of the ensemble. The harmony of coat and dress must not be undone by shoes or millinery out of character. When they are what they should be there is no question of the distinction that belongs to the ensemble.

PAUL WRITES TO THE PHILIPPIANS.

LESSON TEXT—Phil. 3:7-16; 4:8.

GOLDEN TEXT—"I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."—Phil. 4:13.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Paul and His Friends.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Paul Pressing Toward the Goal.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Choosing the Best Things.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Christian's Goal.

The contents of the epistle may be summarized as follows:

1. Salutation (1:1:2).
2. Thanksgiving and prayer in which he shows his loving interest in them (1:3-11.)
3. Triumph of the gospel in spite of opposition (1:12-26).
4. Duties enjoined (1:27-2:18).
5. Paul's promise to send Timothy and Epaphroditus (2:19-30).
6. Exhortations and warnings (3:1-4:1).
7. Renewed appeal for unity (4:2-9).
8. Personal matters (4:10-23).

The essential message of Philippians is a revelation of the mind which should dominate the Christian.

I. All Things Loss for Christ (3:7-9).

The occasion for this remarkable declaration was the claim of the Judaising teachers for legal righteousness. In chapter 3:4-6 he enumerates the grounds upon which he had a right to base his claims for legal righteousness.

1. "Circumcised the eighth day," in keeping with the demands of the law.
2. "Of the stock of Israel," related by blood and birth.
3. "Tribe of Benjamin," from which the first king was chosen, and which always remained loyal to the nation.
4. "An Hebrew of the Hebrews," in contrast with some of mixed parentage.
5. "Touching the law, a Pharisee," the sect most zealous for the ritual of Judaism.
6. "Concerning zeal, persecuting the church." A passionate effort to crush the church.
7. "Touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless," as to the condition of life demanded by the law.

All of these, valuable in themselves, when placed alongside of the excellency of the knowledge of Christ were abandoned for a better thing. The vision of Christ gave him the true perspective of values. In this light he saw the utter worthlessness of these things. After some thirty years of such trials and sufferings as perhaps no other human being ever knew, he has no regrets, and still counts them as refuse in comparison with what he had gained in Christ.

II. Paul's Present Desire (vv. 10-11).

1. "That I May Know Him."

Personal acquaintance with the Lord was his supreme desire. To know the saving grace of Christ is good, but to know Christ is infinitely better.

2. "The Power of His Resurrection."

This is an advance thought over personal acquaintance. It is the expression of the life of Christ through the apostle. It is the power you gain to overcome, the mastery over sin and self.

3. "Fellowship of His Sufferings."

Not only identified with Christ in His sufferings by imputation, but that he might fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ (Col. 1:24).

4. "Attain Unto the Resurrection of the Dead" (v. 11).

This will be accomplished when the Lord comes (I Thess. 4:16-17).

III. Pressing Toward the Goal (vv. 12-16).

Paul clearly grasped the meaning of his perfection in Christ, yet he was keenly conscious of his personal limitations. Herein is expressed the true law of progress in the spiritual life.

1. Conscious of Limitations (v. 12).

The first step towards progress is to be profoundly dissatisfied with personal attainments. No intellectual advancement is ever made by those who think they know enough, who are satisfied with what they have.

2. Conscious of a Transcendent Goal (v. 13).

The Christian life is an upward calling.

3. A Resolute Determination to Reach the Goal (v. 14).

He declares, "This one thing I do."

IV. The Right Occupation of the Mind (ch. 4:1-8).

The ideal controls the man. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." When once the mind is guarded and controlled by the peace of God, it will dwell upon spiritual things.

Faith

PICKLING TIME

Some good housekeepers can the prime ripe tomatoes when at their best and later when the canning season is over and more leisure is found, make catsup, chili sauce, and various other tomato combinations.

Chili Sauce.—Take three quarts of canned tomatoes, add six chopped green peppers, four white onions also chopped, one cupful of sugar, half a cupful of salt, two cupfuls of vinegar and the following ground spices: One tablespoonful of cinnamon, one-eighth of a teaspoonful of cayenne pepper, half a teaspoonful of cloves and allspice mixed. Cook all together for three hours, then bottle for winter use. This makes a thick sauce. By adding more vinegar a good catsup may be made.

Bordeaux Sauce.—Take two gallons of cabbage, one gallon of green tomatoes, one dozen medium-sized white onions, six red sweet peppers, all chopped fine. Mix one ounce of cloves, one-fourth pound of white mustard seed, one ounce of celery seed, one and three-quarters pounds of sugar, one-half cupful of salt, and one gallon of vinegar. Drain the tomatoes; cabbage and tomatoes are measured after chopping. Remove the seeds from the peppers. Cloves and allspice are tied in small bags. Boil 20 minutes. This makes 12 quarts.

Pickled Onions.—Remove the outside skin but be careful not to break them. Soak 24 hours in strong salt water, wipe and put them into jars with pieces of red pepper. Allow enough vinegar to fill the jars and to each quart add a teaspoonful of mixed spices. Scald the vinegar with the spices, cool and fill the jars. Repeat for two days, cooling each time before pouring over the onions.

Jellies and Jams.

If a jar or two is put up when the fruit or vegetables are fresh, the work will be light and in a few weeks the fruit closet will be well filled. A cupful of raspberries added to three cupfuls of rhubarb with sugar to make a rich sauce makes a fruit that has all the flavor of raspberry with the bulk of rhubarb. Strawberries, pineapple, in fact any fruit that is rich in flavor, added to rhubarb will extend the flavor.

Peach and Raisin Conserve.—Take four pounds of peeled peaches, three pounds of sugar, three cupfuls of water, two cupfuls of seeded raisins, one and one-half cupfuls of blanched almonds shredded. Slice the peaches, removing the stones, add the water and sugar and cook until the mixture thickens; add the almonds and cook five minutes longer.

Plum and Raisin Jam.—Cook six cupfuls of pitted plums in three cupfuls of water until they are soft, add two cupfuls of seeded raisins and four cupfuls of sugar and cook 30 minutes, or until the mixture is thick; stir occasionally. Pour into jelly glasses and seal with paraffin.

Pineapple Marmalade.—Pare and cut into small cubes one pineapple, saving all the juice. Add three cupfuls of sugar and the grated rind and juice of three lemons. Cook 30 minutes or until thick; add two cupfuls of raisins. Cook five minutes longer and pour into glasses.

Chinese Pears. — Wipe, remove stems, quarter and core eight pounds of pears. Slice them in thin slices, add four pounds of sugar and one-fourth pound of Canton ginger cut into small pieces. Let stand over night closely covered. Slice three lemons, rejecting the seeds, add to the pears and cook slowly for two hours.

Apple Catsup.—Peel and quarter a dozen apples, stew them in a very little water until soft, then put them through a sieve. To a quart of the apples add one cupful of sugar, one teaspoonful of pepper, the same of cloves and cinnamon and two medium-sized onions choped fine. Stir all together, add one tablespoonful of salt, a cupful of vinegar, boil one hour and bottle while hot.

Grape Marmalade.—Wash and mash grapes. Cook slowly until soft. Force through a sieve until all but the seeds and skins has gone through. Rinse the seeds and skins with a little water and add an equal measure of sugar for the grape pulp. Boil 10 minutes until very thick.

Celery may be found in most salads; it not only adds flavor, bulk and vegetable acids, but it has a medicinal value as well.

Mrs. Ackerman and Mrs. Mayer Tell Women How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Them at This Trying Period

MRS. ELSIE ACKERMAN CONVOY, OHIO

Convoy, Ohio.—"During the Change of Life I was weak and run-down and could hardly do my work. By reading your advertisements I found out about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has straightened me right out and made me feel like a new woman. By the time I had taken eight bottles I was well and could do my housework on the farm without trouble. I recommended it to my daughter-in-law after her second baby was born and it did her a wonderful lot of good. I told her to try it and if it didn't help her I would pay for it, and before she had taken one bottle she said to me, 'You won't have to pay for it! It is helping me wonderfully!' And she took three bottles of it. You can use my testimonial if you wish."—Mrs. ELSIE ACKERMAN, Convoy, Ohio.

Mrs. Mayer's Experience

Litchfield, Conn.—"I have given your medicine a fair trial (I am on my fifth bottle) and can truthfully say that it has helped me. I am at the Change of Life and was not able to sleep nights, had indigestion, palpitation of the heart, pains in my right and left sides (more so if I hurried), had a rapid beating in my left ear and dreaded to see night come. I felt smothered if I lay on my left side, I had gas dreadfully, at times felt as if some one had me by the throat, had hot waves through me and sometimes I would shake in spells of nervousness. I am taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I cannot praise it enough. I can say it does all it claims to do and I can recommend it to my friends. I can sleep much better, the pains in my sides are gone, I am not so nervous, my digestion is much better, and I very seldom have the hot waves. I must say that the Vegetable Compound is the best medicine for women's ills and I will answer letters from women asking about it."—Mrs. JOSEPH MAYER, Sr., Box 36, Litchfield, Connecticut.

Try Your Best To Obey All Laws

Sunset magazine poses the question: "Are you a lawbreaker? Of course you are. How could you hope to obey all the laws passed by your city, your state, or your national congress? If you should employ the most able lawyer in the land to guide you he could not read fast enough to keep informed as to the new legislation and multiplicity of court decisions." Since we can't even hope to know what all the laws are it follows that we must violate them (says the magizine).

Charles Alexander editor of the Almony, Orgeon, Democrat, poet, novelist, and literary editor, says the train is quite as Sunset has stated it, we have reached a state of mind where we must, by the terms of necessity, use our own discretion and be our own judges of what is wrong. The fact that a thing is law no longer impresses us. "The man who craves a drink and can get it," says the magizine, "feels no moral restraint. Tell him that he is a lawbreaker and he will laugh and cite instance to prove that you, too, are a lawbreaker." This is an indictment hard to escape, says the philosopher Alexander. It is a ture indictment, one into which enters not alone the idle pomposity of American laws in trivial matters, but also the social lack of recognition of fundamental tendencies in the individual which make toward his decent treatment of his fellow citizen." Hear him further: "Take the traffic law. If forty miles an hour is needed to make the hill right ahead on high gear, and the way is clear and safe, ninety-five per cent of drivers will speed to forty miles or more. It is a matter of their own judgment. A regard for fundamentals the greatest attribute of, any fundamentals is greatest attribute of any fundamentally free people. the enforcement of detailed regulations is a sign of the nation's self

"The more laws that are passed the less effective they will become." Truth is the middle ground, the no-man's-land where so few men venture. Law is good Too little law is bad. Too much law is bad. A sensible amount of law is just right.

In America we have altogether too much law and illustrations cited are merely examples of what obtains in a dozen other departments of daily endeavor.

Instructions on Entering School Given by Prof Martin

CLANTON GRAMMAR SCHOOL TO OPEN ON SEPTEMBER 7th.

The Clanton Grammar School will open on Sept. 7. In order to avoid the confusion that we always have on the first day of school. I shall ask that the pupils in the first, second, third, fourth, and fifth grades be present at 8 and tht that the pupils in the sixth and the Junior High Grades be present at 10.

The incidental fee will be $3.50, as it has been for serveral years. You can get your receeipts for this fee at the Alred Drug Store. This fee is payable at the beginning of school. Please attend to this matter at once.

We have been having a great deal of trouble about people starting their children to school who were too young. The law is very plain on this matter and there is nothing optional with the teachers about it. The law very plainly says that a child must be six years of age on or before Oct. 1 to enter school. We shall make an honest effort to carry out the law in regard to this age limit, and we hope that no one will try to enroll a child who is not six years of age before October 1.

In order that we may arrange to accommodate all the children who wish to attend here, we would be glad for you to enroll on the first day, even though can not attend regularly at the beginning of the school. If you will do this it will be a great help to us.

We are all very much discouraged in not having a new building, but we hope that we may continue to have the cooperation of the people and still make this the best school that we have ever had here. I want to assure you that there will be no relaxation on the part of the faculty on account of this disappointment. We would all like to have a new building, but we do not wish to lay too much emphasis on this part of the school. I have seen some mighty good schools taught in much worse buildings than we have, and I have seen some very poor schools taught in much better buildings than we have. We hope that we may have such cooperation on the part of the people of the town that it will lay the responsibility of the school at the feet of the faculty.

W. E MARTIN.

MODERN INVENTIONS ARE PROVING THEIR WORTH

Architecture for comfort and convenience has progressed more rapidly in this nation than in any other. The poorest American home generally has its bath tub, electric lights, gas or electric water heater and telephone. A great percentage of the homes have in addition gas or electricity for cooking; the house is wired to a lug in a vacuum cleaner in every room; the dinning room is provided with fixtures to operate an electric coffee pot, waffle iron, toaster or other convenience for table use. In the washroom will be the electric washig machine, the electric and gas operated ironing machine and probably an electric drying outfit. In the kitchen will be the electric dishwasher and the electric refrigerator. This latter article is just coming into more general use and in conjunction with the laudry equipment will be the greatest money and labor saver for the house wife that has yet been devised.

The gas furnace controlled automatically and lit by an electric push button has made the old days of wood chopping largely a thing of the past. For comfort, the electric fan keeps a breeze going and for beauty and utility the modern electric lights and fixtures transform a house of gloom into one of cheer and hominess. Electricity plays an important part in milady's toilet and does work which many hand maidens would have been unable to accomplish in the day of the Roman emperors. The "electric servant" does work in the American home for a few dollars a month which could not be accomplished in any other manner by numerous servants at a hundred times that price.

The home with the interconnected telephone to the different rooms saves countless steps for its occupants. While Egyptian tombs are being opened to dig out relic of monarches of past ages, it is interesting to note that they contain no conveniences to compare with those which the common laborer in the United States can enjoy to-day.

We have read about the Roman baths and seen pictures of big fat Romans walking down into them, but it is pretty safe to say that they were chilly proposition alongside of the American bathroom with its instantaneous hot water heater ready for use at any hour of the day or night. Incidentally the truck driver or millionaire of today can have the same type of bathroom equipment at a modest cost, but, only a Roman emperor could enjoy the "pleasure" of a Roman bath.

Burton Mullins to Go to Annapolis

It will be of special interest to his many friends to know that Burton Mullins, son of Mr. and Mrs C. Reese Mullins, has been named for a course at Annapolis, Md., in the Academy at Annapolis, Md., in the spring of 1926.

The selection was made by Congressman Jeffers out of a large list of applicants, and is an honor well merited, for Mr Mullins is a positive pains-taking student, and with the training he will receive in his course at Annapolis, will no doubt prove a credit not only to his family, but to Chilton county and his state as well.

Mr. Mullins left this week for Marion to resume his course at Marion Navy Institute, to finish his studies preparatory to entering Annapolis next spring.

Following is a letter received from Congressman Jeffers informing the News of Mr. Mullins' selection:

Mr. J. W. Ayres.
Clanton, Ala.

Dear Mr. Ayres:

I write this note to advise you that I have named Mr. Burton Mullins of Clanton, as the principal candidate for appointment of the U. S. Naval Academy at Annapolis in the spring of 1925. I thought you would be interested to learn of the appointment to Annapolis of this Chilton County boy.

The choice was made in this young man's favor out of a large number of applications in recognition of Chilton County. It appeared to me that this young man would represent his County in splendid fashion.

With good wishes and regards, I am
Yours very sincerely,

CHREVROLET MOTORS EXTEND ADVERTISING

The Chevrolet Mortor Company has announced a co-operative advertising campaign in connection with its large dealer organizaton.

This campaign is a further move by the Chevrolet Motor company in its effort to obtain the most economical distribution of its product. It is probably the most comprehensive and efficient of the great advertising campaigns in the automotive industry. Approximately 4, 000 newspapers are being used.

Under this plan the Chevrolet Motor Company in reality has become the advertising department of each of its dealers whom it provides with national advertising and thus broadcast a single advertising message at one time in both national and local publications.

The co-operative feature of the plan does not apply in a financial way to the national advertising used by the Chevrolet Motor Company in the principal magazines of the Country. This advertising is paid for from general advertising appropriation of the Company without expense to dealers. The dealers continue to receive gratis the sales literature and the effective window display service of the company. These displays supplement the unified advertising plan.

In brief the plan is this:

The Chevrolet Motor company charges a small amount for each car shipped to dealers and credits it to the Chevrolet Dealers Advertsing Fund. To this fund the company then adds a substantial contribution from its own advertising budget.

The company plans the dealer advertising campaigns, buy newspaper space sends the advertisements to the newspapers, directs the printing and display of outdoor advertising, handles invoices and pays bills. The dealers thus are relieved of a vast amount of detail.

A desirable angle of the plan is a guarantee to each dealer that every dollar which he pays into the fund will be spent in his district for newspaper or outdoor display space, all the cost of preparing and placing the advertising being more than covered by Chevrolet Motor company's contribution to the fund.

In furtherance of the plan, the Campbell-Ewald Company, which serves the Chevrolet Motor company as advertising agents and is one of the five largest advertising companies in United States, has sent out from its own organization 14 field men who are located at strategic points throughout the country.

These men bring the dealers into close personal contact with the main organization inworking out advertising problems and assist in individualizing the dealers advertising consistent with the program of a united appeal.

The individual requirements of each dealer are analyzed and kept in constant touch with advertising plans and are given advance proofs of all newspaper advertisements

"The guarantee to the dealers that their entire contribution will be spent for advertising space in their districts I regard as second in importance only to the feature of unified appeal." "It should be understood that this is not national advertising used locally: it is local advertising nationally directed."

BUSINESS EFFICIENCY LACING MUNICIPALLY OWNED WORKS

Municipal operation of street car lines and other public service utilities would not be such uniform failures if there was a way of securing firstclass business efficiency of administration which seems impossible in the average city government. The New York Evening Telegram of July 3 says under the editorial heading, "Another Municipal Success":

"Another dream has been shattered in this best of all possible worlds. An auditor, after going over the books, informs the city officials of Detroit that their municipally operated street system has suffered deficit of over three million dollars in three years of City operation

"Have not the published monthly reports of the last three years showed profits? Naturally, Mayor Smith is greatly surprised. Double a even greater surprises are in store for him and it follows for the people of Detroit.

"The reserves which have been carried the audit shows, have not been out of real income, but have existed only on paper.

"Paper is not as expensive as operation a street railway, so may we not anticipate the usual monthly report for August that the profits for the month of July are greater than any previous month!"

It must be remembered the booking job like managing the city owned street railway is also a political job and political jobs holders must rob'd each other and the politicial machine to which they owe their jobs.

THE PENCIL MAKES A FARM PAY BETTER

Farm Accounting Reveals Losing Methods and Points Way to Bigger Profits.

(From Banker-Farmer)

A farm cannot properly be called successful unless it pays a fair rate of interest on the investment and returns fair wages for the farmer's labor. Agriculture is considered by all odds the most important industry in the world, and yet in no other industry is the business end so neglected.

It is common to find a farmer with an investment of fifteen to twenty thousand dollars, yet does he keep books? Perhaps he may jot down a note now and then of an important deal, but this is of no value in an analysis of his business as a whole. No other industry, however small, is carried on without books of some sort.

Farming is a business and to be successful must be conducted in a businesslike way. The business man's mind should have indelibly printed upon it two questions: What profit is my business making? How can that profit be increased? To know the latter, one must find out the former; and to find out about profits requires the keeping of books.

It is not necessary for a farmer to have a course in bookkeeping. Almost every agricultural college in the country has issued a simplified farm accounting book which it sells at cost, and only a few minutes are required each day to jot down the day's happenings.

Accounts Increase Profits

Instances number a thousandfold where farmers have profited by knowing their business. Accounts kept by nineteen farmers in Illinois led them to improve the organization and operation of their farms in ways that added approximately $650 to their averaged incomes in 1922, the seventh year they had kept accounts.

An Iowa farmer found at the end of the first year he kept books that crops fed to livestock brought more money than when sold outright. His figures showed that his cows were poor; compared with other farms in the state, he found the number of acres cultivated per man on his farm, as well as the number of acres per horse, were below average. He rented more land and replanned his fields, so that the crop areas per man and horse were increased. He sold some of his scrubs and bought good cows. The second year his income from the farm, after paying all expenses and interest on the money invested, had been increased over $350.

Costs Can Be Regulated

"I have discovered," says one farm bookkeeper, "that the kind of man you have on a job, as well as the particular team, often makes quite a variation in the cost of performing certain tasks. I have learned from the pages of my book that if I could have increased the yield of my wheat field by two bushels and my corn by five bushels I would have realized a substantial profit from them."

While the farmers may not be able to fix prices on their products, they do have a voice in determining the costs of production. To reduce this cost they must first know what the costs are.

The number of farmers who are keeping books on their business has increased remarkably in recent years, but the number of businesslike farmers is woefully small when listed alongside the sum total of the farmers in the country.

Inventory Is Indispensable

The basis of any system of farm accounting is the annual property list or inventory. It is the starting point of the farm records. One must take into consideration decreases or increases in the value of all property owned to gauge the progress of the business. Lacking facts as to the value of his property, no business man can form an accurate estimate of how he stands financially. Increased cash may be due to property which was sold, or increased debts may be due to improvements made. If a farmer is failing behind, the inventory will emphasize this fact. Often when a man is discouraged and thinks he is making no progress, his inventories will tell him that he is better off than he thought.

At the end of each year a financial statement is drawn off. This is the farmer's rating and no farmer with a good financial statement need fear walking into a bank and asking for a loan

A bank in Monrovia, Ind., tests seed corn for farmers. A basement room was fitted out last season for the purpose and 25,000 ears were tested for fifty-six farmers One-fourth of the seed tested last year was unfit for seed. This year the percentage will run even higher. The work is done under the supervision of the high school agricultural teacher. He reports that the community will have a surplus of seed corn this year.

The banks of Conway, Ark., have offered prizes for the most marketable sweet potatoes produced on one acre of land. A first prize of $150 is offered, along with three district prizes of $50 each. The county agent and the banks are working out the details

The County Bankers Association will help to employ a full time county leader this year for boys' and girls' club work in Calhoun, Cherokee and Buena Vista counties Iowa.

Small Potato Will Make Good as Seed

Tubers Reproduce Plant From Which They Come.

The old question about the size of potato seed comes up this year. Some people think that a small potato will be sure to give a hill of small tubers; that is, that it will reproduce itself. That is not always true, says the Rural New Yorker. The potato seed, whether large or small, is likely to reproduce the plant from which it is taken. Seed taken from a large, well-developed hill will be likely to reproduce the yield, whether the seed is small or large. A hill of potatoes giving only two or three large-sized tubers would not be selected for seed under what is known as hill selection, because the tubers would reproduce the plant from which they come and give only a small yield. A small tuber taken from a hill giving a heavy yield would be likely to duplicate that yield, and it is not likely that a large tuber taken from the same hill would do any better. The plan followed in hill selection is to study individual hills and select the tubers from those hills, or those plants which give finest yield. Of course, where the crop is dug and all thrown together, it is impossible to know the parentage of any particular seed, so that it is usually better when taking seed from the bin just as it comes, to select the large tubers, or those of medium size, for planting, but when the percentage of the seed is known and the best hills are selected it is quite likely that the little potatoes will serve for seed just as well as the large ones.

Few New Varieties Are Recommended for Garden

A garden on a farm is for a very definite purpose, as a rule. It generally is not planted directly for profit, but to provide the family with the good things to eat which it could not otherwise have.

If your farm garden is like most others you will have a pretty good idea just what varieties of different vegetables you will plant. These varieties will be the ones that have succeeded best for you in the past. By all means, make these your main planting.

But there is one thing that every one who is planning the farm garden should do. He should plan on experimenting with just a few novelties or new introductions.

Most of our standard vegetables were at one time novelties or new introductions, and the time new varieties are being developed. These are manifestly not all improvements, but there is always a chance that something new will be unusually good. Hence, while it pays to go slow on anything that will readily increase the amount of time the garden will require for its care, the annual tryout of a few new varieties is almost sure to be amply repaid in the long run.

Consider Saltpeter for Stumps Is Big Failure

In a recent letter from A. J. McAdams, land reclamation specialist for the University of Missouri, concerning the much-discussed method of using saltpeter for rotting stumps so they could later be burned out, he states that they tried out this method thoroughly in Wisconsin and could see no results or benefits at all. Also that it has been tried out without results in the Pacific Northwest, and that he understands that the land clearing specialists in Minnesota have had the same negative results.

If these several land clearing experts, after carefully testing out this method, pronounce it worthless for practical purposes, we think we can safely agree with their conclusions says the Indiana Farmer's Guide. However, we are always open to conviction. One or two isolated stumps mean little or nothing, however, unless they can be compared with similar ones not treated.

FARM NOTES

Poison oats clean up the gophers.

* * *

Try sweet clover and you won't regret it.

* * *

An acre of alfalfa for every dairy cow is a good aim.

* * *

A bonfire of leaves is willful waste of that which belongs to the soil.

* * *

Ideas gained at the fairs last year will be of no use unless you put them to work this year.

* * *

The crop planted on poorly prepared land is already half lost; plow deep and thoroughly.

* * *

Prediction for 1925: It will be just as profitable to keep down farm expenses as to increase the income.

* * *

Trimming out fence corners with a scythe has rather undeservedly become a lost art in many sections of the country.

* * *

Boys' club work this year should furnish farm leaders with fine opportunities to reach some parent farmers who are difficult to reach otherwise.

The Talks for Women on the Subject of Finance were held every two weeks in the crystal room of the Blackstone and were a great success. Paula was right. Much of old Aug Hempel's shrewdness and business foresight had descended to her. The women came—widows with money to invest; business women who had thriftily saved a portion of their salaries; moneyed women who wanted to manage their own property, or who resented a husband's interference. Some came out of curiosity. Others for lack of anything better to do. Others to gaze on the well-known banker or lawyer or business man who was scheduled to address the meeting. Dirk spoke three or four times during the winter and was markedly a favorite. The women, in smart crepe gowns and tailored suits and small chic hats, twittered and murmured about him, even while they sensibly digested his well-thought-out remarks. He looked very handsome, clean-cut, and distinguished there on the platform in his admirably tailored clothes, a small white flower in his buttonhole. He talked easily, clearly, fluently; answered the questions put to him afterward with just the right mixture of thoughtful hesitation and confidence.

It was decided that for the national advertising there must be an attention that would catch the eye of women, and interest them. The person to do it, Dirk thought, was this Dallas O'Mara whose queer hen-track signature you saw scrawled on half the advertising illustrations that caught your eye. Paula had not been enthusiastic about this idea.

"M-m-m, she's very good," Paula had said, guardedly, "but aren't there others who are better?"

"She!" Dirk had exclaimed. "Is it a woman? I didn't know. That name might be anything."

"Oh, yes, she's a woman. She's said to be very—very attractive."

Dirk sent for Dallas O'Mara. She replied, suggesting an appointment two weeks from that date. Dirk decided not to wait, consulted other commercial artists, looked at their work, heard their plans outlined, and was satisfied with none of them. The time was short. Ten days had passed. He had his secretary call Dallas O'Mara on the telephone. Could she come down to see him that day at eleven?

No: she worked until four daily at her studio.

Could she come to his office at four-thirty, then?

Yes, but wouldn't it be better if he could come to her studio where he could see something of the various types of drawings—oils, or black-and-white, or crayons. She was working mostly in crayons now.

All this relayed by his secretary at the telephone to Dirk at his desk. He jammed his cigarette end viciously into a tray, blew a final infuriated wraith of smoke, and picked up the telephone connection on his own desk. "One of those d—d temperamental near-artists trying to be grand," he muttered, his hand over the mouthpiece. "Here, Miss Rawlings—I'll talk to her. -Switch her over."

"Hello, Miss—uh—O'Mara. This is Mr. DeJong talking. I much prefer that you come to my office and talk to me." (No more of this nonsense).

Her voice: "Certainly, if you prefer it. I thought the other would save us both some time. I'll be there at four-thirty." Her voice was leisurely, low, rounded. An admirable voice. Restful.

"Very well. Four-thirty," said Dirk, crisply. Jerked the receiver onto the hook. That was the way to handle 'em. These females of forty with straggling hair and a bundle of drawings under their arm.

The female of forty with straggling hair and a bundle of drawings under her arm was announced at four-thirty to the dot. Dirk let her wait five minutes in the outer office, being still a little annoyed. At four-thirty-five there entered his private office a tall slim girl in a smart little brocaded jacket, fur-trimmed skirt, and a black hat at once so daring and so simple that even a man must recognize its French nativity. She carried no portfolio of drawings under her arms.

Through the man's mind flashed a series of unbusinesslike thoughts such as: "Gosh! . . . Eyes! . . . That's way I like to see girl dress. . . . Tired looking. . . . No, guess it's her eyes—sort of fatigued. . . . Pretty. . . . No, she isn't . . . yes, she. . . ." Aloud he said, "This is very kind of you, Miss O'Mara." Then he thought that sounded pompous and said, curtly, "Sit down."

Miss O'Mara sat down. Miss O'Mara looked at him with her tired deep blue eyes. Miss O'Mara said nothing. She regarded him pleasantly, quietly, composedly. He waited for her to say that usually she did not come to business offices; that she had only twenty minutes to give him; that the day was warm, or cold; his office handsome; the view over the river magnificent. Miss O'Mara said nothing, pleasantly. So Dirk began to talk, rather hurriedly.

Now, this was a new experience for Dirk DeJong. Usually women spoke to him first and fluently. Quiet women waxed voluble under his silence; voluble women chattered. Paula always spoke a hundred words to his one. But here was a woman more silent than he; not sullenly silent, nor heavily silent, but quietly, composedly, restfully silent.

"I'll tell you the sort of thing we want, Miss O'Mara." He told her. When he had finished she probably would burst out with three or four plans. The others had done that.

When he had finished she said, "I'll think about it for a couple of days while I'm working on something else. I always do. I'm doing a soap picture now. I can begin work on yours Wednesday."

"But I'd like to see it—that is, I'd like to have an idea of what you're planning to do with it." Did she think he was going to let her go ahead without consulting his judgment!

"Oh, it will be all right. But drop into the studio if you like. It will take me about a week, I suppose. I'm over on Ontario in that old studio building. You'll know it by the way most of the bricks have fallen out of the building and are scattered over the sidewalk." She smiled a slow wide smile. Her teeth were good but her mouth was too big, he thought. Nice big warm kind of smile, though. He found himself smiling, too, sociably. Then he became businesslike again. Very businesslike.

"How much do you—what is your—what would you expect to get for a drawing such as that?".

"Fifteen hundred dollars," said Miss O'Mara.

"Nonsense." He looked at her then. Perhaps that had been humor. But she was not smiling. "You mean fifteen hundred for a single drawing?"

"For that sort of thing, yes."

"I'm afraid we can't pay that, Miss O'Mara."

Miss O'Mara stood up. "That is my price." She was not at all embarrassed. He realized that he had never seen such effortless composure. It was he who was fumbling with the objects on his flat-topped desk—a pen, a sheet of paper, a blotter. "Good-by, Mr.—DeJong." She held out a friendly hand. He took it. Her hair was gold—dull gold, not bright—and coiled in a single great knot at the back of her head, low. He took her hand. The tired eyes looked up at him.

"Well, if that's your price, Miss O'Mara. I wasn't prepared to pay any such—but of course I suppose you top-notchers do get crazy prices for your work."

"Not any crazier than the prices you top-notchers get."

"Still, fifteen hundred dollars is quite a lot of money."

"I think so, too. But then, I'll always think anything over nine dollars is quite a lot of money. You see, I used to get twenty-five cents apiece for sketching hats for Gage's."

She was undeniably attractive. "And now you've arrived. You're successful."

"Arrived! Heavens, no! I've started."

"Who gets more money than you do for a drawing?"

"Nobody, I suppose."

"Well, then?"

"Well, then, in another minute I'll be telling you the story of my life."

She smiled again in her slow wide smile, turned to leave. Dirk decided that while most women's mouths were merely features this girl's was a decoration.

She was gone. Miss Ethelinda Quinn et al., in the outer office, appraised the costume of Miss Dallas O'Mara from her made-to-order footgear to her made-in-France millinery and achieved a lightning mental reconstruction of their own costumes. Dirk DeJong in the inner office realized that he had ordered a fifteen-hundred-dollar drawing, sight unseen, and that Paula was going to ask questions about it.

"Make a note, Miss Rawlings, to call Miss O'Mara's studio on Thursday."

In the next few days he learned that a surprising lot of people knew a surprisingly good deal about this Dallas O'Mara. She hailed from Texas, hence the name. She was twenty-eight — twenty-five — thirty-two — thirty-six. She was beautiful. She was ugly. She was an orphan. She had worked her way through art school. She had no sense of the value of money. Two years ago she had achieved sudden success with her drawings. Her ambition was to work in oils. She toiled like a galley-slave; played like a child; had twenty beaux and no lover; her friends, men and women, were legion and wandered in and out of her studio as though it were a public thoroughfare. She supported an assortment of unlucky brothers and spineless sisters in Texas and points West.

Dirk had made the appointment with her for Thursday at three. Paula said she'd go with him, and went. She dressed for Dallas O'Mara and the result was undeniably enchanting. Dallas sometimes did a crayon portrait, or even attempted one in oils. It was considered something of an achievement to be asked to pose for her. Paula's hat had been chosen in deference to hat, hair and profile, and her pearls with an eye to all four. The whole defied competition on the part of Miss Dallas O'Mara.

Miss Dallas O'Mara, in her studio, was perched on a high stool before an easel with a large tray of assorted crayons at her side. She looked a sight and didn't care at all. She greeted Dirk and Paula with a cheerful friendliness and went right on working. A model, very smartly gowned, was sitting for her.

"Hello!" said Dallas O'Mara. "This is it. Do you think you're going to like it?"

"Oh," said Dirk. "Is that it?" It was merely the beginning of a drawing of the smartly gowned model. "Oh, that's it, is it?" Fifteen hundred dollars!

"I hope you didn't think it was going to be a picture of a woman buying bonds." She went on working. She had on a faded all-enveloping smock, over which French ink, rubber cement, pencil marks, crayon dust and wash were so impartially distributed that the whole blended and mixed in a rich mellow haze like the Chicago atmosphere itself. The collar of a white silk blouse, not especially clean, showed above this. On her feet were soft kid bedroom slippers, scuffed, with pompons on them. Her dull gold hair was carelessly rolled into that great loose knot at the back. Across one cheek was a swipe of black.

"Well," thought Dirk, "she looks a sight."

Dallas O'Mara waved a friendly hand toward some chairs on which were piled hats, odd garments, bristol board and (on the broad arm of one) a piece of yellow cake. "Sit down." She called to the girl who had opened the door to them: "Gilda, will you dump some of those things. This is Mrs. Storm, Mr. DeJong—Gilda Hannan." Her secretary, Dirk later learned.

"Hello!" Said Dallas O'Mara. "This Is It. Do You Think You're Going to Like It?"

The place was disorderly, comfortable, shabby. A battered grand piano stood in one corner. A great sky light formed half the ceiling and sloped down at the north end of the room. A man and a girl sat talking earnestly on the couch in another corner. A swarthy foreign-looking chap, vaguely familiar to Dirk, was playing softly at the piano. The telephone rang. Miss Hannan took the message, transmitted it to Dallas O'Mara, received the answer, repeated it.

Perched atop the stool, one slippered foot screwed in a rung, Dallas worked concentratedly, calmly, earnestly. There was something splendid, something impressive, something magnificent about her absorption, her indifference to appearance, her unawareness of outsiders, her concentration on the work before her. Her nose was shiny. Dirk hadn't seen a girl with a shiny nose in years.

"How can you work with all this crowd around?"

"Oh," said Dallas in that deep, restful, leisurely voice of hers, "there are always between twenty and thirty"—she slapped a quick scarlet line on the board, rubbed it out at once—"thousand people in and out of here every hour, just about. I like it."

"Gosh!" he thought, "she's—I don't know—she's—"

"Shall we go?" said Paula.

He had forgotten all about her. "Yes. Yes, I'm ready if you are."

Outside, "Do you think you're going to like the picture?" Paula asked. They stepped into her car.

"Sure."

"Attractive, isn't she?"

"Think so?"

So he was going to be on his guard, was he! Paula threw in the clutch viciously, jerked the lever into second speed. "Her neck was dirty."

"Crayon dust," said Dirk.

"Not necessarily," replied Paula.

Dirk turned sideways to look at her It was as though he saw her for the first time. She looked brittle, hard, artificial—small, somehow. Not in physique but in personality.

The picture was finished and delivered within ten days. In that time Dirk went twice to the studio in Ontario street. Dallas did not seem to mind. Neither did she appear particularly interested. She was working hard both times. Once she looked as he had seen her on his first visit. The second time she had on a fresh crisp smock of faded yellow that was glorious with her hair; and high-heeled beige kid slippers, very smart. She was like a little girl who has just been freshly scrubbed and dressed in a clean pinafore, Dirk thought.

He thought a good deal about Dallas O'Mara. He found himself talking about her in what he assumed to be a careless, offhand manner. He liked to talk about her. He told his mother of her. He could let himself go with Selina, and he must have taken advantage of this for she looked at him intently and said: "I'd like to meet her. I've never met a girl like that."

"I'll ask her if she'll let me bring you up to the studio some time when you're in town."

He did not know that Dallas played until he came upon her late one afternoon sitting at the piano in the twilight with Bert Colson, the black-face comedian. Colson sang those terrible songs about April showers bringing violets, and about mah Ma-ha-ha-ha-ha-ha-ha-my but they didn't seem terrible when he sang them. There was about this lean, hollow-chested, somber-eyed comedian a poignant pathos, a gorgeous sense of rhythm, a something unnameable that bound you to him, made you love him. In the theater he came out to the edge of the runway and took the audience in his arms. He talked like a boothlack and sang like an angel. Dallas at the piano, he leaning over it, were doing "blues." The two were pure, ecstatic. I got the blues—I said the blues—I got the this or that—the somethingor-other—blue—hoo-hoos. They scarcely noticed Dirk. Dallas had nodded when he came in, and had gone on playing. Colson sang the cheaply sentimental ballad as though it were the folksong of a tragic race. His arms were extended, his face rapt. As Dallas played the tears stood in her eyes. When they had finished, "Isn't it a terrible song?" she said. "I'm crazy about it. Bert's going to try it out tonight."

"Who—uh—wrote it?" asked Dirk politely.

Dallas began to play again. "H'm? Oh, I did." They were off once more.

It was practically impossible to get a minute with her alone. That irritated him. People were always drifting in and out of the studio—queer, important, startling people; little, dejected, shabby people. An impecunious girl art student, red-haired and wistful, that Dallas was taking in until the girl got some money from home; a pearl-hung grand-opera singer who was condescending to the Chicago opera for a fortnight. They paid no attention to Dirk. Yet there was nothing rude about their indifference. They simply were more interested in what they were doing. He left telling himself that he wouldn't go there again. Hanging around a studio. But next day he was back.

"Look here, Miss O'Mara," he had got her alone for a second. "Look here, will you come out to dinner with me some time? And the theater?"

"Love to."

"When?" He was actually trembling.

"Tonight." He had an important engagement. He cast it out of his life.

"Tonight! That's grand. Where do you want to dine? The Casino?" The smartest club in Chicago; a little pink stucco Italian box of a place on the Lake Shore drive. He was rather proud of being in a position to take her there as his guest.

"Oh, no, I hate those arty little places. I like dining in a hotel full of all sorts of people. Dining in a club means you're surrounded by people who're pretty much alike. Their membership in the club means they're there because they are all interested in golf, or because they're university graduates, or belong to the same political party, or write, or paint, or have incomes of over fifty thousand a year, or something. I like 'em mixed up, higgledy-piggledy. A dining-room full of gamblers and insurance agents, and actors, merchants, thieves, bootleggers, lawyers, kept ladies, wives, flaps, traveling men, millionaires—everything. That's what I call dining out. Unless one is dining at a friend's house, of course." A rarely long speech for her.

Marvels of Jelly-Fish

The jelly-fish has a truly wonderful way of reproducing its species. In most cases the beginning is an egg, which, lying on the bottom, produces a beautiful tree-like growth. The "tree" fastens itself to the bottom and brings forth buds which, when ripe, drop off and develop into jelly-fish. The latter in turn lay eggs and the process is repeated. Most of the very large species have a different way of reproducing themselves. The egg is set free in the water and develops into a pear-shaped larva, which for a while swims about rapidly, being provided with hair-like appendages that serve the purpose of ears. Then the larva settles down, anchors itself to the bottom, increases in size rapidly, and finally splits up into thin, flat discs which swim off and grow up into large jelly-fishes.

CAREFUL ATTENTION NEEDED IN CANNING

Use Only Fresh Product in Canning.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Safe canning requires careful attention to every step in the process. Only clean, fresh, sound fruits and vegetables should be used for canning. "Two hours from garden to can" is a good slogan. All material showing any signs of spoilage should be discarded for canning purposes.

Circular Explains.

General directions for canning fruits and vegetables and time-tables for processing are given in Miscellaneous Circular 24, issued by the United States Department of Agriculture. Before beginning any canning it would be well to send for a copy of this circular, as it explains very carefully how each product should be handled through the canning operation. The "hot-pack" method is recommended, and the use of the pressure canner with all vegetables except tomatoes is strongly advised. The "hot-pack" method consists of precooking the product and then packing as near boiling hot as possible into clean hot containers.

The important steps in canning may be briefly summarized:

Clean and prepare the fruit or vegetable.

Precook, parboil, or scald products that require it. If the vegetable or the fruit is to be peeled, dip it in cold water after scalding or parboiling. If no preliminary cooking is needed, put it at once into jars.

Pack products in jars or cans that will seal airtight.

To jars or cans of vegetables, add salt and hot water if there is not sufficient liquid to fill the containers. To fruits, add sirup or fruit juice.

Adjust rubbers and tops of glass jars or seal tin cans and place them in the canner as soon as possible.

Process at the given temperature for the required time.

Remove jars or cans from canner. Seal the jars airtight at once and place them out of drafts. Cool the products in tin by plunging them in cold water.

Keep all canned products under observation at room temperature for at least a week.

CANNED TOMATOES ARE VERY USEFUL

Do Not Spoil Easily if Given Proper Care.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Tomatoes can probably be prepared in a greater number of ways than any other common vegetable. They form the basis of many soups and are used in sauces for fish or oysters. As a vegetable they may be used in many ways. Tomatoes are one of the standbys in salad making and the combinations made with onions, pepper and spices are almost endless. Canned, they do not spoil easily when reasonable care is exercised in the work.

One of the best methods of canning tomatoes is: Select only sound and ripe tomatoes. Dip them in boiling water for about 1½ minutes or until the skins loosen. Remove skins and, with a slender-pointed knife, cut out the core without cutting into the seed cells. Have jars heated jars which have been boiled 15 minutes. Pack the whole tomatoes into the jars as rapidly as they are peeled. Add one level teaspoonful of sugar and one half teaspoonful of salt to each quart. Put on the cleansed rubber which has been dipped in hot soda water and top which has been boiled 15 minutes. Half tighten the top. If hot-water bath canner, either commercial or homemade, is used, place jar on false bottom with sufficient water to process the jars. Boil 30 minutes after the water starts boiling vigorously. Remove jars, tighten tops, invert to test for leaks and store in a cool, dark, dry place.

Another procedure which is more economical of space is to fill quart jars with peeled whole tomatoes and then pour in a thick tomato sauce. Each jar will have whole tomatoes for salads or baking and a tomato puree for soups or sauces. This sauce is made by cooking the small or broken tomatoes until tender. The seeds are then removed and the pulp concentrated by boiling to about the consistency of catsup. Process quart jars for 30 minutes.

If desired, all of the tomatoes may be cooked to a pulp and a more economical utilization of space within the jar will be obtained.

SIMPLE PLAN FOR CANNING PEACHES

Lye Method of Peeling May Be Found Useful.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In canning peaches sort the fruit and select firm, sound, uniform peaches The soft or broken ones may be used for jam. Remove the peel with a knife, with boiling water or with a boiling lye solution. If boiling water is used, immerse peaches about one minute or until the skins slip easily. Remove and plunge for an instant into cold water. Slip off the skins, cut in halves and pack at once into jars which have previously been boiled 15 minutes.

Some peaches have skins which will not slip off after treating with clear boiling water. For them or for any peaches, the lye method of peeling may be used when they are firm, ripened and not too ripe. Have ready boiling lye solution (4 tablespoons of commercial concentrated lye to 4 quarts of water). Drop the peaches into this for about 20 to 30 seconds. Lift out and drop into clear boiling water for 30 seconds. Remove and place for an instant in cold water. The skins will then come off easily.

Before preparing the fruit, make a sirup of 7 cups of sugar to 4 quarts of water or, if a richer sirup is desired, use 11 cups of sugar to 4 quarts of water. Allow one cup of water for each quart jar. Put one cracked peach pit for every quart of sirup into it. Boil sirup for five minutes.

The peach halves should be placed in the jar in overlapping layers, the concave surface of each half being downward. Sometimes very large peaches are canned whole in a heavy sirup. These are called melba peaches When the jar is full of peaches, fill with hot sirup and, with a wooden paddle or knife, carefully remove air bubbles.

Partially seal the jars (with mason tops, screw half way on; with glass tops, put top wire bail in position). If a hot-water bath canner, either commercial or hot-pack, is used, place the jars on a false bottom with sufficient water in the boiler to process them. The water should cover the tops of the jars.

Sweet Cherries Favored for Making Fruit Salad

Sweet cherries are excellent in salad, either mixed with other fruits or as one of the prominent ingredients. Large, firm cherries should be selected and pitted. The cavity may be stuffed with cream or cottage cheese and served on lettuce leaves with any preferred dressing. Cherries and pineapple combine well, and the stuffed cherries may be added to pineapple salad or the two fruits used in a mixed fruit salad, suggests the United States Department of Agriculture.

Another way of using cherries with cheese and pineapple is to pit the cherries, cut them in small pieces and mix them with an equal amount of cream cheese, adding a little salt. The mixture is served piled lightly on lettuce leaves, with a dressing, or made into balls and served on a slice of pineapple, either with or without lettuce and dressing.

Lye Is Very Useful to Clean Washing Machine

One of the bugbears of the housewife's washday is cleaning the washing machine. The suds unites with the free perspiration oils contained in the pores of the fabric to form a compound insoluble in water. This deposit, or scum, collects on the cylinder and tub and is usually removed with kerosene or cleansers. This requires the removal and replacement of cylinder, which is a strenuous operation.

Cleaning the washing machine thoroughly after doing the washing can be easily accomplished without unnecessary work. Drain the dirty water and dissolve a heaping tablespoonful of lye in sufficient clean water to cover bottom of cylinder two inches. Start the motor and let it run for two or three minutes. Cleaning the washing machine by this method will save you time and effort with extremely satisfactory results.

Knew All About Pajamas

Woman's right to dress like a man is not recognized in the Balkans. A Bulgarian girl, well known for her enthusiastic work on behalf of the Y. W. C. A., recently returned from a trip abroad carrying in her suitcase several suits of new pajamas. The customs officials at the Bulgarian frontier said that each suit was liable to a tax of $2. In vain the girl protested that the pajamas were wearing apparel and would be worn by her. The customs officials remained obdurate, saying: "Those are men's clothes and are not for women to wear!"

The Alabama, Tennessee and Northern would connect with the Frisco at Glenn Ellen, or Bazemore, in Fayette County, and with the Illinois Central at Haleyville.

The petition notes the fact that the Northern of Alabama, a short line of the Southern running through rich coal and iron fields and into the Muscle Shoals district, would be at the northern terminus of the reconstructed line.

Request for extension of the line, which now operates from Reform to Calvert, a distance of 200 miles comes as a climax to lengthy agitation for connection with the Frisco and Illinois Central, both of which are termed giant railroads operating into territory which must be developed if the port of Mobile is to succeed.

The Alabama, Tennessee and Northern asks permission to build the extension and also to retain "the excess earning of such newly constructed line of railroad. Retention of the excess earnings, it is understood, is permitted in certain cases for the benefit of new lines or those not receiving sufficient revenue to maintain themselves after paying huge cost of extension or new building.

The Pacifist Leader

By JEANNE KIRKLAND

(©, 1926, Western Newspaper Union.)

THE tall stranger was walking through the cemetery of the midwestern city; it was part of seeing the place before removing from his old home. It was early June, and the Memorial day flowers, still fresh, added business of color. Suddenly, rounding a hedge, he paused one incredulous moment and caught himself in time not to say: "I didn't know Lincoln was buried here."

The stranger was swept out of his bitterness, just as, in the past, he had been thrilled by the flag. It had been the long procession, the memory of what the flag meant to his fathers, the flag and the war music—particularly the music—that had swept him into the midst of war. Against his will, too; theoretically, he did not believe in war. He was a pacifist. What of it? Something intent in his being just got him—he enlisted.

Scornfully, he voiced his thought: "Dead!" he said, with a half gesture toward the unknown graves.

A slight movement drew his attention to an old man, seated quietly on a bench. The old soldier would well know the meaning of the half-expressed mood; he doubtless had seen other disillusioned "patriots."

"Heroes!" the stranger said aloud, challenging the old man, "but—they are dead."

The old soldier nodded in sad agreement and recrossed his thin legs.

"So you were in the Civil war?" the young man asked. "Did you come out of your war bitter? Knowing the real meaning of music and the flag?"

"I was bitter," the old man said.

"You mean you're not bitter now?" cried the stranger.

"No—it's because of my boy. He came while I was away at war. My wife was young and strong. I left her when they called for volunteers—and when I came back, I found him, my son. My wife was gone."

"Well," boomed the stranger—sweeping, despite himself into the commonplace view—"it was bully you had the boy. My boy is all that keeps me going."

"Yes," admitted the veteran, "I had him. But—what for?" he broke off resentfully.

The stranger would visualize the coming of the World war, the sacrifice demanded a second time.

"So your son was killed?"

"No!"—old eyes looked into his. "He came back. He has no voice—no strength. At times he goes from door to door—makes a spectacle of himself that people may not forget—with a little magazine for sale. It's just what I—I went on, I brought him up, for that."

"Exactly!" cried the stranger, "and I, glorying in my son, may be preparing him—"

"I wonder," said the old man quietly. He looked wistfully across the cemetery, lovingly at the green grass and shrubbery, at the dashes of color, at the big statue of the great man towering there among the low trees, guarding his dead.

"I wonder," he repeated. "Men are made by stress—look at him—at Lincoln!"

The stranger smiled; he did not say that the making of another American hero was hardly worth a war. "If it made Lincoln," he said, "his talent was not tried out in the trenches."

"We can't choose," the old voice reminded him; then, with seeming irrelevancy, "It's his voice—my son's voice—that gets people. It's that he can't talk—he must whisper, now. He can't make all understand, then he laughs with them good-naturedly; it's as if all the world were deaf. You should hear him trying to make them think he's cheerful . . . And his son, won't be a better American because of that?"

The young man turned from him passionately, not to be swayed by such sweet optimism. That was age's surrender, but the young man had a life to live—a life of revolt.

Suddenly he was ashamed, when the old man rose quietly and walked slowly away. He himself was a fool! Clinging to his conflict, to his twisted soul, taking it through life unsettled; pretending to be a thinker, a radical, denying the gift of his people . . . those who had gone before . . . of his inheritance . . . He who had led the pacifist movement! . . . then the first to volunteer—inconsistency wasn't the name! . . . Impulsively he had done what seemed right . . . How could he help being made as he was, becoming within himself the characteristics of the line of dead patriots behind him?

He had thought with the old man. He had seen the triumph of the race, had thrilled to it. Suddenly, he was swept with the belief that this was the better side of him—this thing he had fought. Slowly he crossed the turf to the base of the Lincoln statue, his hat in his hand, to give simple thanks for his son, as he knelt in the shadow of the great man. And there in the silence of the late spring day the long conflict passed, and all the while from each unknown soldier's grave the miniature flags waved; and above, the big Lincoln guarded the stranger along with the unknown dead . . . Yes, if they could see him now they might marvel, as they had when he, the pacifist leader, volunteered, the first of the university men . . . it would not matter. Through his mind floated pictures of bands and processions and flags . . . the race triumphant—he—and his son—and his son's sons.

CITIES IMPORT WATER IN CARS OVER RAILROAD

Gadsden, Sept. 4.—Twenty one carloads of water in steel tanks are daily being shipped to LaGrange, Ga., from West Point, Ga., and 26 cars are daily going to Opelika from the same point.

At West Point the water supply has always been secured from a big spring, later the intake was moved to the Chatthoochie river, and that stream probably will be dry in a short while.

At LaGrange the cotton mills have turned their artesian wells over to the city. At Gainesville, Ala., the Tombigbee river is said to have receeded until it is hardly more than a sand bed. The ferry boat there has been pulled up on two sand bars, and is serving as a bridge across the little polls of water.

There is no water to speak of at Roanoke and Wedowee. At these places automobiles find it difficult to secure water for their radiators.

In Cleburne county several hundred moonshine stills have been forced to cease operations because of the lack of water.

World Forestry Congress in Rome

A world's Forestry Congress is being arranged at present for Rome, Italy, during May, 1926, according to a statement issued by the Alabama Commission of Forestry. Alabama is not the only region lately awakened to the necessity of restoring and perpetuating her forest resources. Many other states have taken steps toward this end. Excellent progress has been made in some of these. In others the advance has been comparatively slight, with forestry laws in operation only nominally or not at all. In general the situation in the United States is encouragng.

In Canada, Norway, Sweden, Germany, France, India, New Zealand and a few other countries, forestry is being practiced on a substantial scale. In certain others there would be more forests were not the population so dense. Nearly every acre of land that can yield any growth at all is being devoted to other uses. In still other countries, particularly those of the Far East and the Near East, unstable governments and a general failure of the people to cooperate among themselves have caused an almost complete [illegible] disastrous results, particularly in China where annual floods destroy thousands of lives.

The forestry congress to be held at Rome will consider all questions of international importance. Statistics, lumber trade, industrial uses of wood and other forest products and forest extension will be considered of first importance. Other economic, technical an administrative questions relating to forestry will be discussed. It is believed that many obscure points will be cleared at this congress and that the world in general will profit from its deliberations.

It matters not how good fruit trees may be bought, the proper treatment must be given between the time they are received from nursery and set in the field, if they live, let alone develop into a good tree. A fruit tree is a delicate, living, growing thing, and if it is abused, the owner must pay the price of such abuse. Therefore, the most careful treatment must be given between the time the bundle of trees is received from nursery and set in the orchard.

It has been said that the drying out of the roots of young fruit trees, between the time they are recieved from the nursey and set in the orchard, kills more fruit trees than all other causes combined. Whether this is too big a statement or not, we are definitely sure that this one of the chief causes of young trees dying the first year after they are set in the orchard.

Just as long as the roots of the young fruit trees are kept moist, are kept out of the sun and not allowed to dry out, the chances of living are far greater than those that become dry. Therefore, take every precaution necessary to see that that the roots are kept moist at all times. If one is not ready to set out the trees immediately after recieving them from the nursery they shonuld be unpacked and heeled in. Heeling in is nothing more nor less than digging a long, deep trench and putting the roots of the trees in this trench with the trees leaning at about a 45 degree angle and dirt thrown in on the roots. Do not put the trees in this trench in wads. They may be put close to-gether but not with one tree on top of the other. Throw the soil on the roots and ter on the roots just before raking in pack. If the soil is dry, pour some wa the soil, and then after the trench is filled, mulch with a measure of other materfal to keep the soil from drying out.

When the trees are taken to the orchard to set whether they are taken up from this trench or directly from the package in which they came, take especial pains to keep the root moist. A good method is to wrap the roots in wet sacks or other material of the kind. It does not matter what material is used for keeping the roots moist but the point is to keep them moist. Do not let the sunshine touch them. Do not let the trees dropped in the hole beside the hole away ahead of the setters. A good plan is to drive down between the rows with the new tree in a wagon bed with roots all wrapped up as outlined above. Then when ready to set a tree, take one at a time and immediately plant it and drive on to the next place and keep on this way. This may sound like an undue amount of precaution but it certainly is not. Handling in this way often means the differece between practically all of the trees living and a large percentage of them dying.

Port of Mobile, highway bond issue, Brandon's four mills school tax, revision of automobile tax laws, placing jitney buses under supervision of public service commission and classifying them as common carriers.

FINE STALK OF COTTON GROWN WITH NO WORK

Mr. R. J. Jones, one of Clanton's merchants, brought to the News office last week a stalk of cotton with 31 open bolls and 12 grown bolls. Mr. Jones pulled this out of a bunch of weeds at the back of his home at West End.

Most of the bolls had five locks and extra long lint. The stalk is on display in the window of the Chilton County News.

Some one said Mr. Jones and the News were trying to make the farmers believe they can raise cotton with out work, but we only say we wish such was a fact. Tom Littlejohn could sell the News or do anything he saw fit if cotton could be grown that way.

Cotton Condition 56.2 of Normal

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—The government cotton report given out today estimating the condition of the crop at 56.2 per cent of normal, and the 1925 yield at 13,740,000 bales, had a tendency to bring the price of cotton some higher than for the past two weeks. Cotton went up $5 on the hale Tuesday as a result of the report.

Longer School Term With 1-Mill

In other letters to your paper I have called attention to the fact that if he 1-mill tax carries in the county it will mean about $13,000 to our school funds, which, according to last year's monthly payroll for teachers would add about three weeks to our school term. Much is being said about where this money will be spent. I have this to say, and the school board is with me in it: WE WILL SPEND EVERY DOLLAR OF THIS TO LENGTHEN SCHOOL TERM, AND AS EVIDENCE OF THIS I ASK THAT YOU FILE THIS PAPER. AND IF YOU SHOULD SEE FIT AND NEED TO, CALL OUR HAND ON IT. Furthermore, no teachers' salary will be raised because of this. The salary schedule was adopted three months ago and will not be changed.

A few days ago some of my friends were in the office and while we were looking into this matter it was found that about three years ago at the time this tax expired was when our school term dropped to four and one-half months. This was of course partly accounted for by the great "slump" in state funds, but the 1-mill tax would have held it up to at least a little over five months.

Again let me urge that every citizen of Chilton county who loves the boys and girls give this matter their most serious consideration and vote as they conscientiously feel is for the best interest of the children.

Yours for better schools,
B. LAWRENCE.
